Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Really the gist of this case is this: That the money taken by the paymaster's clerk included money belonging to the United States Government and to these enlisted men. When the absconding clerk was caught he had $18,000 or $20,000 of that money left. The United States Government took every cent of it and applied it on account of what was taken from the United States, and did not give the men even a pro rata. Now, a bankruptcy court or an insolvency court would have given the men at least a pro rata of the money that was recovered.

Mr. MADDEN. That is true.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. This money was deposited at the solicitation of the Navy Department.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts this: What was the total amount stolen?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. My recollection is that it was $28,000 or $30,000.

Mr. MADDEN. And the man who had the money in his possession had about $20,000 when he was arrested?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Something like that.

Mr. MADDEN. And the Government took it all?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Took it all.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Was there an invitation issued to the men to deposit their money in that way?

Mr. PADGETT. There was an express invitation to the men to deposit this money so that they would have something remaining when they left the service. There is an official regulation providing for their depositing it, and they are encouraged to make their deposits in order to promote thrift and economy amongst the men.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not inclined to oppose the provision in the bill, but I thought it was only fair to ascertain why the Government of the United States should be held accountable for losses made by men who deposited money by their own voluntary act.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Because the Government had invited these deposits and had urged the men to make them and held out to the men the inducement that the money would be paid back to them when they wanted it.

Mr. MADDEN. That would not induce me—the mere fact that the Government invited me to do something which I had the right to refuse to do. That would not make me favor this provision, but the fact that the Government lost money at the same time that the men lost theirs and the fact that the Government has secured part of its money back and the men have not secured theirs is a good reason why we should do something now to reimburse the men for the loss they have incurred, and therefore I have no objection to this provision.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question concerning this matter. What provision is made with respect to a disbursing officer of this kind with reference to his giving bond for the safety of the funds intrusted to his keeping?

Mr. PADGETT. They give a bond; the principal pay officer does.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, what was done in this case with reference to what happened by the action of Lee?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that the paymaster himself is pursuing the bond to make good to the Government the deficiency that it lost.

Mr. CULLOP. Does this provision in the bond cover liability for such losses?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not. It does not cover the men. I will state to the gentleman, if he will permit me, what the situation is. There are two provisions. There is a provision of law that authorizes the men to deposit their money for a fixed period, and the Government pays them interest at 4 per cent upon the money, and that money is repayable to them upon their discharge. That money is protected by the bond, as the Government has taken the money and it becomes the money of the Government, and it goes into the Government Treasury. The other provision is a Navy regulation providing that the men may deposit their money with the officer, but they do it at their own risk. The bond of the pay clerk does not protect them and does not cover the money that they deposit. But these men, taken up from all over the country, here and there, under military rule, with their life upon the ship, naturally and properly,

I think, rely upon the officers and upon the integrity of the officers.

Mr. CULLOP. Everybody does that with respect to every public official.

Mr. PADGETT. They deposited their money with them, and this money was stolen.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask the chairman of the great Committee on Naval Affairs whether it would not be the part of prudence to insert some provision to the effect that where, either through the Navy Department or an act of Congress, the Government invites men to deposit their money it should take some kind of bond for the safety of it?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that the Navy Department has amended its regulations, and has prohibited these pay clerks from receiving money and requiring the money to be paid to the paymaster, and they have stopped payment to the clerks, as was done at the time and before this theft was committed.

Mr. CULLOP. That requirement was made after the injury was inflicted?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HOBSON. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not say anything to discourage the men from making the deposits on account of the risk involved.

Mr. CULLOP. I think that in a great department like this prudence requires some provision for the security of the funds deposited by the men in the hands of their officers, and it is laches on the part of the Navy administration not to have made such provision.

Mr. HOBSON. I want to say to the gentleman that these precautions are taken and this money is safeguarded in the same way that other moneys of the Government are safeguarded.

Mr. CULLOP. Then, if they had pursued that course, they could recover the money back, but I understand in this case it was not done. That is my understanding, from the statement of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HOBSON. I do not know about the details of the bond.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I happen to know something about this particular transaction from personal knowledge, from the fact that this young man, Lee, visited my home town of Atlanta and stayed there for two weeks, spending his money openly as a modern Crœsus.

This provision in the bill is a perfectly just one, in my judgment, because, under the naval regulations, these men are invited to make their deposits and receive a certain amount of interest from the Government for their deposits.

Now, there is not one man in a thousand who would investigate or stop to think and question the safety of his money when he deposits it with an officer of the Government. I hope this discussion here to-day will throw around the Government some protection from such thefts as this in the future. As I understand the rule, which, I think, is a very proper one, it is that the paymaster has a right to select his own pay clerk. I suppose that privilege is given him for the reason that he ought to be allowed to designate the person who shall handle his funds; but certainly there should be some provision that in the future these pay clerks, who handle hundreds of thousands of dollars, and receive the savings of these enlisted men, shall be placed under bond.

I think the amount of money appropriated in this bill is proper, and I hope there will be no objection to its passage.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOWARD. With pleasure.

Mr. CULLOP. I would do everything in my power to encourage these men to save their money, and I am not complaining of that. I am complaining of the negligence of the department in not requiring the person who receives the money to give bond for its safe-keeping and return. I think that is gross negligence. If these men know their money is safe when so deposited, it will be an incentive to them to accumulate and to save their earnings; but if it is not safe there is no inducement to them to do so.

Mr. HOWARD. I think the criticism of the gentleman from Indiana is a just one. That is the reason why I have made the few remarks that I have made with reference to this particular matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Navy: For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $46,000: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow, in the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers involved, payments made under the appropriation "Contingent, Navy," to civilian employees appointed by the Navy Department for duty in and serving at naval stations maintained in the islands possessions during the fiscal year 1913.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. There is no change in this. It is the same that it has been for years.

Mr. MADDEN. The part on which I reserve the point of order is the language from line 3—

Payments made under the appropriation "Contingent, Navy," to civilian employees appointed by the Navy Department * * * in the island possessions—

And so forth. Is not that new?

Mr. PADGETT. No; that was in the bill last year.

Mr. MADDEN. Still, I think it is not permanent law, but only in an appropriation bill.

Mr. PADGETT. We had it in the bill last year, and the language is not changed, and no additional appropriation is included on account of it.

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

Transportation: For travel allowance of enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment; transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentice seamen discharged on medical survey, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of sick or insane enlisted men and apprentice seamen to hospitals, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; apprehension and delivery of deserters and stragglers, and for railway guides and other expenses incident to transportation, $750,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee how he is able to make such a material reduction while carrying exactly the same items that were carried in the bill a year ago. There is a 25 per cent reduction.

Mr. PADGETT. It is on account of the discharges and reenlistments. They do not have to enlist so many men now as they did a year ago, on account of there not being so many expirations of enlistments.

Mr. TILSON. I see the first item is for travel allowance. Have you been able to reduce that?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HOBSON. They have been getting lower rates of transportation.

Mr. PADGETT. They have been getting some lower rates of transportation and getting better terms, and the enlistments and discharges have been less. The result is that we have been able to reduce the total under this item from $999,400 to $750,000 for the next fiscal year.

Mr. TILSON. We had a like experience in the Military Affairs Committee, and were able to make reductions in the travel allowances. I wondered if the Naval Affairs Committee had been able to do the same thing.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we have been able to do the same thing.

Mr. TILSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recruiting: Expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties, $125,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in recruiting seamen, ordinary seamen, or apprentice seamen unless, in case of minors, a certificate of birth or a verified written statement by the parents, or either of them, or in case of their death a verified written statement by the legal guardian, be first furnished to the recruiting officer, showing applicant to be of age required by naval regulations, which shall be presented with the application for enlistment; except in cases where such certificate is unobtainable, enlistment may be made when the recruiting officer is convinced that oath of applicant as to age is credible; but when it is afterwards found, upon evidence satisfactory to the Navy Department, that recruit has sworn falsely as to age, and is under 18 years of age at the time of enlistment, he shall, upon request of either parent, be released from service in the Navy, upon payment of full cost of first outfit, unless, in any given case, the Secretary, in his discretion, shall relieve said recruit of such payment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 24, add the following proviso: "Provided, That authority is hereby granted to employ the services of an advertising agent in advertising for recruits under such terms and conditions as are most advantageous to the Government."

Mr. PADGETT. I will state that that proviso is added because it is largely through the instrumentality of this agency in the recruiting service that the department has been able to make the reductions referred to a moment ago. The comptroller has ruled that there not being any authority he has held up for the future that provision, and we are inserting it in order that we may continue this economy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gunnery exercises: Prizes, trophies, and badges for excellence in gunnery exercises and target practice; for the establishment and maintenance of shooting galleries, target houses, targets, and ranges; for hiring established ranges, and for transportation of civilian assistants and equipment to and from ranges, $167,000.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 10, line 17, where it says that the request may be made by either parent. I want to add that in case the parents are dead the request may be by the guardian. I thought the language of the first part of the section was carried over into that place. I suggest that that change ought to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to return to page 10, line 21, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Reserving the right to object, I would like to say to the gentleman that the language of this provision was worked out by the committee several years ago, when they had a good deal of trouble over adjusting the matter, but finally we got this language after very great labor and pains, and it has been working very satisfactorily.

Mr. MURRAY. But I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 10 of that same page where it is provided that the statement may be made by a parent or either of the parents, and then there is the additional proviso that in case of their death a verified written statement may be made by the legal guardian. Now, I suggest that, in line 21, on the same page, after the words "upon the request of either parent," the words be added "or, in case of death of the parents, by the legal guardian."

Mr. PADGETT. I see no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line 21, insert after the word "parent" the words "or in case of their death by the legal guardian."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Aviation experiments: For experimental work in the development of aviation for naval purposes, $10,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. My inclination would be to move to strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "twenty-five," so as to make it $25,000. I would first like to ask why it is that the amount appropriated for aviation is so much reduced?

Mr. PADGETT. It is reduced at this place only; other amounts are carried in other portions of the bill. We are carrying in the bill about $42,000 or $43,000 for aviation. This is only under the Bureau of Navigation. They stated that that was all they needed in their bureau. In the Bureau of Steam Engineering we are appropriating $20,000, and under the Bureau of Construction we are providing for $10,000, and I think under one of the other bureaus there is a still smaller appropriation. We are giving everything in aviation that the department said they could use to advantage.

Mr. TILSON. I am glad to see that no backward step is being taken, and I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance of naval auxiliaries: Pay, transportation, shipping, and subsistence of civilian officers and crews of naval auxiliaries, and all expenses connected with naval auxiliaries employed in emergencies which can not be paid from other appropriations, $768,373.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. On what account?

Mr. CULLOP. Because it is an increase in the amount.

Mr. PADGETT. But there is no fixed sum for appropriation.

Mr. CULLOP. I will reserve the point of order, and ask the gentleman what is the necessity for this increase?

Mr. PADGETT. The condition of the ships, the number of the colliers that have been completed, and other ships in the auxiliary part of the Navy required to be taken care of.

Mr. CULLOP. How much is the increase?

Mr. HOBSON. About 1 per cent.

Mr. PADGETT. It is about $8,000 in the total amount, and it is needed to take care of the larger colliers, the new ones that have gone into the service, that must be provided for.

Mr. CULLOP. Does the gentleman find it is absolutely necessary to make this increase this year?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes.

Mr. CULLOP. We could not in any way avoid this increase this year?

Mr. PADGETT. Not at all, and take care of the new ships that have come into commission.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval training station, Cal.: Maintenance of naval training station, Yerba Buena Island, Cal., namely: Labor and material; buildings and wharves; general care, repairs, and improvements of grounds, buildings, and wharves; wharfage, ferriage, and street car fare; purchase and maintenance of live stock, and attendance on same; wagons, carts, implements, and tools, and repairs to same; fire engines and extinguishers; gymnastic implements; models and other articles needed in instruction of apprentice seamen; printing outfit and materials, and maintenance of same; heating and lighting; stationery, books, and periodicals; fresh water, and washing; packing boxes and materials; and all other contingent expenses; maintenance of dispensary building; lectures and suitable entertainments for apprentice seamen; in all, $70,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the section by inserting the words "boats and" after the word "extinguishers," in line 18, page 12.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the words "boats and" have heretofore been in there, but the department says they no longer need the money for that purpose.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, before any discussion is had upon this I would like to have the amendment reported by the Clerk.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee says that the department suggests that they do not need the money for this purpose, and, therefore, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous: Water rent and lighting, $2,000; cemetery, burial expenses and headstones, $1,000; improvement of grounds, $1,000; repairs to buildings, repairs to and purchase of boilers, furnaces, and furniture, $6,748; music in chapel and entertainments for beneficiaries, $1,000; transportation of indigent and destitute beneficiaries to the Naval Home, and of sick and insane beneficiaries, their attendants, and necessary subsistence for both, to and from other Government hospitals, $300; support of beneficiaries, $42,373; total miscellaneous, $54,421.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. The words "entertainments for beneficiaries," in lines 23 and 24, page 16, are new.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that is true. The gentleman understands that this home is supported out of the prize money, the money that is in trust in the Government, and the interest on the fund the Government pays is devoted to the maintenance of the home. The surplus goes into the Interior Department, the Pension Office, as a part of the general pension fund. These old sailors who are at the home need some entertainment. There was a question as to whether or not, when they would have a little music or something, or pay out a dollar—I believe it is—on a Sunday to some person to act as leader of the choir, or something of that kind, or have a concert some night for the entertainment of the sailors, there would be any authority.

Mr. MADDEN. And there was no authority in law for it?

Mr. PADGETT. The accounting officers might hold this up, and in order that it might be express, we have included the words in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. It is their own money anyway.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I said it was not our money.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I thought it was just as well to have it explained. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for Naval Home, $73,469, which sum shall be paid out of the income from the naval pension fund: Provided, That for the performance of such additional services in and about the Naval Home as may be necessary the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ, on the recommendation of the governor, beneficiaries in said home, whose compensation shall be fixed by the Secretary and paid from the appropriation for the support of the home.

All moneys belonging to a deceased inmate of the Naval Home or derived from the sale of his personal effects, and which are not claimed by his next of kin, shall be deposited in the Treasury by the governor of the home, as agent, and if any sum so deposited has been or shall hereafter be unclaimed for a period of five years from the death of such inmate it shall be covered into the Treasury: Provided, That the governor of the Naval Home is hereby authorized and directed, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, to make diligent inquiry in every instance after the death of an inmate to ascertain the whereabouts of his next of kin: And provided further, That claims may be presented hereunder at any time, and when supported by competent proof in any case more than five years after the death of an inmate shall be certified to Congress for consideration.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 22, after the word "Treasury," insert the words "as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I have that amendment noted, and the committee accepts it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. From line 16 on page 17 to line 7 on page 18 seems to be new language.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And the committee thinks this is the best way to conserve the interests of the people who die in the home?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. There have been little funds, running from a few cents up to a few dollars, I believe forty or fifty dollars, maybe sixty dollars, which is the maximum amount of money, when the old inmates have died. The accounting officers of the home have no authority to turn it into the Treasury and they have to hold it, and as the change of officers takes place it is handed from one officer to another, without any proper management and disposition of the funds.

Mr. MADDEN. And this is intended to give them an opportunity to clean up their accounts when they make the change?

Mr. PADGETT. And to turn it into the Treasury and to let it stand there as a trust fund to be paid to the beneficiaries when found.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, before leaving this point, may I suggest to the chairman of the committee the possibility and the desirability of some amendment which will obviate the necessity in the future of competition between civilian employees and men enlisted in the Navy at the navy yards of the country? To explain just exactly what I mean, I have had a great many complaints during the past year from the district which I represent, wherein the Charleston Navy Yard is located, because of a condition that has existed there when enlisted men of the Navy have been obliged to do the same work that has for all time before been done by civilian employees. In order that that practice may be discontinued, I desire to offer the following amendment:

Provided, That no part of the labor herein appropriated for and to be performed at the navy yards in the United States shall be performed by enlisted men of the United States Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I can not consent to the amendment, but must oppose it. I believe the amendment has not been reported yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 6, after the word "proposal," insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of the labor herein appropriated for and to be performed at navy yards in the United States shall be performed by enlisted men of the United States Navy."

Mr. MURRAY. Before the gentleman expresses any objection, if it goes to the verbiage, I desire to say I have no pride of authorship, and shall be most happy to accept any change in the language of the amendment to carry out the thought in point.

Mr. PADGETT. It is the substance of the matter which I wish to present to the committee. A great many minor repairs aboard ship are done by the enlisted men. If a piece of machinery breaks down or gets out of repair we have on board a machine shop and the enlisted men do the work on board the ship instead of carrying the ship from where it may have become disabled to a navy yard and having the work done in that navy yard, and it would be a great inconvenience and a very great expense to carry the ships into the yards and have them docked or tied up at the dock for the purpose of having these minor repairs done.

Another thing, it is very essential that this work should be done by the men aboard ship in order that they may be trained and experienced and have the knowledge and capacity to keep the ship in repair and in running order. If the ship breaks down at sea it is necessary that the enlisted men on board should have the practice and the experience and the capacity to repair the ship. It is a great economy, and I desire to commend the administration for working out this economy at a small expense aboard ship instead of carrying it into the yards to be done at any time it may be needed.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I have said all I care to say, and I yield the floor.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I was of the opinion the gentleman had yielded the floor, and I did not understand the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, if I thought that my amendment might cause a ship that is disabled or is in trouble or away from a navy yard to be compelled to proceed to that navy yard for the purpose of having repairs made, of course I would not urge it. I subscribe most heartily to everything the chafrman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has said, except I can not commend the policy of the Secretary of the Navy in having competition between the enlisted men and civilian employees at the navy yards. I tried to draft the amendment to provide this, that no part of the labor herein appropriated for and to be performed at navy yards of the United States shall be done by enlisted men. The situation that is complained about, and the complaint that has come to me from a great many people in the district I have the honor to represent, is that these men are entitled to consideration when a ship goes into the navy yard, into the home port, either at the Charlestown yard or at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, which the gentleman from New York represents, or any other place; that the men who are enlisted in the Navy and who are enlisted to be trained for the purposes of war and not for the purpose of being machinists in time of peace, nor for the purpose of being laborers like the men who have their living to earn along that line, are made to do work at the navy yard which has always been done by civilian employees.

I do not believe when a ship gets in trouble at sea or in a foreign port that it should be necessary to bring it back to the United States to have repairs done; but I do believe, and that is the purpose of having my amendment enacted into the law, when those ships go into a port the enlisted men of the Navy ought not to be put in the position where they are the competitors of civilian employees in the work that they have been doing. What is the practical result of it? Men work at these navy yards, as they do in the district I represent, for some weeks, until a fleet might come in or until the ships come in. Then, when these sailors come in off the ships their employment is gone, because the commandant of the yard and the officers of the yard are able to use this enlisted force for the purpose of doing the work of civilian employees.

Now, I am sorry to hear that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs commends that kind of economy. I know that the people of Massachusetts do not commend it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MURRAY. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I believe I have heard something of the protest that the gentleman has in mind. I have read in a letter of the Secretary of the Navy where the Nebraska was being repaired and the work done by enlisted men. I forget the name of the navy yard now.

Mr. MURRAY. That case was at the Charlestown Navy Yard.

Mr. BUCHANAN. At the Charlestown Navy Yard, and that was not at sea. It was not done on the repair vessels spoken of by the chairman.

Mr. MURRAY. I am in favor of breaks at sea being repaired on board ship.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If you will permit me, I will say that I read in the letter from the Secretary that the reason it was done at that time was because at that particular time they had ordered repairs on the Nebraska and did not have a sufficient amount appropriated to do all the work necessary, and at the same time they wanted to keep a certain crew of men working, and they worked enough enlisted men to finish the work within the appropriation.

From that letter I took it that it was not the policy of the department to work enlisted men in competition with private citizens. Now, there is a question there, though, which is really a delicate question to settle, and one that requires some deliberate consideration. As the chairman of the committee has stated, enlisted men at sea probably should have some experience so as to qualify them to make them efficient to do the repair work at sea in case of an emergency. At the same time, the workmen in the yards are justified in protesting against having that work in competition with them. And I take it, according to the letter that I read from the Secretary of the Navy, that it is not really a very serious proposition at this time.

Mr. MURRAY. If the gentleman had a navy yard in his district, as I have, he would know it is a very serious proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] has expired.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] whether or not he is opposed to the amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not opposed to the amendment.

Mr. MURRAY. Then we are together.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It ought to have in it something with reference to work being done at the navy yards.

Mr. MURRAY. It does.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then it does away with the objections of the chairman, saying that this work is to be done in the repair ships at sea.

Mr. MURRAY. My amendment expressly says:

Provided, That no part of the labor herein appropriated for and to be performed in navy yards of the United States shall be performed by enlisted men of the United States Navy.

Now, I realize when there is a break at sea the men on board ship ought to do the repairing. I realize, too, when the ship is in foreign waters the necessary work on board ship ought to be done by enlisted men. I think when the ships are at foreign ports necessary work ought to be done in that way. But when they get to home ports—and I do not think the chairman understands me——

Mr. PADGETT. I understand you.

Mr. MURRAY. The enlisted men ought not to be brought in competition with civilian employees. And I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], the chairman of the committee ought to accept the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. No, indeed. If I can call the gentleman's attention to the matter, the whole proposition is this: The expenditure as to the Navy is becoming so great and the cost of the Navy is so great that the magnitude of our naval expenditures is beginning to alarm the country. Something must be done to hold down the expenditures. This proposition simply means that the Government can not use the men it has got in its service, but it must allow them to remain idle and the Navy go and hire somebody else to do the work at a higher price.

That amendment, if it goes into the bill, simply means that we must increase the appropriation. The Government has these men. They are under contract with the Government. The Government is paying them. They do not want to get out. The Government is entitled to their services, and the gentleman's idea is that the Government shall not use these men to perform services which they are perfectly competent to perform, and for which they should qualify themselves in order to be able to perform them in an emergency.

Now, then, the Government can not afford to let these men remain idle until the emergency arises, because if the Government should do that they would not be qualified to do the work when needed. The Government must train them and give them work, and have them trained in practice, so that they will be qualified to do the work when the emergency does arise.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, if I thought that my amendment was at cross-purpose to the point of view that the chairman has so clearly expressed, I would not insist upon it; but the kind of work that I have in mind is the kind of work that is done in connection with the assembling and disassembling of parts, to use the technical language.

Mr. PADGETT. Then why should not the Government have the benefit of his services? Under what obligation is the Government to go over here and hire these civilian workmen in preference to these men?

Mr. MURRAY. I call to witness Capt. HOBSON, a member of the committee of which the gentleman from Tennessee is chairman, to confirm my statement that this method of employing enlisted men is certain to break down military discipline. As I recall my own experiences when I was in the Army in 1898, when we had returned to Tampa from Cuba we had a joke in the Army to this effect: "Send us the best detail you have in your company." "To do what?" And the answer was, "To load or unload some boxes." [Laughter.]

That is what the men are asked to do who are enlisted to maintain the honor of the Government in time of war and in time of peace. They are not enlisted in the Army nor in the Navy for the purpose of assembling or disassembling parts on board a ship; that is useful and honorable work and the civilian employees at these navy yards are the ones that ought to be kept at work by the United States, when the ships are in port, to do this kind of work. I tell you, by such a policy as that you are going to make out of your enlisted men not the best fighters in the world, as it is my hope to see them made, but you are going to destroy that kind of fighting spirit that is such a valuable asset to the country and which has been such a valuable asset in the times that have gone by. I look upon the question not only as one who represents a civilian population in the district which I have the honor to represent, but also as one with a broader vision than that, who has had some experience, though limited, in the military service of the United States, and I think that some provision along the lines of this amendment that I have proposed ought to be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question, if he has knowledge as to whether it is the policy of the Navy Department to do repair work in the navy yards with enlisted men?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not understand that it is the regular policy to do the repair work in the Navy with enlisted men, speaking of the Navy as a body, but there is certain repair work that they want the enlisted men to do, and it is necessary that at times they should do this work in order that they may qualify themselves for its performance in an emergency. But they are not going there and doing the work regularly and all the time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then if it was not a policy, this amendment would not add anything to the expense, would it?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. This would prevent any part of this appropriation being available if they used any one man in the yard to do this work. It cuts off entirely the use of an enlisted man in the yards for any purpose at any time under any emergency, and it is too broad and too fast.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I want to say that the practice which the gentleman refers to is putting into competition with enlisted men the workingmen of this country, and I am opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, division, please.

The committee proceeded to divide.

The affirmative vote was taken.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum present.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask the Chairman to take the negative side, and then, if the gentleman will withdraw his point of no quorum, I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. MURRAY. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The division was resumed and completed.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the ayes are 11 and the noes are 17. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 24565) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated:

S. 139. An act authorizing the purchase of grounds for the accommodation of public buildings for the use of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 473. An act relating to Navy retirements; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. J. Res. 105. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of State, for and on behalf of Surg. Eugene Wasdin, late of the United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, to accept a decoration tendered him by the Italian Government, and to present the same to the widow of the said Surg. Wasdin; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 22999. An act providing for the construction and maintenance by the city of St. Louis, Mo., of an intake tower in the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo.; and

H. R. 5602. An act authorizing the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association to occupy and construct buildings for the use of the corporation on lots Nos. 3 and 4, block No. 114, in the city of Hot Springs, Ark.

SOUTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

The SPEAKER announced that in conformity with a resolution of the Senate requesting the President to return and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Vice President to cancel their signatures, he had this day canceled his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 14083) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk of said court, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 25, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 319) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1912, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Speaker had erased his signature from the enrolled bill (H. R. 14083) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes, in accordance with the resolution of Congress of the 17th instant.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 5930. An act to extend the time for the completion of dams across the Savannah River by authority granted to the Twin City Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908;

H. R. 5602. An act authorizing the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association to occupy and construct buildings for the use of the corporation on lots Nos. 3 and 4, block No. 114, in the city of Hot Springs, Ark.; and

H. R. 22999. An act providing for the construction and maintenance by the city of St. Louis, Mo., of an intake tower in the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a resolution adopted by the New York Wood Carvers and Modelers' Association, remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called illiteracy-test amendment to the immigration law, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the First Baptist Church, the Second Baptist Church, the Third Baptist Church, and the Wayne Avenue Baptist Church, of Germantown; of the Third German Baptist Church of Philadelphia; the East Allegheny Episcopal Church and Sunday School of Philadelphia; of the Chellen Avenue Methodist Church, of Germantown; and of the Wakefield Presbyterian Church, of Germantown, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Sanbornville, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide medical and sanitary relief for the natives of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to maintain the present water rates in the District, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Departmental Conference on Temperance of the Southern Sociological Congress, in convention at Nashville, Tenn., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of the congregations of the First Congregational Church and of the Swedish Tabernacle, of Rockford, Ill., and resolutions adopted by the Departmental Conference on Temperance of the Southern Sociological Congress, in convention at Nashville, Tenn., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry members of The Ladies of the Maccabees of the World, residents of Chicago and Galesburg, in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the publications of fraternal associations the privileges of second-class mail matter, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of members of the Saint Martha's Guild of the Emmanuel Church, of Newport, R. I., and a petition of sundry citizens of Providence, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide medical and sanitary relief for the natives of Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. FOSTER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Monroe, La., remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Kinder and Elton, in the State of Louisiana, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Logansport, Ringgold, Homer, Lake Charles, Natalbany, Ruston, Roseland, Farmerville, and Lillie, all in the State of Louisiana, praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Rayville, Logansport, Gibsland, Cossinade, Leroy, Abbeville, Jennings, Iowa, and Napoleonville, all in the State of Louisiana, remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of members of Crescent City Lodge, No. 87, Independent Order American Mechanics, of New Orleans, La., praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MYERS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Anaconda, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of one of the proposed new battleships in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. O'GORMAN presented resolutions adopted by the Manufacturers' Association of New York, favoring the enactment of legislation to provide for vocational education, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Rochester, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide medical and sanitary relief for the natives of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. GRONNA. I present three telegrams in the nature of memorials from citizens of my State, remonstrating against the passage of the Bourne general parcel-post bill. The telegrams are very brief. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD, without reading, and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the telegrams were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BISMARCK, N. DAK., May 10, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

We oppose in strongest terms the passage of the Bourne general parcel-post bill just introduced in the Senate. We are positive this bill is not based on thorough investigation and will create innumerable additional Government employees and an enormous deficit. We strenuously request that you use all possible means to defeat this measure in every particular.

Very truly, yours, W. B. LONEAS, Secretary.

GALESBURG, N. DAK., May 10, 1912.

Senator A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

I most urgently ask you to oppose the Bourne parcel-post bill just introduced in the Senate, or any type of parcel-post legislation offering the establishment of either a general or rural parcel post.

G. A. MOACKRUD.

DEVILS LAKE, N. DAK., May 10, 1912.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.:

Hope you will do what you can against the Bourne general parcel-post bill.

O'BRIEN BROS.

Mr. GRONNA presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Munich, N. Dak., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit trading in grain futures, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CURTIS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Kansas City, Kans., praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GARDNER presented petitions of Local Granges of Cornish, Sedgwick, Bucks Harbor, Farmington, and Jefferson, of the Patrons of Husbandry; of Iron Molders' Local Union No. 101, of Bangor; of Pine Tree Division, Order of Railway Conductors, of Portland; of the Central Labor Union of Lewiston and Auburn; and of the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen, of Madison, all in the State of Maine, praying for the establishment of a governmental system of postal express, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of members of Harriet Beecher Stowe Hive, No. 1, Ladies of the Maccabees of the World, of Hartford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the publications of fraternal associations the privileges of second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. OLIVER. I received this morning two letters, one from a friend of mine transmitting a letter from an American engaged in business in the State of Vera Cruz, in Mexico, and the other I received myself from a man who is engaged in business in Tampico. Both convey the same kind of information, which I think it is appropriate to make public at this time, and I send to the desk extracts from the letters and ask that they be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The revolution is still going on; at least we suppose so, although we hear very little of it down this way. I wish the papers in the United States would quit "yapping" about intervention. There are a few of us down here that can not leave, and if they intervene and we do not leave, we pass in our checks.

The United States has no reason to intervene, and it will be a cruel injustice to the Mexicans, and I do not blame them for feeling sore. If left alone, they will fight it out some way, although it will leave them in a very bad plight. However, it is their funeral and not ours, and as long as they do not molest the foreigner the United States has no right to make this intervention talk and only increase the feeling of bitterness toward those of us who have so much at stake.

If foreigners have been mistreated, robbed, or killed, it has been done by bandits, not by either the rebels or federals, and both sides are very careful not to do injury to foreigners or their interests.

So far as war is concerned, we hear nothing except what we read in the papers. These two Gulf States have always been peaceful, many American farmers have located here, besides the oil business, and the natives find plenty of work at good wages, and they are content, do not want war; they are for peace. I have been here all winter and have not seen an American or Mexican molested, not a dollar's worth of property damaged, nor a day's delay among the oil or other industries on account of war, and we have not seen any demonstration or loud talk. As peaceful as a New England village on Sunday. Ninety per cent of the interviews in the papers are pure fabrications, no foundation to them, usually the imagination of some over-zealous reporter. There is no cause or excuse for intervention. Let our Government keep hands off until there is at least something more tangible happens. These leaders are bandits, and they impose on the poor Indian and invariably compel him to join their band. It looks now as if the Government will be able to crush the leaders and that a few more weeks will see the end of the trouble.

Mr. CULBERSON. What is the paper just read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that they are extracts from letters received by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], who desired that they should be read. There was no objection, and they were read.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 6947) granting an increase of pension to Nellie L. Davis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CULLOM:

A bill (S. 6948) granting an increase of pension to Emma S. Gere (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 6949) granting a pension to Mary Standifer; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 6950) granting an increase of pension to James H. Goldsborough (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 6951) for the relief of Rollo B. Oglesbee and others; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 6952) regulating the use of names by fraternal orders; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (for Mr. GARDNER):

A bill (S. 6953) granting an increase of pension to William Clement (with accompany paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 6954) to amend section 715 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by act of Congress of March 3, 1905; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PAGE:

A bill (S. 6955) granting an increase of pension to Dustin Berrow (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to credit in the account of Pay Director Lawrence G. Boggs, United States Navy, and $7,483.01 to credit in the account of Pay Director S. R. Colhoun, United States Navy, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the clerk to the Committee on Immigration from $2,220 per annum to $2,500 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 24023), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $12,000 for additional labor-saving mechanical devices necessary for the economical handling and distribution of mail matter in the post office at Chicago, Ill., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post Office appropriation bill (H. R. 21279), which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. SWANSON (for Mr. MARTIN of Virginia) submitted three amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. RAYNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 21226) relating to compensation of clerks of United States district courts, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—THOMAS DWYER.

On motion of Mr. WETMORE, it was Ordered, That there may be withdrawn from the files of the Senate the papers accompanying Senate bill 9200, Sixtieth Congress, granting an increase of pension to Thomas Dwyer, there having been no adverse report thereon.

SOUTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14083) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk of said court, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

C. D. CLARK,
KNUTE NELSON,
CHARLES A. CULBERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. D. CLAYTON,
E. Y. WEBB,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 319. Joint resolution making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1912, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

STATISTICS OF CORPORATIONS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I send the following resolution to the desk and ask to have it read.

The resolution (S. Res. 321) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the Senate a compilation of the returns made by the corporations for internal-revenue purposes for the year 1911, so arranged as to show the following facts:

First. The total number of corporations engaged in the iron and steel industry; the total aggregate amount of their paid up capital stock outstanding; the total aggregate amount of their bonded and other indebtedness; the total aggregate amount of their gross income; the total aggregate amount of their ordinary necessary expenses of maintenance and operation, exclusive of interest; the total aggregate amount of their losses for the year not covered by insurance; the total aggregate amount of their depreciation for the year; the total aggregate amount of the interest paid by them on their indebtedness; the total aggregate amount of taxes paid during the year to the United States and to any State or Territory thereof; the total aggregate amount of foreign taxes paid; the total aggregate amount received by way of dividends upon stock of other corporations, joint-stock companies, and associations subject to Federal tax; the total aggregate amount of their net income.

Second. The same compilation of statistics of corporations engaged in other metal, manufacturing, and mining industries covered by Schedule C of the tariff act of August 5, 1909.

Third. The same compilation of statistics of corporations engaged in the woolen industry.

Fourth. The same compilation of statistics of corporations engaged in the cotton industry.

Fifth. The same compilation of statistics of corporations engaged in the sugar-refining industry, except beet sugar.

Sixth. The same compilation of statistics of corporations engaged in the beet-sugar industry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator that the usual words, "if not incompatible with the public interest," might be inserted in the resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The resolution is so guarded that I can see no possible necessity for that precaution. The Senator will realize that these corporations make their sworn returns for the year, and all I am asking for in the resolution is a compilation of those returns as applied to the iron and steel industry of the country and——

Mr. GALLINGER. I listened to the resolution. I do not insist on my suggestion at all, although it is the usual form. I have no doubt the Senator will get the information whether those words are inserted or not. He ought to have it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think there is a very serious reason for procuring this information. We have had here a very interesting address from the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] on the subject of the iron and steel schedule. In his speech the Senator from Iowa made the statement that in his opinion the present tariff on iron and steel is such that it enables the iron and steel industries of the country to exact a hundred million dollars a year in excessive prices from the American people over what should be charged for the articles at a fair profit.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the information the Senator asks for is very proper, and I do not object to it at all, but I do not recollect in my experience here a resolution addressed to the President which did not contain the words I have suggested. I think the Senator had better insert them. It will not——

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator that those words are always used in a matter which relates to foreign or diplomatic questions, but I do not know that it is considered necessary. Of course, it is always put in the form of a request. I think if the words suggested were inserted in the resolution it would indicate a doubt on our part as to the possibility of the information being furnished.

Mr. GALLINGER. I recognize the point the Senator makes that there may well be a difference in dealing with domestic matters. I will not make the motion if the Senator does not care to have the words inserted, and so far as I am concerned I have nothing further to say.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I heard only a part of the resolution read, but from what the Senator from Nebraska has just stated I take it for granted that he is asking for information as to what the reports of all corporations in this country show by the reports made to the department, giving the amount of their business, the dividends paid, the capital stock, as a basis for assessing the corporation tax.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is, I call for a compilation of the reports of the corporations known as the iron and steel industry, and then a number of others embraced in the metal schedule; and also, after that, for the statistics relative to the woolen and cotton and sugar industries.

The Senator from Utah will realize that we have had here in a number of addresses varying statements made. The Senator from Utah himself, and, yesterday, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and also the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], read into their speeches the so-called testimony of men interested in the industry purporting to show that the present tariff is necessary for their protection and purporting to claim that they could not reduce their prices to the American people without impairing reasonable profits.

My purpose is to show—and I believe it will be shown if the statements are accurate—that the corporations engaged in the iron and steel industry are earning exorbitant profits, and that they are paying taxes on those profits to the Government under the corporation-tax law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state what was my idea in bringing this question to the attention of the Senate. As I remember the corporation-tax law, the reports were to be made not for public information, but for the information of the department. I only suggest that perhaps it would be inappropriate to ask for the information that is called for in the Senator's resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me correct the Senator. The law as originally passed provided for publicity, and it was one of the chief arguments for the corporation-tax law advanced by the President himself—that it would give to the country the much-desired publicity as to the business of these great concerns. Later on, the corporations themselves made an appeal to the President and secured from him his influence with Congress to prevent individual publicity of the corporations for the reason, as stated, that that would expose one corporation to the information of others.

I am not calling for individual publicity. I am calling for a compilation of the reports of the 600 or more plants engaged in the iron and steel industry—a compilation of the total—showing the total capital invested, the total bonded indebtedness, the total operating expenses, the total amount of dividends paid during the year on their capital stock. This will not expose——

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting to receiving that information. The only object I had was to call the Senator's attention to the law as I understood it to be. If it is not in violation of that law, then I have no objection whatever to the passage of the resolution. Mr. President, I have not a copy of the law here, but I was apprehensive that the resolution was in direct conflict with the law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no objection to the resolution going over until Monday.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over, then.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very well.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say one word before the resolution goes over in order that the suggestion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] may not be considered as passing by consent. It is an absolutely intolerable proposition to me that any law should be construed to mean that Congress is not entitled to any information which can be found in any executive department.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course——

Mr. BACON. That they can lock their doors and shut them in the face of Congress is an absolute—I started to say "absurdity," but that would be too strong an expression, I suppose—but to my mind it is intolerable, and would lead to consequences which might be of the most serious nature.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be true if Congress had not made a restriction upon them in passing the law.

Mr. BACON. Congress did not intend to restrict them in that way.

Mr. SMOOT. If that were true, then I should agree with the Senator from Georgia; but all I ask is that the resolution go over until Monday, and then, if there is nothing in the law to prevent this information being furnished, I shall not have the least objection to the resolution.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] referred to a statement of mine. While his reference was accurate so far as it went, it did not include all the elements of the proposition which I submitted to the Senate. I think I ought not to allow the statement to stand without this correction. I said:

> I come now to say that if the amendment which I have proposed to the metal schedule be adopted it will, if otherwise commerce is made free in the United States, enable the users and consumers of the various articles comprised in Schedule C to buy them for $100,000,000 per year less than they now pay.
> I mean by what I have just said that the American producers of iron and steel in all the forms enumerated in this schedule could sell what they produce to the people of the United States and to the people of other countries for $100,000,000 less than they now sell them, could still return an ample profit to the capital employed, could still sustain the wages which are now characteristic of America, and lose no man under the American sky a single day's work.

I did not, of course, say that the reduction of these duties alone would enable the users and the consumers of iron and steel to buy them at the reduced price. I added the very necessary qualification that "if otherwise commerce is made free," as I hope it will be made free very speedily.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The important point, Mr. President, in my attempted quotation from the speech of the Senator from Iowa was that, in his opinion, at the present time those industries are exacting of the American people a hundred million dollars in excess of what they should charge for their product.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of a fair profit—a hundred million dollars in excess of a fair profit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And, in my opinion, Mr. President, I will say that the Senator from Iowa has greatly underestimated their exactions. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the resolution goes over, I think it well to have put into the RECORD the language of the tariff act of 1909, in reference to divulging these matters. I do not use it as an argument at all to sustain the contention that this is not a proper resolution, but I simply desire that the language may go into the RECORD. I ask that the Secretary read the section which I have marked. It is very brief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

> Seventh. It shall be unlawful for any collector, deputy collector, agent, clerk, or other officer or employee of the United States to divulge or make known in any manner whatever not provided by law to any person any information obtained by him in the discharge of his official duty, or to divulge or make known in any manner not provided by law any document received, evidence taken, or report made under this section except upon the special direction of the President; and any offense against the foregoing provision shall be a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, before the resolution goes over, and as appropriate to the discussion which has taken place, I send to the desk, and ask to have read, a news article which was printed in yesterday's edition of the Wall Street Journal, showing the report of the principal steel corporations in the country as to their profits for the past year. I think, so far as I can judge, this is based not only upon the records of the corporations, but it gives a clearer statement of the actual present condition of all heavy-steel manufacture than anything that I have read in any paper for a long time. It shows, it seems to me, how extremely wide the estimate of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is upon the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania desires that the article be read?

Mr. OLIVER. I think it ought to be read at this time, Mr. President, for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, May 24, 1912.]

STEEL CORPORATION'S ADVANTAGE OVER INDEPENDENT STEEL COMPANIES—LAST YEAR THE RATIO OF PROFIT PER TON OF STEEL SOLD TO CONSUMERS WAS CLOSE TO $6—COMPETITORS OF THE STEEL CORPORATION REPORTED RATIO OF NET PROFITS PER TON OF STEEL RANGING FROM 11 CENTS TO $3.50—UNITED STATES STEEL'S ADVANTAGE DUE LARGELY TO ITS INCOME FROM RAILROADS, STEAMSHIP LINES, ETC.—EARNINGS OF STEEL COMPANIES COMPARED WITH 1910.

The contention of Charles M. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, that the United States Steel Corporation has an advantage of several dollars a ton profit over its competitors is borne out by a comparison of the recent annual reports of certain large steel companies.

United States Steel in 1911 showed a net profit, after all charges except dividends, of $55,218,248, and shipped to consumers 9,476,248 tons of finished steel. The ratio of net profit per ton of steel sold was $5.82, comparing with $8.15 in 1910.

The showing of the independent companies was much less favorable, the ratio running from as low as 11 cents per ton to $3.50 per ton. The Lackawanna Steel Co. reported a net profit available for dividends of only $82,803 last year, which was equivalent to 11 cents per ton. Bethlehem and Cambria Steel made much more favorable showings, but as these companies do not publish their shipments it is impossible to make an accurate statement as to their ratio of net profit per ton of steel delivered. Bethlehem's net profits last year were $2,038,979, and assuming that the company's deliveries amounted to 600,000 tons the margin of profit was $3.40 per ton. In this connection the Bethlehem Steel Corporation specializes extensively, producing very high classes of finished steel—for example, guns, armor plate, and various other classes of ordnance. Besides, it derives a large income from shipbuilding. The foregoing naturally tend to enhance the ratio of net profits per ton of steel produced:

Cambria Steel last year showed net profits of $2,627,338, and assuming that it produced and sold 750,000 tons the margin of profit per ton was $3.50. Pennsylvania Steel made a less favorable showing, its net profits available for dividends being $829,718. The Pennsylvania Co. produced 680,000 tons of ingots, and from this it can be assumed sales of finished and semifinished steel must have been in the neighborhood of 600,000 tons. This would give the company a net profit per ton of steel sold of $1.38. The light demand for rails last year was responsible to a large extent for the Pennsylvania's poor showing.

The following table gives the working capital, net profits available for dividends, and net profits per ton of steel sold by certain companies in 1911:

	Working capital.	Net profits.	Net profits per ton, 1911.
Bethlehem Steel	$7,628,260	$2,038,979	[1] $3.40
Cambria Steel	13,176,101	2,627,338	[2] 3.50
Lackawanna Steel	16,107,783	82,803	.11
United States Steel	225,190,462	55,300,296	5.82

Excluding Bethlehem Steel, with which comparisons are difficult on account of the manufacture of highly finished forms and shipbuilding, the Republic Iron & Steel Co., in the calendar year 1911, seems to have made a better showing in the matter of net profits than many of its competitors. As an illustration, it reported net profits available for dividends in 1911 of $1,953,442, a decrease of only $882,931, or 31.1 per cent, compared with 1910. On the other hand, the Steel Corporation reports a decrease of 36.7 per cent; the Cambria Steel Co., 42.3 per cent; Lackawanna, 96.7 per cent; and Pennsylvania, 43.6 per cent. Republic Steel's relative efficiency in the matter of income will be a surprise to many people who have not watched the developments affecting this corporation over the last six years. It has not only greatly enlarged its output, but has strengthened itself in the matter of diversified production. Costs have been greatly reduced as a result of an aggressive campaign on the part of the present management. Its ability to withstand periods of depression was put to a severe test last year. The Pennsylvania's showing was due to the poor demand for rails. Lackawanna suffered from similar causes.

The following table gives the net profits available for dividends of six of the leading steel companies in the calendar years 1911 and 1910, together with the percentage of decrease:

	1911	1910	Decrease.
				Per cent.
Republic	$1,953,442	$2,836,373	$882,931	31.1
United States Steel	55,300,296	87,407,184	32,106,888	36.7
Cambria	2,627,338	4,553,333	1,925,995	42.3
Lackawanna	82,803	2,533,104	2,450,301	96.7
Pennsylvania Steel	829,719	1,470,874	641,155	436.
Bethlehem Steel	2,038,979	2,001,612	[1] 37,367	[1] 1.8

[1] Increase, due largely to highly finished forms and shipbuilding activity.

Above tables reflect the price depression in steel in 1911. While the steel companies received fairly good prices for their products in the first half of the year, the shrinkage in the last half was pronounced.

To go back to the ratio of net profits per ton of steel produced, the strength of the Steel Corporation was more conspicuous in the first quarter of the current year than in the calendar year 1911. United States Steel in January, February, and March earned its preferred dividend, but not its common dividend. On the other hand, many of the independent companies in the same period barely earned fixed charges, while others reported deficits. The Lackawanna Steel Co., for example, showed a deficit after all charges of $450,772. The Republic acted wisely in passing the preferred dividend, thereby conserving its resources. This company will not fare as badly in the first half of this year as the passing of the dividend might signify. It is estimated that Republic in the first half of 1912 will show a surplus available for dividends on the preferred stock at the rate of 4 per cent or 5 per cent a year.

United States Steel in the first quarter of this year was one of the very few companies that reported sufficient surplus to cover preferred dividend requirements. This is the best illustration of the advantage the Steel Corporation has over competitors in the matter of earnings. The corporation's advantage is due to its vast transportation system, the great diversification of its products and concentration of operations. Without its transportation lines the corporation would not have such an advantage over its competitors.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I would like to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska whether these returns show the total amount paid in wages? To know what proportion of the total product goes to labor would be very interesting, in view of the tariff legislation that is pending.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it would be a very interesting statement; and, as I originally drew my resolution, I provided for that showing. When, however, I came to examine the blanks sent out by the department, I found that there was no item provided for the corporation to show the amount paid in wages. I would have no objection at all, at the proper time, to having the resolution amended to call for that information in case it is available; but, unfortunately, the blanks as sent out by the department provide no such opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I feel that I can not allow the editorial from the Wall Street Journal——

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will allow me, it is not an editorial; it is a news item.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, I do not know——

Mr. OLIVER. The Senator certainly knows the difference between an editorial and a news article.

Mr. CUMMINS. But whatever it is I can not allow it to pass into the RECORD without making an observation with respect to one part of it. I have in my hand the report of the United States Steel Corporation for the year 1911, being the year covered by the statement made in the paper to which you have just listened, and I want the Senate just for a moment to compare the statements made in the paper with the facts as shown by the report. This report says:

The total earnings of all properties after deducting all expenses incident to operations, including those for ordinary repairs and maintenance (approximately $38,000,000), employees' special compensation under bonus plan, allowance for Federal excise tax payable in 1912, and also interest on bonds and fixed charges of the subsidiary companies, amounted to $104,305,465.87.

The net earnings of the company, the report then proceeds to say:

Less charges and allowances for depreciation, viz, sinking funds on bonds of subsidiary companies, $1,610,038.99.

Of course, no intelligent man will insist that a sinking fund to retire the capital of the corporation ought to be deducted from the net earnings or its earnings in order to ascertain what the net earnings are. Next:

Depreciation and extraordinary replacement funds, $18,229,059.76.

It will be found in a subsequent part of this report that a very large part of the $18,000,000 deducted was for the creation of new properties, and is not a part of the expenses of the operation or the maintenance of the enterprise at all. But the result of deducting these two items is the net earnings in the year 1911 were $84,466,367.12. That is at least $10,000,000 less than it would be if it were computed in the way I have suggested.

Then the company proceeds to further deduct the interest on its bonds, amounting to $23,106,923.12. That is a proper deduction, if the capital which is represented by these bonds was honest capital. It then proceeds to deduct, further, more than $6,000,000 for further sinking funds to retire this capital. The result is a balance of $55,218,517.12. It then deducts the dividends paid during the year upon the preferred and the common stock, amounting to $50,634,802, and the surplus after these allowances is $4,665,494.78.

We have been advised—indeed, it is no longer disputed—that the value of its property represented by its capital did not reach $700,000,000, and therefore at least $25,000,000 which is here charged as dividends upon that capital must, in any honest computation, be disregarded, and the result is conclusive that this company, when an honest account is taken of the original value of its property—the honest capital engaged in the business—sold its product last year for $46,000,000 more than it need to have sold its product for in order to have returned a fair dividend or a fair interest upon the real capital or the real value of the property. That item alone constitutes nearly one-half of the hundred million of excess which I declared in my observations the other day might have been saved to the American people.

I felt it necessary to put these facts against the statement of the Wall Street Journal.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. I got the impression that they have been laying aside a certain amount as a sinking fund to retire the capital of the company. Does the Senator mean they are putting aside a sinking fund for the purpose of liquidating the capital upon which they are doing business?

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course. The company began with bonds amounting to something like $800,000,000 and stock amounting to the sum of nearly $700,000,000. The policy of the company ever since has been to lay aside each year a fund which, in the course of a very few years, will pay off these bonds, leaving the capital stock to represent the property of the company.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Do they still charge the interest? You have the item of dividends. There is a certain amount laid aside to pay off those bonds. Do they then subtract that which is put aside for the purpose of paying the bonds?

Mr. CUMMINS. The company, as I understand, has never retired any of the bonds issued by itself. It has retired bonds issued by its subsidiary companies, and as rapidly as those bonds are actually taken up, while I have not examined critically the report in that repect, I take it for granted they are no longer counted as a part of the capital of the company.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I was just struck with that feature of it. If they use this money to retire their bonds, then the dividends would be——

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let us have the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called for.

Mr. BACON. I did not hear the order of resolutions called for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is on that order now.

RIGHT OF INTERVENTION IN CUBA.

Mr. BACON. I offer a resolution and ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 322), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Committee on Cuban Relations be instructed to investigate and report to the Senate what legislation is proper and necessary to be enacted to prescribe and determine the times when and the manner in which the United States shall exercise the right to intervene in Cuba for the purposes specified in article 3 of the proviso in the act making appropriation for the support of the Army approved March 2, 1901, commonly known as the Platt amendment, and subsequently agreed to by the Government of Cuba, which said article 3 is in words as follows:

"III. That the Government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a Government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the Government of Cuba."

And in particular the said committee is directed to report to the Senate:

1. By what official authority it shall be determined when conditions in Cuba will justify and shall require the exercise of the right to intervene in Cuba in order to preserve and guard the several purposes and objects specified in the said article 3.

2. The measures and means which the President of the United States shall be authorized to use in order by such intervention to secure and maintain the several purposes and objects specified in said article 3.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I shall not ask for the present consideration of this resolution if there is any objection on the part of any Senator. I desire, however, to say a word before any action is taken either as to laying it aside or by reference.

This resolution is not one which has any reference to present conditions in Cuba and has no reference to any present anticipation of intervention. I very much hope there will be none. The present condition, though, accentuates the fact that we have never legislated on that subject in a way which we should have legislated 10 years ago. There is no doubt about the right of this Government to intervene when certain conditions justify it. And in order that the matter may be fully presented, I am going to ask that the Secretary read the proviso to the act of 1901, commonly known as the Platt amendment. Then I shall desire to state why it is important, in my opinion, that there should be legislation. The Secretary will find marks on the paper indicating the place where to begin and where to stop. That contains the full proviso known as the Platt amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided further, That in fulfillment of the declaration contained in the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, entitled "For the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect," the President is hereby authorized to "leave the government and control of the island of Cuba to its people" so soon as a government shall have been established in said island under a constitution which, either as a part thereof or in an ordinance appended thereto, shall define the future relations of the United States with Cuba substantially as follows:

"I. That the Government of Cuba shall never enter into any treaty or other compact with any foreign power or powers which will impair or tend to impair the independence of Cuba, nor in any manner authorize or permit any foreign power or powers to obtain, by colonization or for military or naval purposes or otherwise, lodgment in or control over any portion of said island.

"II. That said Government shall not assume or contract any public debt to pay the interest upon which, and to make reasonable sinking-fund provision for the ultimate discharge of which, the ordinary revenues of the island, after defraying the current expenses of government, shall be inadequate.

"III. That the Government of Cuba consents that the United States may exercise the right to intervene for the preservation of Cuban independence, the maintenance of a government adequate for the protection of life, property, and individual liberty, and for discharging the obligations with respect to Cuba imposed by the treaty of Paris on the United States, now to be assumed and undertaken by the Government of Cuba.

"IV. That all acts of the United States in Cuba during its military occupancy thereof are ratified and validated, and all lawful rights acquired thereunder shall be maintained and protected.

"V. That the Government of Cuba will execute, and as far as necessary extend, the plans already devised or other plans to be mutually agreed upon, for the sanitation of the cities of the island, to the end that a recurrence of epidemic and infectious diseases may be prevented, thereby assuring protection to the people and commerce of Cuba, as well as to the commerce of the southern ports of the United States and the people residing therein.

"VI. That the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, the title thereto being left to future adjustment by treaty.

"VII. That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba and to protect the people thereof, as well as for its own defense, the Government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling or naval stations at certain specified points, to be agreed upon with the President of the United States.

"VIII. That by way of further assurance the Government of Cuba will embody the foregoing provisions in a permanent treaty with the United States."

Mr. BACON. The provisions of that law, commonly known as the Platt amendment, were subsequently incorporated in the constitution of Cuba and are a part of its fundamental law. After that it was also incorporated in a formal treaty entered into between the United States and Cuba and set out in words as it has been read to-day. So there is no question about the right of intervention; but it is a fact that we have no machinery or authority prescribed by statute which shall determine when there shall be an intervention or prescribing what the President shall be justified in doing in case there should be an intervention.

Now, this resolution does not propose any specific measure. It simply directs the Committee on Cuban Relations to inquire, investigate, and report to the Senate what legislation should be had in regard to the matter. The Senate committee is composed of very eminent and conservative Senators, and the matter can be very safely intrusted to them. If they should be of the opinion that no legislation is required, they would so report. I hesitate, however, to believe that the committee will so report. In other words, I have no hesitation in the opinion that there ought to be a provision of law which shall clothe some one with authority to determine when conditions arise which justify intervention and to act when that determination is reached. Now, heretofore that power has been exercised upon one occasion by the President of the United States in the absence of any law. It may be that it is better that he should be clothed with that power, but if so, it ought to be a power specifically conferred upon him by law. There is now no such power conferred upon him by law, and when it is exercised by him it is exercised in the absence of law.

My personal view—I will say it is not a very mature one, because I have not given it the careful consideration which would enable me to say that it is a mature conclusion—is that the better way is to provide that should any such condition arise when Congress is in session it should be brought by the President to the attention of Congress, and it should determine what should be done. It may be necessary that there should also be a provision authorizing the President to act in case Congress is not in session. But all those are matters for the consideration of the committee. It must be apparent as to two things—first, that there should be authority of law for some one to determine when conditions justify intervention; second, that there should be authority of law for what the President shall do when that condition arises and shall have been duly and properly determined to have arisen.

The important fact is, Mr. President, that there is no authority of law now under which the President of the United States is empowered to send an armed force to Cuba. There ought to be such authority of law as will enable the President of the United States to do that whenever, under the provisions of the Platt amendment and the treaty made in pursuance thereof, circumstances develop which justify it.

With the exception of the restraints imposed by the Platt amendment, Cuba is an independent country, an absolutely independent country. We recognize it as such. It is recognized as such by the nations of the world. We have a minister from Cuba resident here, and a minister of the United States is accredited by the United States to Cuba. There are reciprocal diplomatic arrangements of that kind between Cuba and all the prominent nations of the world and a good many that are not so prominent. So, with the exception of the restraints imposed by this law, she has all the attributes of sovereignty and of an independent nation.

Now, it is a most extraordinary situation, of course, when a nation otherwise independent is subject to the restraints which are imposed by the Platt amendment, and I think properly imposed, although I am frank to say I did not vote for it when it was passed, simply because I thought it was in conflict with the pledge which we had made when we went to war—the pledge made in what was known as the Teller resolution—and I did not for that reason vote for it. I thought it was a wise thing, and I have always thought so since, and I am certain it was wise, seeing that subsequent events have justified it.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. Pardon me just one minute and I will yield with pleasure. I just want to finish that thought.

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Now, dealing with a nation—because it is an independent nation except so far as restrained, as I have said—when the high function of sending a military force to that country is to be exercised, it is important that it should be done in accordance with law and not by an assumed authority.

I now yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from Georgia that this is an eminently proper resolution. I should like to ask his opinion on this question, because he has examined the subject. If Congress adjourns and affairs take such a turn in Cuba as to require intervention, does the Senator from Georgia think that under the Platt amendment the President would have the right to intervene by sending the Army there, or would it be his duty to convene Congress in extra session for the purpose of getting its consent?

Mr. BACON. I have just passed over that. Possibly the Senator did not hear what I said.

Mr. RAYNER. I was called out of the Chamber for a moment.

Mr. BACON. I will repeat it with pleasure. While referring to the fact that this was a proper subject for investigation by the committee and that it should make recommendations upon it, I ventured to express the opinion that possibly the best provision of law would be one which would devolve upon the President the duty, if conditions arose which in his opinion made it important that there should be intervention, that if Congress were in session the President should lay the matter before Congress, but that possibly it might be important and necessary that another provision should be incorporated in the law that if those conditions arose and Congress was not in session the President should proceed upon his own judgment.

Mr. RAYNER. I think I heard that. I did not make myself quite as plain as I might have done. Suppose before this committee can go on and investigate under the resolution Congress adjourns and there is trouble in Cuba. Under the Platt amendment, how does the President stand? Would it be his duty to call Congress in extra session?

Mr. BACON. I am inclined to think that would be a matter of such gravity that it ought to be done. To send an army into a foreign country is too grave and serious a matter for the President to take the responsibility of doing so without the direct authority of Congress.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator if that would not depend upon how the act of intervention is to be regarded, whether as a friendly act or an act of war, the power to declare which is vested alone in Congress.

Mr. BACON. The Senator's inquiry is very pertinent, of course. It might be done in a way that would constitute it practically as an act of war. But there is one thing which differentiates this, if done in good faith, from the ordinary sending of an armed force into a foreign country, and that is there is an agreement that we should do it. I am unhesitatingly of the opinion that whatever is done should be done under authority of law; and I repeat that we should have legislated on this subject 10 years ago.

Mr. CULBERSON. The agreement, though, provides that we should intervene on certain conditions.

Mr. BACON. Yes; that is so. I think the Senator agrees with me that there ought to be some provision of law, and those conditions should be authoritatively ascertained and the law should provide in what manner and by whom the intervention should be made.

In response to the suggestion of the Senator from Texas, there is another thought in my mind and that is that it might be well to provide in the law that whenever the authorities of Cuba should call upon the United States for assistance, which would be in that case an entirely friendly act, for the purpose of carrying out any of the objects provided for as the grounds of intervention in that country, the President should be authorized to furnish the assistance. But all those are matters of detail. However, the questions which are asked me by the learned Senator from Texas and by the distinguished Senator from Maryland emphasize the importance that there should be provisions of law by which this matter in its necessary details should be arranged, and it should not be left to action by the Executive or any head of an executive department under an assumed authority, because as at present situated it would be nothing else.

A case did arise some years ago when the President acted. Congress was not then in session, and while it was not under warrant of law, possibly you might say the necessity of the circumstances justified it, because Congress had failed to do its duty. I think it was the duty of Congress years ago to have legislated in regard to this matter, and we certainly ought not to postpone it any longer than is necessary to enact legislation. In my own mind there can be no possible doubt that there is no authority conferred in the Platt amendment upon the President of the United States to act, and there should be authority conferred upon him, and the manner in which he should act and what he should do when he determines to act should be prescribed by law.

I wish to say one word further, Mr. President, without detaining the Senate. I believe legislation of this kind will tend to prevent disorders in Cuba. I believe the fact that it is recognized by us as a matter of such gravity that we have prescribed by law what shall be done, and that we have given distinct authority of law for the doing of it, will restrain disorders in Cuba. Above all things, in connection with Cuba, I desire that order shall be kept there, because I recognize that disorders in Cuba make the question of final annexation a probable one, and that is what I would above all things avoid. I never want to see the day come when Cuba shall become a part of the United States. I prefer that she shall occupy exactly the relation which she occupies now as an independent nation, and at the same time with sufficient power of restraint on the part of the United States to guard against the recurrence of conditions which drove us to war 14 years ago.

It is with that thought and view and desire that I bring this matter to the attention of the Senate. If it is agreeable to the Senate, I would be glad that the resolution should be now passed, in order that the subject may be committed to the Committee on Cuban Relations. I do not now suggest any specific legislation in it. I simply ask that the committee may be charged with the duty of examining the matter and reporting to the Senate what legislation should be had in view of the Platt amendment and present conditions and those which may possibly develop.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if the same result would not be accomplished by just having the resolution referred to the committee without a vote being taken upon it by the Senate? I understand that the resolution is only suggestive anyhow in its provisions.

Mr. BACON. If it were referred to the committee, what would the committee do? If they thought there should be legislation they would come back to the Senate and ask to be instructed. If they thought there should be none they would do exactly what they would do if the resolution were passed, report to the Senate that there should be none. So what is the difference? Why should we multiply the actions of the Senate? Why not simply pass it now and send it to the committee? It does not instruct them to bring in any legislation. It instructs them to report what action, if any, is required. It seems to me to be an unnecessary delay to refer it first to the committee before passing upon it. If this were a resolution which instructed the committee to report a bill or to report any particular piece of legislation, setting out what it should be, then it might be proper to first refer it to the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, if the resolution should be referred to the committee, the jurisdiction of the committee would extend only to reporting back the resolution.

Mr. BACON. That would be all.

Mr. GALLINGER. And we would be exactly where we are now.

Mr. BACON. Exactly where we are now.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought that at least we would be this far advanced, we would have the opinion of the committee as to whether the Senate should act. As it is now I really do not know whether the Senate is prepared to act upon the question with the information that Senators have from the mere reading of the resolution.

Mr. BACON. The resolution does not commit the Senate to anything.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not object to the present consideration of the resolution, but I thought the proper course would have been to refer it direct to the committee.

Mr. BACON. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

AUTHORITY OVER WATER POWER IN STATES.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to submit an inquiry to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee before the morning business is closed.

At the last session of Congress the Senate passed a resolution (No. 44) directing the Judiciary Committee to report as early as practicable in this session upon the jurisdiction and power of the Federal Government and the State governments with reference to water-power development. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee what the prospects are for a report from the committee. In doing this, I desire to say that there is no intimation or suggestion whatever that the committee has been delaying in this matter, because I know the members of the committee have been extremely busy upon matters in that committee and also other committees in which they are engaged. All I desire is simply information as to what the prospects are for a report.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, the committee had at one time under active and earnest investigation the resolution which was introduced by the Senator from Washington and referred to that committee. We took up the resolution, fully conscious of the magnitude of the work and of the importance of the subject. The committee devoted several entire sessions to the consideration of the resolution, when it was crowded out by what appeared to be business of more immediate necessity.

In these progressive times and in the changes which we are having the Senator knows that the committee has been called upon to consider a number of resolutions proposing amendments to the Constitution. Upon that work the committee has been almost exclusively engaged for the last seven or eight meetings.

To be perfectly candid in my answer, and answering only as one member of the committee, I see no immediate prospect for making a report from that committee on the resolution of the Senator, and for this reason: The resolution is so broad and covers such a broad field that in its solution the committee seems to be very much divided. It is a matter that is discussed from day to day in the Senate, and the same division of opinion that appears in the Senate also appears in the committee. I think the most that the Senator can expect is to have submitted to the Senate the individual views of the committee. That, of course, will be done as soon as the other current business of the committee will allow.

Mr. JONES. Of course, I know the statement of the chairman is entirely correct. There have been a great many important matters submitted to that committee. I consider this a very important proposition. I think that the solution of it rests really at the foundation of legislation along progressive lines with reference to the water-power situation in this country. I was in hopes that we could get the decision of our legal committee with reference to the purely legal right or power or jurisdiction of the National Government and the State governments with reference to this important matter, because I think a proper decision upon that one point rests at the very basis of legislation along practical lines.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator will allow me, as a demonstration of the progress the committee has made, I will say that the committee started in to cover the whole ground as soon as possible. The report was made by the subcommittee to the full committee, as I remember it. The committee started in at the Atlantic seaboard, and during the few sessions that we devoted to the subject we had got as far as the Hudson River, and seemed to be in confusion at that point, and never got further.

Mr. JONES. I suppose that the same legal principles would apply to the Atlantic seaboard that would apply on the Pacific seaboard and over Atlantic coast streams that would apply over Pacific coast streams. I did not anticipate that we would have so many different legal opinions upon the proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course the Senator is aware of the fact that the same principles or the same rules do not apply upon either the Atlantic or the Pacific seaboard that would apply in the interior. The same law might not apply to navigable streams as to waters that were not navigable.

Mr. JONES. But it seems to me the same legal principle ought to apply to the navigable streams that applies to one, and the same principle that applies to one nonnavigable stream ought to apply to all nonnavigable streams.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Possibly when the Hudson River difficulty is settled in the minds of the committee the western navigable streams will be settled upon the same basis. That is all the encouragement I can give the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I hope before the present session of Congress ends we will either have a report from the committee or from the individual members of the committee. It has been my observation that as a usual thing we get as many reports from the Judiciary Committee as there are members upon it with reference to legal propositions, but I was in hopes that this would be an exception, and that the committee would submit a unanimous report.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say that is simply another evidence that individual thought is abroad in the country at this time.

Mr. JONES. There is no suggestion that there is not individual thought abroad in the country at this time.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I intended to ask a question of the Senator from Washington, but I will cover it by a statement, inasmuch as the Senator has taken his seat.

The fact is that there should never be a report upon such a resolution. The branch of this Government invested with determing that question is the courts, not the legislature. We are getting into deeper water every day by usurping those powers.

The courts of the United States, district, circuit, and Supreme, have passed upon these questions and are authorized to pass upon every phase of them. There is scarcely a possible combination of circumstances that has not been met and passed upon by the courts of the United States as affecting the right to the use of waters both in the States and between the States.

Now, if we are going to propose that Congress shall usurp the powers of the court and take up the time of the committee in inquiring as to what we might possibly desire to do, I think the committee had better pause, and if they have any pigeonholes left that are not full—I know some of them are quite plethoric—they had better put this in one of those pigeonholes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I regret exceedingly the Senator from Idaho could not have impressed that view upon the Senate when they instructed the Committee on the Judiciary to proceed in a certain matter which I think was entirely within the province of the Senate. The Judiciary Committee always tries to obey the commands of the Senate in any matter that may be referred to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not speaking as a member of the committee or encroaching upon the functions of the committee, but I was speaking, as a Senator and as a citizen, merely a word of admonition that, if that bill or resolution, in whatever form it is, can be safely taken care of in the committee room, it remain there.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply desire to suggest what the chairman of the committee really suggested, that this resolution has passed the Senate requesting the committee to make this report, and the suggestion that the Senator has so well made, would, I think, have properly come in when the resolution was pending before the Senate. The Senate has acted on the resolution. It is not now my resolution, but the resolution of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am indulging in a little of the spirit of the recall. I suppose that in some thoughtless hour a resolution of that kind was offered and passed through, but I think the Senator from Washington and I would not disagree in regard to the principle involved in it.

Mr. JONES. I think not.

Mr. HEYBURN. We know where the jurisdiction should vest which determines such questions, and that is in the courts.

Mr. JONES. I will suggest to the Senator from Idaho that this resolution, when it was up, went over a day at the request of the Senator from Idaho; so that it was not passed on the spur of the moment, but apparently the Senate deliberated over it and deliberately passed it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Idaho suggests that perhaps the best way to deal with this matter would be to put it in a pigeonhole of the Committee on the Judiciary. If I may be allowed to make a suggestion to the Senator from Idaho, I will say I think it might more properly be disposed of, and in a way that the chairman of the committee, at least, would not object to so very much—it might be disposed of by a motion to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the subject.

In further answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Washington a few moments ago, I will say that while the committee itself has been engaged in a general discussion in regard to water and water power referred to by him, a very great work was done by the subcommittee having the matter in charge. They investigated the matter thoroughly, and under the chairmanship of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] made a very exhaustive and illuminating report. But the full committee did not finally come to any agreement. I will say to him, however, that the report submitted by the Senator from Minnesota is in print and is available for the Senator or any other Senator having interest in this subject matter.

Mr. JONES. I undestand the report of the subcommittee was unanimous.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The report of the subcommittee was unanimous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

WASHINGTON IMPROVEMENT & DEVELOPMENT CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 142) to declare and make certain the authority of the Attorney General to begin and maintain and of any court of competent jurisdiction to entertain and decide a suit or suits for the purpose of having judicially declared a forfeiture of the rights granted by the act entitled "An act granting to the Washington Improvement & Development Co. a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington," approved June 4, 1898, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment of the House of Representatives is, on page 4, at the end of line 10, to insert:

Each of said companies, as a condition precedent to approval of its right of way hereunder, shall pay such compensation for the taking or damaging of land and improvements of Indian allottees as the Secretary of the Interior shall find to be justly due from and hitherto unpaid by such company; and each of said rights of way is hereby expressly declared to be subject to the condition that so much thereof as shall not have been occupied by a completed railway at the expiration of five years from and after the date of the approval thereof under this act by the Secretary of the Interior shall ipso facto revert to the United States without any act of reentry or judicial or legislative declaration of forfeiture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Washington to the amendment.

Mr. JONES. I would suggest that the amendment went over yesterday at the request of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, when this matter came up yesterday I asked that it go over because of the innovation similar to the one just referred to, wherein it is now sought to substitute the Department of the Interior for the courts of the United States in performing a duty. The courts have always determined these questions, and in some very notable cases the courts have determined controversies between railroad companies where two or more were seeking to build their road through a canyon too narrow to accommodate their rights of way. The first great decision that was rendered was in the case of Railroad against Allen, in Ninety-ninth United States Supreme Court Reports. That has been followed down through a great many years of careful consideration.

Now we find somebody—and I will not animadvert upon the qualifications of the author of it—who thinks he would like to transfer that jurisdiction from the courts to the Secretary of the Interior. It is only in keeping with this dangerous change that is being pressed upon us. This measure provides in express terms, on page 6:

Resolved, etc., That the aforesaid railway companies, whose rights of way as filed and located are overlapping each other, shall proceed, within 60 days after the passage and approval of this resolution, to present their matter of difference to the Secretary of the Interior, and thereupon it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to give said companies a hearing—

The courts have been performing that function always efficiently, but some one wants to make a short cut across the field and thinks probably that he could do better in dealing with the department, with its peculiar organization; he wants to avoid the courts. There has never been a time when the courts have not been able to perform this function. Great railroad companies have been desirous of building through the same canyons or down the same streams, and under the recognized method of procedure have appealed to the courts. The courts have adjusted their difficulties, and the act of Congress providing for joint occupation of canyons never contemplated that the Secretary of the Interior should have anything to do with the matter; it contemplated that the courts should determine the rights of the parties. Under that condition, for years and years, an established practice has grown up, and here comes as innocent looking a joint resolution as I ever saw which proposes to change the system of government. I do not like to see it done. The Senate may do it; it is doing many strange things; it is progressing generally with its face turned the wrong way, and the further it progresses, of course, the further it will proceed from the true line of wisdom. Progressiveness is not always commendable. First, you want to inquire which way progressiveness is pointing. It may carry you over the precipice into the sea, or it may carry you out into pleasant lands. For that reason I asked that this joint resolution should go over yesterday. I will merely read one further clause here to show how they emphasize it:

And if it shall be found that the right of way as located by the Washington Improvement & Development Co., and now owned by the Great Northern Railway Co., at any particular point along said right of way is so located as to prevent the physical location and construction of said Spokane & British Columbia Railway in and through said valley without great or unreasonable expense, the said Secretary shall direct the readjustment of the locations—

It carries my mind back. I had more than 40 cases on the court calendar once for the adjustment of this class of difficulties between the Union Pacific system and the Northern Pacific going down the St. Regis River. We had no difficulty whatever in adjusting those differences, but now these matters are to be taken out of the established tribunal having charge of them for a vast period of years and turned over to the clerks of a department. Of course, the head of the department would never see them unless perhaps the president of the Great Northern Railroad or some of those people should secure a personal hearing with him.

It is not good legislation, and I say to the Senator from Washington that I am speaking with a knowledge of the application of this system of change. It is not wise legislation; there is no provision for review by the courts; the Secretary of the Interior is the final arbiter. In some cases that I recall it would have meant millions of dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would not an appeal lie?

Mr. HEYBURN. No appeal lies from the decision of any department except as specially provided for by statute. There is no general right of appeal; there is no provision whatever for it.

This may be an innocent measure in reference to going down that little particular piece of road, with which I am familiar. It may not amount to very much, but when you undertake to disturb existing conditions as to the manner of proceeding you will run up against cases where the amount involved will be very great.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Idaho is a little hasty in arriving at his conclusion concerning this measure. Possibly he has not a full acquaintance with what has already been done in reference to it.

Let us remember that the valley through which the rights of way have hitherto been granted by Congress is an Indian reservation, the title other than that which the Indians hold being in the Government of the United States. Several years ago an act of Congress granted to a certain railway a right of way across that reservation. In that grant the location had to be made, then filed with the Secretary of the Interior, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior. That was all done. That was Government land, and it was very proper that the Secretary of the Interior should approve of the location, as provided by the act of Congress.

This same law, Mr. President, required the railroad company to proceed with the construction of the railway within a given number of years. Due to certain conditions, which it is not now necessary to state in the argument, they failed to do that. Then another railway company, desiring to locate through the same valley, located under a general law of the United States in reference to crossing Indian reservations. That general law also provided that the location of the line as laid out should be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The second railway proceeded upon the assumption that the time having elapsed within which the first railway was to construct a certain number of miles of its road, its right lapsed and was forfeited. As a matter of fact, it was not forfeited in law, but was simply forfeitable by the Government. The Government did not see fit to forfeit it because the Government had not been injured, nor could it be shown that anyone else had been injured, by reason of the delay; and there were reasons which justified the company in not proceeding according to the law under which it had authority to locate its road across the Indian reservation.

It so happened that in certain sections in the valley the two roads overlapped each other, or, rather, the last locator located its line over a portion of the line which had first been located by the other company.

When this matter came before the Committee on Indian Affairs it came before it in the shape of a request asking for authority on the part of the Government to cancel the right of the first company obtained under the act of Congress, the object being to hold the right of the second company.

Mr. HEYBURN. Under the general act.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under the general act. The second company had also forfeited its right, according to my idea, under the general act, but there had been no injury to the Government. It then became apparent that there would be more or less of a conflict between these two companies. It was desired by the committee that both of them should have the right to go through that valley; but in some instances the location would not be convenient, and so provision was made that, in order that the two might retain their rights and that the Government should not proceed against them where the lines overlapped, they should relocate or change their lines, swerving this way or that way in such a manner as to allow each one of the roads to go through that valley with as little extra cost and damage to the other company as possible.

Mr. HEYBURN. Why not do it under the general law?

Mr. McCUMBER. Simply because one company had already obtained a right there under a special law——

Mr. HEYBURN. But the Senator says that right has been forfeited.

Mr. McCUMBER. And the Government did not desire to forfeit it; it has not been forfeited; the right still exists. If the company which first obtained its right under the general law had forfeited, then they would not stand in an equal position, but the right would be granted to the other company, and the other company might refuse to relocate any portion of that line.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is what the court would do for them.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; this is a case of a right of way over an Indian reservation——

Mr. HEYBURN. That makes no difference.

Mr. McCUMBER. Which is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; and remember that in both instances the locations were made with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior under a law passed by Congress. If Congress desires to change that law in such a way as to allow them to readjust their lines at the conflicting points, there is certainly no reason why the Secretary of the Interior, to whom authority was granted in the first instance to approve of the locations, should not approve of the readjustment of those locations through the valley in such a manner that both companies may pass through there.

This was regarded as the simplest way to accomplish the purpose; it is satisfactory to both of the companies. They are both willing to get together and relocate their lands, if they can, with as little inconvenience to each other as possible and to get the Secretary of the Interior to approve the locations as they are changed here and there for mutual accommodation.

Mr. HEYBURN. They need no authority from anybody to do that.

Mr. RAYNER. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from North Dakota yield—to the Senator from Idaho or to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. McCUMBER. I first yield to the Senator from Idaho and then I will yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely suggest that under the existing law no authority is required for the adjustment of those lines. The courts have always sustained the adjustment of lines under the act which authorizes the joint occupation of narrow defiles and canyons.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is considering now only the question of the general law; but there was a special law in this case as well as a general law. One company located under the general law while the other located under a special law, and neither of the companies desires to lose by a forfeiture whatever rights and privileges it obtained under the particular law under which it made its location.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota does this joint resolution give the Secretary of the Interior the judicial power to determine upon a forfeiture in the case of either of these railroads?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; not at all. It simply allows the Secretary of the Interior to approve the relocation where the railroad companies are compelled to relocate for mutual adjustment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Interior is not required to do that. The act authorizing joint occupancy of these canyons has been held to be, and it is undoubtedly, broad enough to authorize the courts to adjust the lines.

I have in mind an instance in point where a line was located so as to zigzag from bank to bank of a canyon and leave no opportunity to build another road up that valley. It was done deliberately. When another road came along with its lines they asked the court to compel the first road to withdraw the points of this zigzagging course. The court did so, and compelled them to relocate their lines. The matter did not go to the Secretary of the Interior at all. The court simply said that they had made a misuse of the law and made them draw in their points so that the other road could be built in the valley.

Mr. RAYNER. Is any judicial question left with the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh, this joint resolution proposes to leave all judicial questions to him.

Mr. RAYNER. What judicial question is left to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. McCUMBER. He approves the location, and nothing more. I did not think it was necessary to explain the way this matter first came before the committee. An action had been started by the company last locating against the former company in the United States court to forfeit the right. The court properly held that the action would not lie; that Congress having granted the power it is up to Congress to determine whether or not it would exercise the power to declare a forfeiture, and Congress not having exercised that right, the case was dismissed.

Then it came before the committee on an application to grant the authority to the department to commence the action to declare forfeiture, the result of which would have been to have destroyed the rights of the one first there and to have placed the other in its stead over a considerable length of the location. To avoid this and to allow both of the companies to use their lines this bill was modified and formulated, and the Secretary of the Interior does under this just exactly what he was to do and what he did do under both the special and the general law. That is, he approved the location, and here he approves of the relocation across Government land.

Mr. HEYBURN. The language of the amendment itself would seem to challenge the Senator from North Dakota. It provides that the parties shall present to the Secretary within 60 days after the passage and approval of this resolution—and thereupon it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to give said companies a hearing.

When you give a hearing, you give it for the purpose of acting upon conflicting contentions.

And if it shall be found—

Found as a matter of judicial determination—

And if it shall be found that the right of way as located by the Washington Improvement & Development Co. and now owned by the Great Northern Railway Co. at any particular point along said right of way is so located as to prevent the physical location and construction of said Spokane & British Columbia Railway in and through said valley without great or unreasonable expense, the said Secretary shall direct the readjustment of the locations.

Those are judicial acts. I want to say at this time that this bill is applicable only to one case, and I do not care very much about it. I would not oppose any adjustment of the difficulties between these lines. I made my objection only because the bill recognizes a principle against which I am opposed—to which I shall always be opposed; and so long as I think it is proper I shall express my opposition to the transfer of the performance of judicial duties from the judiciary system of the country to the Executive; and that is all. I have no care as to this particular case.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no more a judicial duty under the clause the Senator has read in this respect than there was in the original bill which Congress passed.

If, for instance, the Washington Development Co. had presented a location, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized under the original law to say, "This location is not entirely satisfactory. You must locate it in another place. I will not approve of it at this point." The Secretary had the approving of that, and there are certain Indian rights that attach here and there as to which he had the right to say, "You must avoid these, but I will approve the line along there."

When the two lines conflict, the same authority is given. After he has once approved it, if they change that line so as to conflict he will approve a line, and if they can not agree, he will assist them by suggesting and directing where they may go, and thereby each line will be properly located.

Mr. HEYBURN. The law requires the filing of a map in order that it may be placed upon the public system of surveys, as notice to the world that this railroad intends to build its line there, and when that map is filed the only duty the Secretary has to perform—and it is performed, really, through the General Land Office—is to place that upon the public surveys, and if it is in conformity with the provisions of the statutes the approval is a mere perfunctory act on his part.

The filing of a line through an Indian reservation requires no other act to be performed than that as to the filing of a line anywhere. All the great lines of the Northwest intersect Indian reservations, and the treaty rights between the Indians and the railroad company were adjusted as in other cases of treaties.

Inasmuch as this affects only the one case, I will not pursue it further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

METAL SCHEDULE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar under Rule VII is in order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there has been for some time comment upon the inactivity of the Senate in the matter of tariff legislation. Certain newspapers of the country, mostly newspapers opposed to any kind of revision, newspapers that do not advocate such revision, have fallen into the habit, notwithstanding what has transpired upon the floor of the Senate, and in disregard of repeated statements that have been made on both sides of the Chamber with reference to the purpose and determination of those who are in favor of revision, of saying that the minority in this Chamber are not sincere in their desire for the passage of the several bills sent to us by the House, and that we do not expect legislation upon this subject, and that we are not seeking to secure action upon those measure at this session of Congress.

There is not, of course, as is well known in this Chamber, whatever may be the impression outside of it, the slightest foundation for these persistent and repeated misstatements and misrepresentation on the part of the newspapers.

I want to say now, Mr. President, and I want to say it with all the emphasis I can command, that this side of the Chamber, in so far as it is able to control the situation—and I think with such assistance as we may be able probably to get from the other side of the Chamber we will be able to control it—is determined that there shall not be an adjournment of Congress or a recess of Congress until the Senate has acted upon each of these bills, whether that action be favorable or unfavorable action.

The statements that we do not intend to press these matters to decision at this session of Congress is utterly unwarranted, without foundation, and in utter disregard of everything that has transpired and of everything that has been said by the friends of the measure upon this floor.

There is, Mr. President, a disposition in some quarters to complain that tariff measures have not been pressed with due diligence before the Senate. That complaint, in my judgment, is utterly without warrant, in view of the facts connected with their consideration. Every measure that has been sent to us by the House has been acted upon by the committee. One of these bills is now upon the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. And, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I am sure the Senator will say that in the consideration of those bills in committee he discovered no disposition on the part of the majority members to delay their report.

Mr. SIMMONS. I take very great pleasure in saying that I did not discover at any time during the consideration of these measures in the committee a disposition on the part of the majority members to obstruct. Those measures are all on the calendar. One of them is the unfinished business; and just as soon as it is disposed of it is the purpose of the friends of revision to insist that the others, in turn, be made the unfinished business of the Senate until they are all disposed of.

There has been, it is true, considerable discussion upon the bill which is now before the Senate, but there has not been more discussion than was proper under the circumstances and in consideration of the importance of the measure. There has been no abuse of the right of discussion. There has been no indication of a purpose in any direction to resort to dilatory tactics. On this side of the Chamber only two speeches have been made; on the other side of the Chamber probably four, and they may have been lengthy speeches, but the friends of revision have occupied probably not more than one-third of the time that has been consumed in the discussion.

In saying that, I simply desire to be understood as saying that the friends of this measure have not occupied more time than was proper, and I do not think the opponents of the measure have occupied more time in the discussion of it than was proper and legitimate under the circumstances.

Since this bill became the unfinished business we have kept it continuously before the Senate, allowing only a very reasonable time to enable Senators to get ready to speak, with the single exception that we have yielded to two appropriation bills, neither of which consumed much time, and in those instances we yielded because we thought we would save time by letting those bills be passed in view of the fact that it was expected that the bills would be held a considerable time in conference.

So far from our losing time by reason of permitting these interruptions in the taking up of the appropriation bills, I think we have gained time instead of having lost time.

Mr. President, I think under present conditions we may reasonably expect an early vote upon this bill. I will say on behalf of this side of the Chamber that we are ready to vote at any time. We are ready to vote to-day. Although there are some Senators here who desire to speak, so anxious are we to have action upon this question that they are ready and willing to forego the making of speeches at this time.

There are not more than one or two speeches to be made on the other side. I hope we may be able to get to a vote on this bill early next week. When we have concluded the consideration of this bill I do not see anything in the way of rather quick action upon the other bills. I do not think, probably with the exception of the wool schedule, that there will be anything like as much discussion upon the other bills as there has been upon the pending bill.

But, Mr. President, the country is impatient for an adjournment of Congress. Senators, as well as Members of the other House, are anxious that the present session should be brought to a close. In that condition of things I think probably we might expedite not only action upon these bills, but action upon other bills, and secure an early adjournment by changing our hours, by meeting a little earlier or by providing for night sessions. I should like very much to hear from the other side of the Chamber with reference to the suggestion that we should either meet at 11 o'clock, continuing our sessions until 5, 5.30, or 6 o'clock, or instead of one long session that we should have two sessions, one in the day and the other at night.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. How would it do to substitute "wager of battle" if we are to determine this great issue by endurance?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think if we should substitute "wager of battle" the Senator would suffer.

Mr. HEYBURN. It seems to me that the same principle is involved. If you are going to tax men's endurance, and we are not all, fortunately or unfortunately, endowed with the same amount of physical strength, then perhaps if we could get the young men in a party in this body they could compel those of us who are further advanced in years to do whatever they determined upon. I do not think that is a good moral principle of legislation.

Mr. SIMMONS. My observation is that the older men stay in the Chamber just about as well as the young men. I do not think that an additional hour would overtax us because, as the Senator knows and as Senators know, during these discussions there is plenty of time for Senators to take relaxation out of the Chamber, and they take that time. They do not have to stay here and hear the discussion.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not complaining. I was objecting to the principle that was so obvious in its intent on its face.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is not an unusual practice. We have frequently, toward the close of a session since I have been a Member of this body, either met at an earlier hour than usual or we have had night sessions.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have done some rather ridiculous things.

Mr. SIMMONS. There seems to be about as much urgency in reference to adjournment this year as ever before. Almost everyone at this end of the Capitol and at the other end is anxious to get away.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is a good argument against careful legislation.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not urging it against careful legislation. I am not making any suggestion that these bills should not receive the fullest consideration and the fullest debate. I am simply suggesting a little longer session every day, either in one session or in two sessions, to facilitate an early adjournment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will withdraw anything that would seem to be an objection, if all Senators will pledge themselves to attend these sessions from beginning to end.

Mr. SIMMONS. All Senators are not going to pledge themselves, for all Senators will not attend. If we had a session of only three hours a day while considering these tariff measures, or any other measures, all Senators would not attend.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think I fully appreciate the solicitude of my friends upon the other side of the Chamber concerning an early adjournment, but I think they ought to restrain their impatience. I do not believe the country is demanding that we shall adjourn so that we may attend either the Chicago convention or the Baltimore convention. I think we are commissioned to do a work entirely apart from the work that will be done in either of those great bodies of representatives.

I want, of course, now, as I always do, to complete our duty and adjourn as soon as possible, but the first consideration is to do our work and to do it right, to do it after full debate and full consideration and reflection.

I can not concur with my friend from North Carolina about the advisability of either meeting at 11 o'clock or holding night sessions. So far as I am concerned, I am doing about all that I can do, and I am not willing to add to the burdens of the session by increasing the hours that we spend here either in daytime or at night. When we spend five or six hours in the Senate Chamber six days a week we have done all that can possibly be demanded of us, and I think we have done all that we can do and do it well.

Why not go on with the work of the Senate without thinking so much about the time when we shall adjourn, and hold reasonable hours, and work diligently, and when we have finished the work, then adjourn. Let us not spend a moment in useless debate or in considering matters that are not of the first importance, but let us go on and do what is plainly before us and put out of our minds this matter of getting away from Washington in the middle of June. We can not do it. We can not attend to these four great tariff bills, say what ought to be said about them, and do what ought to be done about them, and about the appropriation bills which are yet to come before us, and about the Panama bill, which is of the first concern, and about the title of the seat of the Senator from Illinois—we can not do all these things and adjourn in the middle of June. If we are to vex our minds all the while with regard to the day and hour of adjournment and try to fashion and mold all our work with reference to getting away at a particular time, we will not accomplish the latter and we will do our work very ill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have simply thrown out what I have said about a longer daily session, or two sessions, for consideration by Senators on both sides of the Chamber. I think, with slight exceptions, Senators on this side of the Chamber would be perfectly willing to have this extension of the time of our sessions.

I do not wish the Senator from Iowa to understand, in anything that I have said, that I do not wish, and that this side of the Chamber does not wish, that each of these great measures should receive due and full consideration. I have not suggested any curtailment of debate at all.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I want to assure the Senator from North Carolina that in saying what I did with regard to the time of adjournment and the tendency to give scant attention to business before us, I was not replying to anything he said, nor had I anything he had uttered in my mind. I was replying to a rumor that has found its way into the newspapers and has also been circulated in the Senate Chamber. I hope the Senator did not understand that I was imputing these things to him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to say that so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned—and I have conferred with Senators on this side very freely about it—we have one fixed purpose, and that is to insist upon a decision upon all of these tariff measures which have been sent to us by the House, or any that may hereafter be sent to us by the House, and we are perfectly willing to stay here just as long as is necessary to discuss them and secure action upon them. I should like to have an early adjournment, but not an early adjournment at the sacrifice of due consideration or by the neglect to insist upon action upon any measure that has been sent to us by the House with reference to the tariff.

Speaking for this side of the Chamber, therefore, I want to say—and I rose only for the purpose of saying it—the suggestions which have found their way into the press that friends of revision are not in earnest in these tariff matters, and that they expect to permit an adjournment or a recess of Congress before action upon those bills, are without the slightest foundation; and, so far as we are able to control the situation, there will be no adjournment of Congress until they are acted upon.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in connection with what the Senator from North Carolina has just said, and to come down a little more to specific matters. The Senator has alluded to articles which have appeared in the press. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the leading editorial of the Washington Post this morning, which I will read. It is headed, "No spoils for insurgents," and proceeds:

As nobody denied the truth of Senator BORAH'S remark that the leaders on both sides of the Senate are agreed that there shall be no tariff legislation at this session, what Senator BACON said in denial of Senator SMOOT'S statement, with reference to Democratic sentiment on the subject, argues that at least a tacit agreement on the tariff has been reached. Senator CUMMINS'S protest against going home with the tariff bills unacted on evoked no sympathetic response from either side to the controversy. And, as it happened, the House Ways and Means Committee, finally convinced that the Senate Democrats would do nothing, had just tucked away the cotton schedule and the odds and ends of their revenue-only policy, there to stay until the Senate gives indication of tariff action.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that that is not only an absolutely unwarranted statement, it is not only absolutely a misstatement, but I think I am within the mark when I say it is an inexcusable misstatement.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the assertion is made in this editorial that nobody denied the truth or the correctness of the statement made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. President, it is to be presumed that the writer of that article, when he observed what the Senator from Idaho said, had read further as to what other Senators said in the debate which ensued, and that such an examination of the RECORD had been made by the writer of the article before he would say that no denial had been made as to the truth or correctness of that statement.

If so, Mr. President, the memory of the writer was very short or his reading very imperfect. While I will not undertake to read in full the debate, which lasted probably an hour or more, on that subject, in which in the most vigorous terms possible the statement made by the Senator from Idaho was denied, I will simply read a few of the things which were said on that day which show how utterly inexcusable is such an unwarranted statement as the one which I have read published in the paper this morning.

Replying to the statement of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] made this statement:

Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator—

That is replying to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in response to the very statement which the Washington Post said was not denied.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that he is speaking without authority. I do not know anybody on this side who is not anxious that these bills shall become law, and I will say to the Senator that if they do not become law it will be either because of the action of the Republican side in this Chamber or of the Republican President.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator does not expect, however, that any bill that may pass will become a law, does he?

Mr. SIMMONS. I expect that this bill will pass this body, and I expect it will go to the President of the United States. What he will do with it the Senator can tell better than I can.

Then I ventured to express myself in regard to the statement of the Senator from Idaho, a statement which the Post says was not denied. I will read some of the things which I said.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me until I get through, I will yield to him with great pleasure; but I prefer to continue and read what I said in reply to the statement of the Senator from Idaho. I beg to remind the Senate I am reading this now for the purpose of testing the accuracy of the statement of the editorial writer in the Washington Post that the statement made by the Senator from Idaho was not denied, disputed, or controverted. It is a question of fact whether the statement of the Senator from Idaho was denied. I am not talking now about whether the Senate is or is not in earnest about the passage of the tariff bills, but I am talking about whether or not the statement made to the contrary by the Senator from Idaho was then denied, because the Post says it was not denied. That denial was made by me, as follows:

Mr. BACON. I have had a pretty good opportunity to know what are the attitude and desire of the Democrats, and I can say with the utmost confidence that the statement, whether made directly or by inuendo, that the Democrats are not in favor of this legislation which they are now proposing to pass is absolutely not only without foundation but incorrect. I have been in very close confidential relationship with my colleagues on this side of the Chamber; we have the opportunity for an interchange of views under circumstances where each can judge of the sincerity of the others, and I speak in the utmost confidence and in the sincerity which is due from one speaking in this place when I say that the purpose is to do all that is within our power to pass these tariff bills, and not only that, but we will be greatly disappointed if they do not become law.

Why should the Senator think we do not desire that this metal-schedule bill shall become a law, when it rests with such burden upon those whom we represent, when there is not a single Democratic Senator who does not represent constituents who rest under very great burdens on account of the present law? which burdens would be greatly relieved by this bill if it should be passed.

Not only so, but among the great body of the American people there is not a man who rides on a railroad who does not have to pay an increased cost on account of the cost of the iron rails which are made more costly by the tariff on rails. The Senator knows that, and to say that we are not sincere in this—I am astonished that the Senator should say anything of the kind, unless he can give us any authority for it. If the Senator knows of any single Senator on this side of the Chamber whom he can charge with insincerity in this matter, I hope he will not hesitate from any feeling of delicacy to mention his name.

Again, pursuing the same matter further, I said what I shall now read. I will omit much that I intended to read, but I just want to read that which was most emphatic in denial of the statement which the Senator from Idaho made, which the writer in the Post had the opportunity to examine, and which I suppose was examined before any such statement as that in the Post was made:

Mr. BACON. Now we have the Tariff Board's report, and the Senator from Idaho said that our work necessarily and obviously would have no result; that our own action in regard thereto could not be taken as serious or with any purpose or expectation to accomplish anything.

I am replying to that when I say that non constat the President of the United States will not sign a bill which may be passed by this Congress. In the first place, so far as the woolen bill is concerned, the House of Representatives has acted upon its own responsibility and has passed a bill such as was proper to pass; and the Democratic Members of the Senate approve of that bill and are in favor of its passage. If it is passed, we do not know what view the President of the United States may take of it, in view of the fact that the Tariff Board has acted. But if we can not pass the House bill, the Senators sitting on that side of the Chamber have it in their power to present another bill to the Senate, which, it is presumed, the President will approve; and if it lessens the cost to the consumer, and to the great mass of the consumers of this country, all of whom use wool in greater or less degree, we will vote for your bill, although it is not such a bill as we would desire. And the same is true of the steel bill. It will not be our fault if such bills are not passed at this session.

Omitting much that could be read on the same line, this emphatic declaration was then made by me in the course of my remarks:

I want to say this to Senators: So far as the Democrats of the Senate are concerned and so far as the Democrats of the House are concerned, we propose to do our part in the enactment of this tariff legislation. We propose to do it in the way that we approve if we can accomplish it. If we can not accomplish it in the degree that we approve, we propose then to join with you in anything which lowers the burden of tariff taxation at the present time. I wish to let the Senate know and to let the public know that we are not only sincere in the bills which we propose to enact into law, but we are still further sincere in the effort to relieve the people of this great burden of tariff taxation by saying that we will take your bill whenever you produce it if we can not pass ours, provided it lessens that burden.

Mr. President, those are only a part of the statements which were made in utter denial of the proposition or statement made by the Senator from Idaho. Whether correct or not, they were made, and yet the editorial in the Post says that no denial was made of it.

Mr. President, there is evidently a purpose to produce a wrong impression, and therefore I echo what was stated by the Senator from North Carolina to-day, not only so as regards some of the press, but some Members of the House, in interviews which have been reported in the papers, seem to be in doubt about it, and I wish to say to them, not as in the House, but when talking to the representatives of newspapers, they need not be in doubt as to what is the purpose of the Senate in that regard. Unless we are forced, over our wish to adjourn, all the tariff bills will be passed by the Senate at this session, either our bills or bills which may be offered in amendment thereof, provided those amended bills thus offered lower the tariff.

Mr. President, it is probably not the correct thing ordinarily to speak of the action of Senators outside of the Chamber, but as this matter is so persistently thrust upon us, I am going to take the liberty of saying that the Democrats more than a week ago held a conference upon this subject and agreed unanimously, without a single dissenting vote, that we would do what the Senator from North Carolina to-day says we are going to do—that we would insist on a vote upon each and every tariff bill which was before the Senate or which should be sent to the Senate by the House. Every newspaper in the country, so far as I know, on the morning after that action reported that action except the Washington Post. The newspapers had the benefit of it; the newspaper men were in attendance and were immediately informed of it. I will not say the Washington Post did not publish it on the next morning, but I will say that I diligently searched it the next morning and there was no mention of the fact that I could find, either that there had been a conference or that the Democratic Senators had thus determined as I have just stated.

In the face of that action by the Democratic Senators in conference, and in the face of the most emphatic denial that it was possible for the Senator from North Carolina and myself on Wednesday to frame of the statement, it is repeated in the paper this morning that it is not the purpose of the Democrats or of the Senate to proceed honestly and in good faith to the enactment of this legislation. I hope there will be no doubt about the question hereafter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am a little afraid that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] attaches too much importance to the Post editorial. On the same page they had two other editorials, each elephantinely humorous—one headed "The Wiley baby" and the other headed "Attacking the hen"—and the contents of each editorial are more or less remotely related to the headline of the article.

This one is headlined "No spoils for insurgents." This editorial contains one insinuation and one assertion. The insinuation is to be found in the headline, and it is unjust. The assertion is to be found in the main body of the article, and it is untrue. Whatever else may be thought of the insurgents, Mr. President, whatever opinion may be entertained concerning their tactical or strategical wisdom, I do not think anybody will charge that they ever went into the movement in which they went with any idea of reaping spoils from it—in the immediate future at any rate.

However far one may differ with them in many respects, I think no man will deny their sincerity, their honesty, their earnestness, their unselfishness, and the fact that they had nothing to gain by the course which they have taken from a personal political standpoint. There is much to gain in their opinions, I suppose, for the country after a while. I myself think they have made a great strategic error. I think any man is almost foolish, if I may use that language, who expects a revision and a reform of a great iniquitous system from the party which has fathered the system itself and which had been a party to the mutual benefits growing out of it—the benefit of money going into the pockets of the privileged and favored few, and the benefit of offices going to the legislators who have voted to keep up the system. It seems to me that they would have been wiser in their generation if they had gone into some party that was in earnest about fighting the tariff. Their faith in the idea that the Republican Party will at some time revise and reduce the tariff, shut off its own campaign funds and its own great influential supporters throughout this country, is an evidence of faith only excelled by that shown by a man who buys a bottle of hair restorer from a bald-headed barber. But whatever else may be said about it, there is no doubt about the fact that they have nothing personally to gain in the immediate future. So the insinuation contained in this headline is eminently unjust.

Now, let us see the assertion:

Senator BORAH's remark that the leaders on both sides of the Senate are agreed that there shall be no tariff legislation.

I do not remember the exact language of the Senator from Idaho; this may be it for all I know:

The leaders on both sides of the Senate are agreed.

Who are the leaders? Who are the leaders of the Democratic Party? Who are the leaders on the other side? The titular leader of the Republican Party sits before me. The selected leader of the Democratic Party has been at home for three or four weeks with a very seriously sick wife. If anybody on this side of the Chamber undertook to speak as a leader he was guilty of great arrogance and great assumption, because the Democratic Party has not made anybody leader for this purpose. Let us go on with this:

A tacit agreement on the tariff has been reached. Senator CUMMINS'S protest against going home with the tariff bills unacted on evoked no sympathetic response from either side to the controversy.

* * * * * * *

The swan song in the Senate and the decent burial rites in the House leave nothing to speculation.

I do not remember whether the Senator from Idaho said a "tacit agreement" had been arrived at or not. I think the Post said it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to read what I did say, so that we may have the text before us?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORAH. I said:

Mr. President, it seems to me that the absence of Senators from the Senate Chamber is by no means a reflection of the interest which they might have in this discussion under certain circumstances, but it is due to the fact that, while there is a great deal of protest to the contrary, nobody really expects any tariff bill which may come before us at this session to become a law, and if both sides would join with equal candor in that proposition it would not be necessary to stay here and carry on this useless discussion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was so unfortunate as to be one of the Senators who were not in the Chamber when the Senator uttered those words. Of course, the man who wrote this editorial must have known or, if he did not know, he ought not to be setting himself up as an editorial writer for a great paper at the Capital of the country, that the Democratic Party had held a Senate caucus and passed a resolution saying that we would not agree to adjourn this Congress until every tariff bill which the other House had sent or would send had reached a vote in the Senate. That was known to all men who wanted to know it; it was known to everybody who had not carefully abstained from reading the newspapers; it must have been known to whoever is the editorial writer of the Washington Post; or, if it were not known to him, the owners of the Washington Post ought to try to get somebody who keeps up with current affairs to edit the paper.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator right in that connection to the fact that at the very time the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] uttered the protest referred to in that editorial, an emphatic statement was made to the Senate by myself, speaking for the members of the Finance Committee on this side of the Chamber. The Senator from Iowa stated, as I remember, that those who agreed with him on the other side would insist that there should be no adjournment or recess until four of these tariff bills, which he specified, had been acted upon. Responding for this side of the Chamber immediately after his statement——

Mr. BACON. And interrupting his statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and by interruption; I said that, speaking for this side of the Chamber, it was our fixed purpose and determination, so far as we could control the matter, that there should be neither an adjournment nor a recess until every bill that had been sent here by the other House upon the subject of the tariff had been acted upon, nor until every other tariff bill that might be hereafter sent to the Senate from the other House had been acted upon. It was part of the same statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. I am glad the Senator interrupted me to let the country know that.

One other statement. As to this editorial, to which I think we are perhaps paying too much attention. I think that probably the editor did not intend the editorial to be taken seriously, but intended it to be treated as a production of elephantine humor, just as the editorial on the Wiley baby and the attack on the hen were intended for pieces of elephantine humor. Perhaps we are going too far with it; but for fear somebody might take it seriously, here is another assertion that the Democrats in the House had quietly tucked away the cotton bill. It is a matter of public, notorious information, and it is a matter of personal knowledge to me, at any rate, and I think to most people, that the other House has simply said that, until the Senate showed a willingness to vote upon some measure, it would keep it back, but that they are going to send a cotton bill to the Senate as soon as the Senate clears up its docket a little by showing that we are going to vote on something else. So much for that.

Now, to reply to the only thing worth replying to, the remark made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which seems not to have been at all what the Post reported him as having said. He said he thought most of us knew that there would be no legislation on the subject of the tariff—that is, that none of the bills would become laws, passing both Houses of Congress and receiving the approval of the President. We ought to be frank, of course, with one another and with the country. I think that very probably the Senator from Idaho is right about that; but that has nothing to do with the question of presenting to the country our convictions in a made-up record, that the country may have it before it. I think the Senator is probably right, because the present President of the United States, who is also a candidate to be President again, while he has said that there were excrescences in the tariff system to be lopped off, yet always discovers, when we send him a lopped-off excrescence, that it was not the particular excrescence that he had referred to; and he generally will, I suppose, veto the bills; but although he hides himself behind the fortress—the veil, rather—of the Tariff Commission and tells us that he will not allow any tariff legislation to go through except after the report of the so-called Tariff Board, that the Tariff Board having reported upon the wool schedule, and every fact in its report being in exact keeping with the provisions of the wool bill sent to him last session by the Democratic House and now pending again in the Senate, I have a hope that when it reaches him he will sign it or else that he will indicate to the country wherein it fails to be based upon the facts ascertained by the so-called Tariff Board.

The Senator from Idaho ought not to have twitted us with the fact that there might not be any legislation upon tariff questions.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Idaho—that is one of the unfortunate things about the situation which the Senator from Idaho occupies, as well as the situation occupied by the balance of the men so irreverently called "insurgents"—can not strike without striking at his own party if he strikes right, and if he had struck at the real obstacle in the way of tariff legislation, he would necessarily have struck at a Republican President. Not desiring to do that, he merely threw these remarks out innocuously upon the circumambient atmosphere, and the Post landed them at the door of the conscience of the Democratic Party, where they ought not to have been landed.

One more word before the Senator from Idaho interrupts me. I have really no doubt that if that distinguished ex-President of the United States, who is now a candidate for the Presidency, were in the White House very probably we would get very little tariff legislation past the White House with his approval. It is a curious thing, Mr. President, that he is the only man who is a candidate for the Presidency in either party who has never opened his lips in favor of the reduction of a single tariff duty, now or at any other time, and how my insurgent friends expect to get any legislation upon the tariff question out of him passes my conception. Lately, forced to say something upon the tariff question, he comes out with this vague, spasmodic, characteristic plaint. He says that he is going "to see to it"—I do not know just precisely how, but he is a great man to see to things—he is going "to see to it" that a good deal of the profit derived from the tariff shall go into the pay envelopes of the laborers at the pay window. Just precisely how he is going to do that, just what sort of a law will make a man who is rendered able by an iniquitious tariff system to pay wages, but who has never been rendered willing by Almighty God to do it, I do not know; but at any rate he is going "to see to it." There is not one word about reducing the exorbitant profits of the iniquitous system at all, nor a word about the method of distributing them, but he will "see to it" that more of it goes into the pay envelopes at the pay window.

Well, now, tariff barons, like trusts, are divided into two classes—good tariff barons and bad tariff barons. Hitherto the people who have made those divisions and have thought some sound economic theory was based upon them have been very lenient with good trusts, and they may be equally lenient with good tariff barons for all I know, but they might possibly go out of their way now and then to punish a bad tariff baron just like they went out of their way to punish now and then a bad trust, meaning by a "bad trust" a trust which was not subservient. So there was a later utterance from this suspender of laws, and that later utterance went to the effect that when he was to examine as to whether a tariff was properly laid or not he was going to examine into the question as to whether the man who enjoyed the benefit of it was paying proper wages. Now, we have before us this magnificent vista, requiring almost Godlike wisdom to execute it, but still magnificent vista—somebody in the White House who shall take note of the wages paid in all the factories of the United States, and whenever the wages paid in a particular factory are not satisfactory to him, reduce the tariff on that particular factory.

I suppose if another factory were engaged in producing exactly the same things and were paying good wages, it would be rather difficult to reduce the tariff enjoyed by the bad-wage payer without also reducing the tariff enjoyed by the good-wage payer at the same time. So, as I said a moment ago, it would require almost godlike wisdom; but still we have in prospect a man who, while he may not have it, at least thinks that he proximates it. Then if it is discovered that the wages being paid are all right, the tariff is to be everlastingly continued. It seems to me that is, necessarily, the logical conclusion on that side of the shield.

Now, what have you done with the poor devil who has nothing to do with it either way, who neither owns the capital of the factory nor does the labor in the factory? Is he never to have a hearing at all? Is there nothing to be considered except the distribution of the robber fund? Are capital and labor to enter into a union to be approved by the Government of the United States to share the iniquitous robber profit, provided only that they will share it equably amongst themselves according to some outside party's ideas of what equableness consists of?

I want to be frank with the Senator from Idaho. It is very doubtful whether we will get any tariff legislation. Of course it is doubtful. The Senator from Iowa a moment ago was replying to a rumor. He ought not to have done so, but, being a man for whose example I have the highest possible regard, it emboldens me to refer to a rumor, too. There is a rumor abroad in the country that the present occupant of the White House has agreed that no tariff legislation shall go through unless it be recommended by the Tariff Board, and that such an agreement was made at some time in the past. I do not believe in replying to rumors, and therefore I am not going to reply to this one. I merely mention it so as to keep the Senator from Iowa from conjuring up rumors, too. We ought not to conjure up rumors. For all I know this rumor has not an element of truth in it. It is a rumor, and that is all the statement I make concerning it—that it is a rumor.

Mr. President, every Member of the Senate may just as well satisfy himself right now as to wait weeks or months to satisfy himself that so far as the Democrats of this body can control events they are not going to permit Congress to adjourn until a record vote has been had upon every one of these tariff measures and every other one that the House may send to us. The Senator from Georgia said we would not adjourn unless we were forced to do so. We can not be forced, because it will require a majority in the House of Representatives as well as a majority here to adjourn this Congress. We can not be forced except in one way. The Constitution does contain a clause, to which too little attention has been paid, that when one House passes a resolution to adjourn upon a certain day and the other House fixes upon a different day the President of the United States may adjourn them to a day certain, but I imagine that the incumbent of the White House is not going to put himself in the attitude of exercising that power in order to prevent himself from being embarrassed by the presentation of tariff measures.

If I understand the situation, both Democrats and Republicans in this body are ready to go to the country upon the records which they have made. I do not want to be flattering or complimentary, particularly, but I am willing to go to the country on the record which the so-called "insurgents" have made by their speeches in this body. If they have not riddled your present iniquitous tariff law, even from the standpoint of protectionism—which is not my standpoint—then I fail to understand how it could be riddled. I am willing to go to the country upon the record which the Democratic Members of the House of Representatives have made in their bills and in their speeches. I believe that the Republicans here are willing to go to the country upon the records which they have made. The record is made up and is ready to go to the supreme court of appeals—the people of the United States—and I confess, so far as I am concerned, that if it is not plain so that the supreme court of appeals may give judgment upon it, I do not know how I, at any rate, could make it plain. It seems to me to be so plain that a man who runs could read it. So that the remark made by the Senator from Idaho was like the croaking of the raven in Poe's celebrated poem—

With little meaning, it little relevancy bore.

It is not a question as to whether a Republican President is going to enable us to have tariff legislation; it is a question as to whether we are going to be true to our promise to the Democratic people of this country and carry it as far toward the goal of becoming legislation as our votes can carry it, and then put the burden at his door, and let him either lift it up or leave it there.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, undertaking to speak for nobody but myself, I want to say that I am thoroughly in favor of the proposition of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I am willing to meet at 11 o'clock in the morning for the very and sole purpose, if necessary, of enabling the Senator from Mississippi and other Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to record their views upon the tariff bills which have come over or may come over from the other House. I have no desire to avoid any responsibility, personally, on those questions myself; but I think Senators magnify the importance of the situation in the Senate. The people of the United States care very little about what is going on or will go on in the Senate of the United States during the remainder of this session. Their attention is diverted elsewhere, and it does not make any difference what we do or fail to do, it will have little or no result upon the country, either as to their confidence or lack of confidence, and it will have little or no result on the coming election.

I am anxious to get away from here, because I deplore the spectacle that we are seeing here in a small measure at the present time, and which we shall see after the national conventions in a greater measure, of the Senate floor being turned into a hustings, where there will be crimination and recrimination, political taunts bandied back and forth, and where we will have scenes enacted that ought never to be enacted anywhere, but, unfortunately, are enacted sometimes in elections outside.

I want to get through with the business of this session. I have no hope of any important legislation aside from the appropriation bills being passed. Already to-day we have been in session three hours, and all, excepting half an hour, of that time we have discussed editorials and their bearing upon the political situation. I believe that we can do our full duty by our country by meeting here at 11 o'clock and letting the Senators who want to record their votes and their views upon great pending measures record them for whatever they may be worth; vote upon these bills, pass the supply bills of the country, and go home, as we can go home before the political conventions assemble.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is perhaps proper that I should say a word. I have conferred with the Senator from North Carolina in reference to the matter of having an earlier session than 12 o'clock, and I agree with him most fully that that would be desirable unless some overwhelming reason can be presented on the other side.

I stated two or three days ago that I wanted to see an adjournment of this session of Congress as speedily as possible, and I ventured the remark, if I remember it correctly, that, in my opinion, we would be serving the country well if we got away at the earliest possible moment. I have not changed my mind. I agree with the suggestion the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] has made, that it is desirable that that should happen.

I regret that nearly three hours of time have been spent this afternoon in the discussion of a question that, it strikes me, is so inconsequential as not to deserve our serious consideration. Why, Mr. President, if I had discussed in this body every newspaper editorial or every dispatch which I have read which affected me or my party and misrepresented me or my party, I would have taken a very large proportion of the time of the Senate, which I have to the utmost striven to conserve. I do not think that the utterance of the Democratic Washington Post concerns either one side of this Chamber or the other. Newspapers have got to say something; they have got to say something to-day that they deny to-morrow or they can not fill up their columns; and if they do sometimes reflect upon the Democratic side of this Chamber or the Democratic House of Representatives let it pass. I agree with the Senator from Mississippi, that the editorial to which he has referred is not of much greater concern than those two other editorials which I read with a great deal of interest, but did not think it was necessary to bring to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. President, I am one Republican, speaking for myself alone, who believes that our Democratic friends have a right, not to demand necessarily—for I think they put it a little strong—but they have a right to ask and we have a right cordially to respond to their feelings on that point, that they shall have a vote on these bills, and I am ready to the utmost of my ability to help them get such a vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the Senator will agree with me that that right to have a vote grows out of the fact that Senators representing the minority party, as well as Senators representing the majority party, represent the people; and the people have a right to have the votes of their representatives recorded.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; they are presumed to represent the people.

I have never, in my somewhat lengthy service here, Mr. President, undertaken to obstruct any legislation by dilatory tactics. I have been very deeply interested in one measure that was defeated by tactics of that kind, and I thought unjustifiably so, but I yielded because I had to do so. It is a fact that if there were a disposition to do so, three Members on this side of the Chamber could keep the Senate in session until the meeting of the next session. We have got appropriation bills to consider. Every line in those bills can be debated; we need not waste our time on tariff bills unless we wish to do so; but I know that I speak the sentiment of every Member on this side of the Chamber when I say there is no disposition to do anything of that kind.

I have believed that we could get away on the 15th day of June, and I believe so now, but to accomplish that result we would have to deny ourselves the privilege of listening to our own voices to any great extent; and I am willing to make that sacrifice; we would have to be diligent in the work of the session, and we would do well not to waste valuable time in the discussion of collateral questions, newspaper editorials, and things of that sort.

Now, Mr. President, all I can say, and all I intend to say, is that I hope we may buckle down to our work diligently and earnestly; reach votes on all these great bills—our Democratic friends call them "great bills," although I do not think they are; but we will call them "great" for the sake of the argument—reach votes on them as early as possible; pass the appropriation bills as speedily as may be; legislate on the question of the Panama Canal, and get away. But if it is the desire or the purpose of any Senator on either side of the Chamber to prolong the debate on these bills and to protract the session, why, Mr. President, I have got my summer clothes in Washington—what few I have—and I am willing to remain here with my friends and enjoy myself as best I can in a heated term that is not comfortable to any of us. I am willing to remain here until the end of the session is properly reached and be content with the result, however uncomfortable it may be to me personally.

I am not, Mr. President, one of the younger Senators of this body, but I am reasonably able to endure fatigue, and I will join with some of the Senators who are younger than myself and stay here and enjoy their companionship as well as I can, and some time before the snow flies we will secure an adjournment. But, on the other hand, Mr. President, I do really feel, and I do believe, that if we only willed to do it, we could complete this session, pass upon every bill that ought to be voted on, and get away before the great political conventions are held. Why, Mr. President, we have had a spectacle here during the past week. I have been in this Chamber for hours with three companions when a Senator was making a great speech. We know that Members of this body, without any excuse from the body, have been away weeks and months, and we know that other Senators will be away for weeks and months, and if this session is continued until the conventions are held, it is possible you may have a quorum here to do business during those two weeks, but I have some doubt of it.

So if there is any way by which we can bring about an adjournment on the 15th day of June, I will cooperate to the extent of my ability to accomplish that result; but if, as I said a moment ago, Senators are determined that that shall not occur, I shall gracefully yield and remain here just as long as they think it is desirable to do so either for the good or the evil of the country, whichever it may be.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is evident that the Washington Post can congratulate itself on being thoroughly and well read by all the Members of the Senate. They are entirely familiar with the different editorials which appear upon its pages, and in that respect it is entitled, I suppose, to serious consideration, as it seems to be the instructor of a good many different Members of the Senate.

But perhaps the mistake I made the other day was in being a little too candid. I perhaps gave expression too freely to that which was in the minds of all Members of the Senate.

If I should have the good fortune to remain here, I would likely be more diplomatic in expressing that which we all really understand to be the fact. But truth will out, however much we may try to conceal it.

I entertain a different view of the first sentence of the Post's statement to that entertained by the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Mississippi, because that which the Senator from Idaho said was not denied, has not been denied to-day, and will not, in my judgment, be denied by anyone upon this floor.

I made the statement while the debate was proceeding, with no one listening, that it was evident from that fact that no one expected this bill or any other bill with reference to the tariff to ultimately become a law at this session. I do not think anyone really entertains a serious belief to the effect that, however earnest they may be on the minority side or whatever the views may be on the majority side, that ultimately it will result in a law. But that was the proposition which I was stating. It still represents my views, and every hour since has demonstrated that to be the correct position, and all debate and every action since have demonstrated it to be the correct situation, which is that we do not expect at this session that any of the bills in reference to the tariff will become laws. That does not challenge the sincerity of the minority side with reference to the tariff, and the misfortune was that my friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] apprehended it to be an attack upon the sincerity of the Democratic side of the Chamber, which was not my intention. In the running debate some things may have been said which might just as well have been left unsaid, but it was not my intention to charge insincerity. As the original statement was made it had no other purpose and no other result than to state a fact which had been repeated inferentially here this afternoon a half a dozen times.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to call his attention to the particular thing which gave rise to the earnestness of the debate? It is on page 6959, in the course of the colloquy between the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from North Carolina. The Senator from Idaho said this. I will read the connection in order that it may be understood fully.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know what the Senator means by "the other side." When he says "the other side," does he mean the Democratic side?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I mean the Democratic side, as I am on the Republican side.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that he is speaking without authority. I do not know anybody on this side who is not anxious that these bills shall become law, and I will say to the Senator that if they do not become law it will be either because of the action of the Republican side in this Chamber or of the Republican President.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator does not expect, however, that any bill that may pass will become a law, does he?

Mr. SIMMONS. I expect that this bill will pass this body and I expect it will go to the President of the United States. What he will do with it the Senator can tell better than I can.

Mr. BORAH. It will be a great consolation to the Senators on the other side of the Chamber that it will go to a Republican President.

Mr. SMOOT. And also a great consolation if it is vetoed.

Mr. BACON. The statement of either of these Senators is not only without warrant, but is absolutely wide of the fact.

If that is not an imputation upon the sincerity of Senators, I do not know what language could be used that would be more pointed to that effect.

Mr. BORAH. I stated a moment ago that in the running debate there might have been language used which might indicate a partisan criticism. What I said in the beginning, as I read it a moment ago, when the Senator from Mississippi was on the floor, and that was all there was in my mind until the debate called out some further suggestions. But it is apparent upon the face of the record, because I repeated it several times afterwards, that I did not challenge one side of the Chamber more than the other. I challenged both sides and do now. I have not been very partisan in my statements on the floor of this body, and I do not propose to be. I think people advocate measures here because they believe in them. Because I do not agree with them is no reason why I should challenge their motives, and I very seldom do so.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, what is before the Senate at the present time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. House bill 18642.

Mr. OLIVER. Is it the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the unfinished business.

Mr. OLIVER. We have spent an hour in discussing the Washington Post, and I suggest that perhaps we might do some affirmative legislation before we go away this evening. I therefore ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that we proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the calendar under Rule VIII.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I shall have to object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us proceed with the consideration of the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read and is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and is open to amendment.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let us vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I hear a voice which says, "Let us vote on it." We will not vote on it to-day.

It is presumed that the Senate will consider legislation before it votes on it, and if this legislation has received consideration it must have been during the very brief interval that I only occasionally have to take luncheon. I do not mean that it has not received serious consideration from Senators, and very able consideration, but others than those who have spoken will be called upon to vote on this measure. I had despaired of any occasion arising to-day for the continuance of its consideration, and so had put away in my desk some informal memoranda which I have in the way of figures, thinking the question of what the newspapers thought of what had been said in this body was sufficiently interesting to occupy perhaps another hour or two, when an adjournment would be reached. This is the end of a laborious week.

Mr. CUMMINS rose.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator from Iowa desires to go on this afternoon——

Mr. CUMMINS. I am perfectly willing to go on, but I will have an amendment to present in the way of a substitute for the bill as it comes from the House. I desire to reply, on the amendment, to some of the observations made by the Senators from Utah and Pennsylvania and North Dakota. I do not want to make the reply until I offer the amendment, and when I have offered the amendment and made the suggestions I desire to make upon it, then, if there is no further discussion, I want a vote. I do not want to enter upon what more I have to say with the understanding that when I have finished the subject will go over for a day or more. I am quite at the disposal of the Senate in that respect. If we can go on with no understanding except that when we get through we vote, I am ready to go on.

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course, when we get through we will vote; but that is the burning question—when will we get through, and what constitutes getting through? Those are questions to be considered before the roll call.

Mr. CUMMINS. What I had in mind was, when we got through with the discussion, and I suppose we will not get through with it until every man in the Senate has said what he desires to say.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was just thinking about the time we would get through discussing these proposed tariff measures, and the first period to which my mind attached was about the 1st of November, in order that the Senators and Members may have time to go home and vote. That probably would appeal to us more than to adjourn to consider the necessity of going to the conventions. I presume we will want to make some arrangement between the two Houses for going home to vote.

Mr. President, I am not speaking entirely in jest. I have listened with much interest to the consideration of what somebody said yesterday, and on rereading yesterday's RECORD it occurred to me that we might by a general resolution order the printing of yesterday's RECORD as a part of to-day's RECORD.

The discussion yesterday seemed to center around the proposition whether we would reach a vote; whether Senators were sincere in pressing this legislation. Now, as I have said, and I will not repeat it at length, the primary duty of the Senate is to deal with the supply bills, and, so far as I am concerned, and as far as I can help to bring it about, there will not be any vote upon any tariff measure until after the passage of the appropriation bills.

Like the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], in this respect at least, I am quite able to stay here for the purpose of discussing these measures one by one as they are presented. My pay goes on the year round; my oath of office requires me to attend to the duties of Senator without regard to the number of days or weeks or months in the year; and the attention to the duties will not be complete until it appears that the Senate has reached the point of wisdom that would demand a vote. It would be a very great impropriety to vote upon a tariff measure at this time, especially upon this metal schedule. The details of the measure have been dealt with at some length, but I think I am safe in saying that there are other Senators who will give them further consideration. I have not yet completed the laying out, so to speak, of the proposition under consideration. The table is not fully spread. Some of the items are before us and some are not.

The result of this legislation is going to affect the prosperity of people outside of Congress more than it will the Members of the two Houses. When I say affect them, I mean in their prosperity and their right to enjoy prosperity.

There has been much discussion here about great business organizations now in existence and as to how these schedules would affect business enterprises now existing. I have not given one-tenth of the attention to that side of it that I have given to the question of new enterprise and the establishment and maintenance of conditions that will enable new enterprise to grow and flourish. If we were to legislate merely that those in business might continue in business, one rule would be applicable, but we are here to legislate for the opportunity of others than those now engaged in business to establish new enterprises.

I want to see considered the conditions that will affect the new steel mills, the new mines, the new enterprises. If we were to consider only—take it in the case of mines—the mines that now exist, we would be giving our attention to a fading proposition, and we would be protecting something that would destroy itself, regardless of the protection it received, by the exhaustion of the subject. The legislation we should give attention to is that which will affect the mines of to-morrow and to-morrow and to-morrow. Those who have been so situated as to be able to observe the conditions of mining know that all mines reach an end. No mines are perpetual. The farm produces and reproduces, but with the mine it is a question of exhausting its own capital by every ton of ore that is taken from it.

I am looking to the use and employment of capital that is not now engaged in these enterprises. That is opportunity again. We meet opportunity at every turn. Suppose a duty is proved to-day to be sufficient, based upon existing conditions; suppose all the mills now in operation might continue to operate under existing conditions; are we to give no consideration to the mills of to-morrow, to the capital of to-morrow, to the men of to-morrow? Are we going to exhaust ourselves in this generation? The very purpose stated in the first tariff act that was enacted was that it might encourage the building up of industries.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Apropos of the discussion that was going on this afternoon as to Senators and their manifest intention and desire to legislate on the subject, I suggest that there are 15 Members in the Senate Chamber. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	Lodge	Rayner
Bacon	Cummins	McCumber	Sanders
Bailey	Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Borah	Fall	Myers	Simmons
Bourne	Fletcher	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bradley	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Smoot
Bristow	Gore	Oliver	Stephenson
Bryan	Gronna	Overman	Sutherland
Catron	Heyburn	Page	Swanson
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Paynter	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Williams
Culberson	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is it not first in order to call the names of the absentees?

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no such rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no such rule. The motion of the Senator from New Hampshire is in order that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas and Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and responded to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is now present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I see it stated that on yesterday, I believe, in speaking of the Republican tariff platform, I am credited with speaking of the platform of 1864. That is either a misprint or it was an accidental remark on my part. There was no tariff platform in 1864. We were busily engaged in other matters. But I intended to refer to the platform of 1860. I am going to call the attention of Senators to the platform of 1860, because that was practically the beginning of the Republican Party and its tariff legislation. It reads:

> That while providing revenue for the support of the General Government by duties upon imports, sound policy requires such an adjustment of these imposts as to encourage the development of the industrial interests of the whole country; and we commend that policy of national exchanges which secures to the workingmen liberal wages, to agriculture remunerative prices, to mechanics and manufacturers an adequate reward for their skill, labor, and enterprise, and to the Nation commercial prosperity and independence.

That is the kind of ringing declaration which seems to have been forgotten at times since then. It is pretty nearly as strongly expressed in the first tariff act, before the making of platforms. The act of July 4, 1789, had a preamble, which reads:

> SECTION 1. Whereas it is necessary for the support of Government, for the discharge of the debts of the United States, and the encouragement and protection of manufactures that duties be laid on goods, wares, and merchandises imported.

That is the first declaration of Congress on any subject. The departments of the Government had not been organized at that time. Congress did not wait to organize the Government before enacting tariff legislation. There was no State Department or Secretary of State at that time. There was no War Department or Secretary of War at that time. There was no Treasury Department of the United States at that time. They were looking first to making provisions for something to put in the Treasury. They were looking first to making provisions for supporting the departments of the Government and giving them duties to perform. Between the enactment of the first tariff bill, the preamble of which I have read, and the purposes therein set forth, 23 days elapsed before we created the Department of State; nearly 3 months elapsed before we created the War Department; and more than 4 months elapsed before we created the Treasury Department.

I call attention to this to emphasize the importance of tariff legislation for the purpose of protection. In order that people might start off, that the wheels of industry might begin to revolve, it was necessary to overcome the conditions that had grown up and then existed out of the English tariff laws affecting our country, where we could not under the law make a horseshoe nail in this country, where we could not under the law engage in any enterprise in competition with an equivalent enterprise in England.

Will Senators wonder that we stand here persistent, even to the point of stubbornness, in the interest of protecting our people against the foreign industrial foe? We do it because there is nothing so important. We had spent eight long years protecting them against the general governmental policy of England, and we turned our attention immediately, when that was accomplished, to protecting them against commercial and industrial war.

I call attention to that at this time in connection with the declaration of the Republican Party when it first assumed the direction of the Government. The conditions following the Revolution and those confronting us in 1860 were not dissimilar, in that they involved on both occasions the preservation of the possibilities to the people to make a Government and to sustain it.

As I said, in 1864 and 1868 the tariff question was not an issue, because there were some undecided questions at that time which must necessarily precede the consideration of industrial conditions.

In 1872, which was the next succeeding national convention, the Republicans made this declaration:

> Revenue, except so much as may be derived from a tax on tobacco and liquors, should be raised by duties upon importations, the details of which should be so adjusted as to aid in securing remunerative wages to labor, and promote the industries, prosperity, and growth of the whole country.

Now, that platform breathes the very essence of the protective-tariff policy of the Republican Party. We were then confronted with the rehabilitation of the industries of the country that had been in some directions to some extent interfered with by the conditions that existed prior thereto.

In 1876, at the next recurring national convention, the Republican Party declared as follows:

> The revenue necessary for current expenditures and the obligations of the public debt must be largely derived from duties upon importations, which, so far as possible, should be adjusted to promote the interests of American labor and advance the prosperity of the whole country.

In those days we attached special importance to the labor, and we used that word then in a broad sense. Capital is only dross in the absence of labor. It can afford no livelihood for the people, not even for the possessor of it, except in connection with labor. You may take a handful of gold out on the highway, and you will find that it represents nothing more than a handful of pebbles until you come in contact with labor and its products. There for the first time your gold has the capacity of value.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I notice that there is only one Senator on the opposite side of the Chamber present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Johnson, Me.	Rayner
Bacon	Cullom	Johnston, Ala.	Sanders
Bankhead	Cummins	Lodge	Shively
Borah	Curtis	McCumber	Simmons
Bourne	Fall	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Bradley	Fletcher	Myers	Smoot
Bristow	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Stephenson
Bryan	Gore	Overman	Swanson
Catron	Gronna	Page	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Heyburn	Paynter	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Hitchcock	Pomerene

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] is absent on important public business.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is detained from the Senate on business of the Senate. He has a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], if a vote should be called. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to make the announcement that my colleague [Mr. PERCY] is absent because of a death in his family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names; not a quorum.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho moves that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for a division.

There were, on a division—ayes 12, noes 16.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. I do not know that the pair ought to control my vote in a matter of this sort, but, in order to be sure, I will observe the pair. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). Has the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted.

Mr. SWANSON. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay." If permissible under the rules, I should like to be recorded as present.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I had forgotten about it when I voted. I withdraw my vote, as this seems to be a party question.

Mr. CULBERSON (after having voted in the negative). I will ask if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted, the Chair is informed.

Mr. CULBERSON. In view of my general pair with that Senator, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce the pair of the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON] and the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. RAYNER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. OLIVER. Has the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the junior Senator from Oregon has not voted.

Mr. OLIVER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oregon and therefore withhold my vote. The junior Senator from Oregon requested me to announce that he was compelled to leave the Chamber on important business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GARDNER] is necessarily absent from the Senate. He is paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE.]

Mr. HEYBURN (after having voted in the affirmative). Mr. President, I voted. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. Seeing him in the room I took it for granted that I was at liberty to vote. I would ask if he did vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has voted.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then my vote will stand.

Mr. OLIVER. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). May I inquire if the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the senior Senator from California has not voted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], but he has released me from that pair on all these votes.

The roll call resulted—yeas 18, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bourne	Curtis	Lodge	Smoot
Bradley	Dillingham	McCumber	Stephenson
Bristow	Fall	Nelson	Wetmore
Catron	Gronna	Oliver
Cummins	Heyburn	Sanders

NAYS—25.

Ashurst	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Gore	Page	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Paynter	Tillman
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Pomerene	Williams
Clark, Wyo.	Johnston, Ala.	Reed
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Fletcher	Myers	Simmons

NOT VOTING—52.

Bailey	Cullom	Lippitt	Richardson
Borah	Davis	Lorimer	Root
Brandegee	Dixon	McLean	Smith, Md.
Briggs	du Pont	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.
Brown	Foster	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Burnham	Gamble	Nixon	Stone
Burton	Gardner	Overman	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Guggenheim	Owen	Swanson
Chilton	Jones	Penrose	Thornton
Clapp	Kenyon	Percy	Townsend
Crane	Kern	Perkins	Warren
Crawford	La Follette	Poindexter	Watson
Culberson	Lea	Rayner	Works

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the motion of the Senator from Idaho the yeas are 18 and the nays 25. The Senate refuses to adjourn. No quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. The Chair having suggested the absence of a quorum, there is no alternative but to call the roll.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to suggest that the names of the absentees be called.

Mr. CULBERSON. It will be necessary to call the roll first, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the Senate no quorum was disclosed. Then a motion was made to adjourn. That motion has been lost; but under the call of the Senate there is not a quorum present, and it is proposed to take proceedings under that call.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think not. There was no question raised. The Chair suggested the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was apparent on the vote.

Mr. CULBERSON. No Senator suggested the absence of a quorum. The Chair having suggested the absence of a quorum, I suggest now that the rule requires the roll to be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not suggest the absence of a quorum. It was disclosed by the call of the roll for a quorum.

Mr. CULBERSON. On the initiative of the Chair, the Chair declared that it appeared there was no quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It appeared on the face of the call.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is not the usual custom for the Chair to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was obliged to declare it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think not. I respectfully submit that there is nothing in the rule which requires the Chair to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair held that the proceeding is under the previous call. Nothing is in order now but to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON. On the call of the roll it was disclosed that there was no quorum present, upon which a motion was made to adjourn. On declaring the result upon the motion to adjourn, the Chair suggested—or, to use the language of the Chair, it was disclosed in the statement of the Chair—that on the roll call upon the motion to adjourn there was no quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not disclosed on that vote. It was disclosed on the previous call.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the roll be called.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit to the Chair that, it having been suggested by the Chair that there is no quorum present, the rule requires a call of the roll upon the question as to whether there is a quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was a call of the Senate, which disclosed the presence of only 43 Senators. There was only one motion in order, unless the Senate decided to proceed to compel the attendance of a quorum. That motion is a motion to adjourn. The failure of the motion to adjourn does not alter the fact disclosed by the roll call. The Senate is still proceeding under the roll call.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move, then——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not state it on the face of the vote upon the motion, but the Chair stated it under the original call of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let it be at that, then. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of the absentees.

Mr. OVERMAN. It seems to me that there ought to be a roll call, because there are a good many of us here who announced pairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is undoubtedly in order, if it is demanded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I demand a call of the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit that I myself suggested a roll call, and the Chair, as I understood it—I may have misunderstood the Chair—ruled that that could not be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not mean to hold that it could not be done. What the Chair indicated was that it was not necessary, as the Senate was proceeding under the previous call. If Senators desire to make the point of no quorum and have a second roll call, there is nothing to prevent it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the regular order, which is the call of the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Lodge	Sanders
Bacon	Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Borah	Dillingham	Myers	Simmons
Bourne	Fall	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Bradley	Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Gallinger	Oliver	Smoot
Bryan	Gore	Overman	Stephenson
Catron	Gronna	Page	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	Heyburn	Paynter	Wetmore
Clarke, Ark.	Hitchcock	Pomerene	Williams.
Culberson	Johnson, Me.	Rayner
Cullom	Johnston, Ala.	Reed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names, not a quorum.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND entered the Chamber, and answered to his name.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. CULBERSON and Mr. SIMMONS called for a division.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 22, noes 18.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion prevails.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON].

Mr. O'GORMAN (when his name was called). I do not see the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], with whom I have a general pair, in the Chamber. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. Were he present I should vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

In this connection I desire also to state that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON].

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a general pair, as I have stated; but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the senior Senator from Indiana has not voted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN. As already announced, I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 23, as follows:

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I presume the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], which was interrupted by the motion to adjourn, is now in order?

Mr. CULBERSON. My motion was for the Sergeant at Arms to request the presence of absentees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair's remembrance is that that motion was put and agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes; but it was interrupted by the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the motion of the Senator from Texas was agreed to and is in force.

Mr. CUMMINS. Did not the last vote disclose the presence of a quorum?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It did not.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it not true that enough Senators have announced pairs, coupled with those who voted, to make a majority of all the Senators?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been the practice of the Senate to count as present, in order to make a quorum, those Senators who announce pairs and refrain from voting.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me—I do not know much about the rule—that one who is present for the purpose of announcing a pair must necessarily be present for the purpose of making a quorum. However, I yield to the better judgment of older Senators.

Mr. CULBERSON. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the execution of the order of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if it be in order, I will move that the roll be called, as the call of the roll would disclose the presence of a quorum. Senators present who refrained from voting, but announced pairs, will make up a quorum of the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think at least there might be called the list of absentees, as disclosed by the roll call when we were seeking to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. Nothing is in order——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the roll of absentees be called.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there anything in order other than the motion to adjourn until the order of the Senate has been executed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not until a quorum is developed——

Mr. SMOOT. Until a quorum is developed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And there are only two ways of developing a quorum that the Chair knows of, and they are to call the roll or to call the roll of absentees.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think a call of the roll of absentees will show that a quorum is present.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggested awhile ago a call of the absentees, but the Chair overruled the suggestion, if I mistake not. I made the motion——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not aware that the Senator suggested a call of the absentees at all.

Mr. CULBERSON. I made the point of order that, instead of calling the absentees, the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the presence of the absentees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order was entered.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the regular order, then, to execute the order of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the regular order, and that order is supposed to be in execution; but the Chair takes it that it is within the power of the Senate at any time to call the roll of absentees if it so desires.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If a Senator in the room, who did not answer to his name at the roll call which disclosed the want of a quorum, were to rise in his place and have his name called it would be just as effective as though the Sergeant at Arms brought him into the Chamber, would it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair understands, that is the purpose of calling the roll of absentees.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the roll be called.

Mr. OVERMAN. I demand a call of the absentees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been asked for and ordered. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary proceeded to call the names of the absentees, and Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. KERN, and Mr. MCCUMBER answered to their names.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Secretary is calling the wrong roll, because I know I announced a pair. I am here present, and I know of several others who announced pairs who are not recorded on the last roll call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary informs the Chair that he did not call the name of the Senator from North Carolina. He called the name of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. OVERMAN. But he ought to have called my name. The calling of the names of those who were here and announced pairs would develop a quorum, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recorded on the call for a quorum. The absentees being called are not those on the yea-and-nay list on the motion to adjourn, but those who failed to respond to the call for a quorum.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the call proceed.

The Secretary continued and concluded the calling of the list of absentees.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I notice that the Secretary called the name of my colleague [Mr. BURNHAM] as an absentee. My colleague voted in the affirmative on the motion to adjourn, and if he is not recorded in that way he ought to be so recorded, and that would have carried the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will allow the Chair a moment, the absentees are those who appeared as absent on the call for a quorum, and not those who failed to respond to their names on the yea-and-nay vote on the motion to adjourn, because the vote on the motion to adjourn does not require a quorum.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that; but, if the Chair will pardon me, it seems to me that the other procedure ought to be a proper one—to call the absentees who did not vote on the motion to adjourn. Some of them would appear and vote, and that would settle the matter of adjournment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, Mr. President, that is right. On the yea-and-nay vote the result was announced 23 to 23, but it developed on that vote that there were four or five who were here and who are here now who announced pairs. The Sergeant at Arms can not bring them in, and it seems to me the absentees on that yea-and-nay vote ought to be called. That vote developed that there was no quorum voting, but if the absentees on that vote are called that would show that there is a quorum. How can we get along unless we do that? The Sergeant at Arms can not go and bring me in. I am here and have been here all the time, but I did not vote because I was paired with the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS.].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recorded as present on the roll call.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I was paired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is recorded on the call for a quorum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I announced a pair, and therefore when the Chair stated the result as 23 to 23 I was not included in that vote, because I was paired, and so were several other Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the roll call which disclosed the absence of a quorum the Senator is recorded as being present. The Senator has never been absent according to the roll call.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, that is so. I was here then and responded to my name, but when the Chair announced the vote on the motion to adjourn as 23 to 23 I am not recorded as voting. That is also true of several other Senators who responded to their names on the first roll call. Now, if the Sergeant at Arms is executing the order of the Senate he can not do so as to me, and he can not execute it as to half a dozen others who are here. We know that a quorum is present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that the call of the absentees has developed a quorum.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, business having intervened, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks he is bound to state first that a quorum has been developed by the call of the absentees. Forty-nine Senators are present. If there be no objection, the order directing the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators will be rescinded. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes appear to have it.

Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and others called for a division.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). Because of my general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I have a pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. O'GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], and will withhold my vote.

Mr. OLIVER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. He is not present. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. STEPHENSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I desire to inquire whether the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). With the transfer of pairs by which the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] stands paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] I will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a pair, as I have stated. I transfer it to the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FOSTER entered the Chamber and voted.

Mr. WARREN. Noting that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], with whom I stand paired, is present, I withdraw the announcement I made pairing the Senator from Louisiana with the Senator from Iowa, and as the Senator from Louisiana has voted, I shall allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 22, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 27, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 25, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in whom all our longings, hopes, and aspirations are centered, we approach Thee in the spirit of Him who taught us to pray—

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors, and lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE AT SUNDAY SESSION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair assigns the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. LOBECK, to preside to-morrow at the memorial exercises for the late Judge LATTA.

LESLIE J. LYONS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged resolution (H. Res. 488).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with public interest, to transmit forthwith to the House of Representatives a copy of the charges filed against Leslie J. Lyons, United States district attorney for the western district of Missouri, together with the report of Arthur T. Bagley, special agent detailed by the Department of Justice to investigate said charges, and a statement of the action of the Department of Justice, if any, upon said charges and report.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution of inquiry directed to the Attorney General, and it is in the same form as House resolution 439, which was passed by the House on March 12, 1912. It may appear——

Mr. CANNON. Is the resolution privileged?

Mr. BORLAND. The resolution is privileged.

Mr. PAYNE. Has it been reported by the committee?

Mr. BORLAND. It has been reported by the committee. I want to explain that this resolution is in the same form as the resolution of March 12, 1912. It calls for a report of the special examiner of the Department of Justice on the official conduct of the United States district attorney, Mr. Lyons, for the western district of Missouri.

Some time in December, 1911, some charges were filed against Mr. Lyons which, among other things, were that he was attorney for companies that were supposed to be violating the Federal law in reference to the fraudulent use of the mails. An investigation was made by the department under the charge of a man by the name of Bagley. That investigation was completed some time in February. At the time it was filed it was not made public, and has not been made public since. At that time there was pending against Mr. Lyons disbarment proceedings in the State courts of Missouri. On March 12 the House adopted the resolution 439, requesting the Department of Justice to transmit all papers relating to the charges against Lyons, and especially the Bagley report. March 13 the Attorney General replied, declining to submit them, on the ground that it was incompatible with the public interest so to do. He said that there were disbarment proceedings pending in the State courts of Missouri, and he did not think it advisable to transmit the papers. On April 5, the disbarment proceedings having terminated by a failure and dismissal of the case, the Attorney General sent to the Judiciary Committee the opinion of the State court of Missouri, with this statement:

This decision deals with substantially all the charges filed against Mr. Lyons with this department, and acquits him of any improper conduct in connection with any of them.

Thereafter I immediately filed the same resolution, in the same terms, on the ground that the proceedings in the State court of Missouri did not cover the charges filed with the Department of Justice, and that they did not substantially dispose of those charges nor acquit Mr. Lyons of official misconduct in connection therewith.

That second resolution calling for Mr. Bagley's report was heard by the Committee on the Judiciary and by it reported favorably. Now, it develops that on the same day the Attorney General wrote the Committee on the Judiciary that all the charges were substantially disposed of by a decision of the court of appeals, he wrote a letter to Mr. Lyons himself, in which he used this language:

One other point remains to be mentioned, and that is the matter of your employment as attorney for the Oregon Valley Land Co. (see pp. 42 to 70 and 73 to 82 of Bagley's report). Mr. Bagley's report contains much data with reference to this matter which appears not to have been before the Kansas City Court of Appeals. This evidence seems to clearly indicate that the concerns referred to have been under investigation by the Post Office Department at different times; that they may become the objects of a criminal prosecution; and that they are not of a character which would tend to strengthen your usefulness as United States attorney. After reading Mr. Bagley's report on this subject, I feel that it would be very desirable for you to sever your professional connection with those concerns.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the gentleman reading from a letter from the Attorney General?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How did the gentleman from Missouri get that letter?

Mr. BORLAND. I have a copy of it, but I am not at liberty to state how I obtained it. I feel very sure that it is a correct copy, and if not, the Attorney General and Mr. Lyons are both familiar with the facts and can correct me if I am wrong about the contents of the letter.

I want to say that this shows that on April 5 the Attorney General transmitted to the House a statement saying that all the charges against Mr. Lyons were disposed of. On the same day he wrote this, calling Mr. Lyons's attention to the specific portion of the Bagley report stating these matters are not disposed of by the Kansas City Court of Appeals.

It has also come to my knowledge, a fact which I laid before the Judiciary Committee, that Mr. Lyons was not only connected with the Oregon Valley Land Co., but he was connected with some of the Florida land swindles, the evidence of which is largely a matter of record.

Now it is necessary, and I think the Attorney General will concede that it is entirely proper to transmit to the House the Bagley report in reference to the United States district attorney in order that we may take proper action in regard to this official.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman know whether or not the Attorney General has been made acquainted with these new additional charges in reference to the Florida land schemes?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; the Attorney General had the matter referred to one of his assistants by the name of Harr. I have been there several times and had one or two talks with Mr. Harr, and I told him plainly and frankly that the proceedings of the Kansas City Court of Appeals related to individual matters with various lawyers and was not sufficiently strong to result in disbarment; that such proceedings would probably fail, but that the most important and grave matter was Mr. Lyons's connection with companies operating all over the United States through the mail in land-fraud schemes, and called his attention to some of the evidence which I then had.

Mr. DYER. I do not know whether my colleague is a member of the Judiciary Committee or not.

Mr. BORLAND. No; I am not.

Mr. DYER. Is this done at the request or direction of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; this matter was heard by a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, and there were four Republicans and one Democrat present. They were unanimous in reporting the resolution a second time. It was then reported by the full committee. I was not present when the full committee acted upon it, but I understand there was no opposition to it in the full committee, and they agreed to the entire propriety of this report being laid before the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 24565, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. HULL in the chair.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder"——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment at the end of the last paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "proposals," in line 6, page 19, insert the following: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the procuring or producing of such ordnance material and for such armament of ships as manufactured in a Government establishment from or by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of commencement and during the prosecution of such work established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged or to be engaged in the work on the materials and armament named herein."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that the section to which this is an amendment was read on yesterday and completed, and it is now too late to offer an amendment, after the Clerk has begun the reading of the succeeding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, with reference to that point of order, that the gentleman from Illinois had sought recognition before the Clerk began to read.

Mr. PADGETT. I also make the further point of order that it is a change in existing law, and is new legislation. This paragraph was completed yesterday, and the House adjourned, and it is too late to offer an amendment to a paragraph that was completed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, as to the first point of order, I endeavored to secure the floor before the Clerk started to read the other paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has overruled the first point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee for the reason stated.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Second, Mr. Chairman, I want to say there is such legislation now as applied to an appropriation bill. It is not new legislation. The current naval appropriation bill carries a paragraph similar to this. Therefore it is not new legislation. I do not care to take up the time of the Chair further. It seems to me this is a poor way to try to defeat something that has been established by this Congress for some time.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the provisions of the current law are only law current with the appropriation bill itself. They do not establish any permanent law, unless they purport to be permanent law. The provision in last year's appropriation bill was limited to and applied only to that bill; hence it is not permanent law. Furthermore, it did not apply to this paragraph, and was under the increase of the Navy.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if this point of order was raised when this amendment was offered in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not able to say.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I will ask the Chair the same question.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say to the gentleman that it is my purpose, when we reach the other part of the bill, to see if we can not agree upon the insertion of a general provision in the bill that will cover the whole question of the 8-hour law and not make it applicable to different portions of the bill. Hence I make the point of order at this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment be left open for consideration at that time, in case we do not come to an agreement, that would be satisfactory to me. I have some other amendments on the same subject to offer to other parts of the bill. I would like to have this left open for consideration in case we do not agree upon the provisions that the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection, but I want to say to the gentleman I have nothing to conceal about it. My idea was we would then incorporate into the bill the provisions embodied in the bill as it passed the House or may soon become a law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will be satisfied to accept that, leaving this pending in case it is not accepted. If it is accepted, then the amendments I have to offer need not be considered.

Mr. PADGETT. I have no objection to its being left that way, pending with the point of order reserved. I do not think it is good legislation to be injecting it all through the bill at different places.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of mine be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the amendments offered be considered as pending for the present. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I object. Let the amendments be offered at the proper place, when the proper place is reached, and the point of order made against them then.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would ask my colleague to reserve his objection.

Mr. PADGETT. I stated I was perfectly willing to pass the further consideration of this paragraph.

Mr. MADDEN. This paragraph was adopted, if I understood it correctly.

Mr. PADGETT. The Chairman ruled it had not been finally concluded. I made a point of order that the reading of the paragraph was concluded on adjournment yesterday afternoon.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. PADGETT. But the Chair ruled otherwise.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will say I do not think the gentleman's position is well taken. The fact is there was an amendment voted on the last thing of the session on yesterday afternoon.

Mr. MADDEN. And defeated.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And the amendment was defeated; but the amendment was not of this nature, and that certainly leaves the paragraph open for further amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think it is necessary to discuss that, as the Chair has ruled and we have accepted his ruling.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask my colleague what objection he has to my request to pass this paragraph for the present, and here is the reason that I am satisfied to leave it pending: In case the bill which the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs said he was going to offer, covering this whole matter, as I understand it, is accepted, these amendments will not be then necessary; but in case his proposition is not agreed to, then I would like to have the matter open for the consideration of these amendments.

Mr. MADDEN. What I understood my colleague to ask unanimous consent for was this: To have pending amendments to several paragraphs covering the eight-hour question.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman asked that the further consideration of this paragraph and this amendment be passed, not for other amendments but for this one paragraph and this one amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. My understanding was he asked unanimous consent to have pending a number of amendments.

Mr. BUCHANAN. On the same question. I desire to state the purpose of my amendment. This material that is being purchased by the Government I desire to be purchased from firms that have established the 8-hour day.

Mr. MADDEN. And I am opposed to that, I will say to my colleague.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman is opposed to it and the gentleman can oppose it when it comes up later as well as now, but the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs says he expects to offer the 8-hour bill as it passed here which will cover the same thing, as I understand it. If that provision is accepted in the bill then these amendments I have to offer will not be necessary to be considered. They will be considered after the provisions which the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs says he will offer at the end of the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I think there ought not to be a blanket system of amendments understood as pending against various unknown paragraphs of this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They are all on the same subject and if this provision suggested by the chairman of the committee is adopted it will cover them all.

Mr. MADDEN. If my colleague remains in his seat and watches the consideration of the bill when the paragraph to which an amendment would be germane is reached he can introduce his amendment, but I am going to object to having various blanket amendments pending against paragraphs we do not know anything about.

Mr. PADGETT. The proposition now is, if I may state it to the gentleman, is simply this, that on this paragraph he offers this amendment, and when we reach other paragraphs when he offers amendments to them we will dispose of them as we come to them.

Mr. MADDEN. That is the point. I simply wanted to object to permission being granted to offer a number of amendments that we do not know anything about to a number of paragraphs, when reached.

Mr. HOWARD. I understood the Chair to overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] that this amendment was out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that he did not pass on the second point of order, that it is new legislation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be considered as pending and that the section be passed.

Mr. PADGETT. That is, subject of course to the point of order that is pending against the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. To be sure.

Mr. PADGETT. And when passing the section or paragraph, it does not mean that any other amendment can be offered to it later on.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will permit me, on yesterday afternoon when this House adjourned the situation was this: The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] introduced an amendment. After some discussion a vote was taken upon that amendment and the gentleman from Massachusetts made the point of order that no quorum was present. Before the Chair could finish counting the number present in the House the gentleman from Massachusetts withdrew the point of no quorum, and a vote was taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY]. Thereupon, immediately after that vote was taken, and without reading any other portion of this bill, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] moved that the committee rise. The committee rose, and then the House adjourned. This morning the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] offers an amendment to the very paragraph, or at the very point in the reading of the bill where the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] offered his amendment on yesterday afternoon. Now, if I understand the Chair, the Chair overruled the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]. Why is not the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] in order?

The CHAIRMAN. For the reason that an additional point of order was made against it by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], which is now pending. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent made by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MADDEN. If it applies to any paragraph than the one which is being considered now, I shall object.

Mr. PADGETT. It is only this paragraph and this particular amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The request applies only to the paragraph to which the amendment was offered.

Mr. MADDEN. If that is all, I have no objection. If it applies to any other paragraph, I have.

Mr. PADGETT. Only this amendment and not other amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, $1,150,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 7 and 8, page 19, and insert:
"Manufacture of smokeless powder, $900,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the provision that this amendment would strike from the bill provides for the purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, $1,150,000. The amendment provides for the Government manufacture of smokeless powder and cuts down the appropriation $250,000. According to the testimony before the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Government could manufacture with $900,000 more smokeless powder than it can buy with $1,150,000. The testimony before the Committee on Naval Affairs is that the cheapest powder that has been purchased by the Government was purchased at the rate of 60 cents a pound. Last year the Navy purchased 3,000,000 pounds of powder. The Army and the Navy combined purchased 5,728,826 pounds of powder. Admiral Twining testifies that the actual cost of manufacturing powder at Indianhead is 33.6 cents per pound.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. GOOD. As soon as I get through.

Mr. MADDEN. That is a good place. What does he include in the cost?

Mr. GOOD. The cost includes all material, all labor, and everything that goes into the manufacture of powder, except the admiral does not include interest on the investment; he does not include depreciation nor the pay of the officers' salaries. Let me remind the gentleman from Illinois, however, that the same depreciation is going on whether we manufacture 3,000,000 pounds or half a million pounds. The same officers' salaries will be paid whether we manufacture any powder or not; and the same interest on the investment must be borne whether we manufacture part of our powder or manufacture all of it. So every pound of powder that we manufacture now in excess of the million pounds that was manufactured last year will, at the utmost, not cost the Government to exceed 33.6 cents per pound.

I want to remind gentlemen on this side of the aisle who have been talking loud and long about economy that here is an opportunity to practice real economy. The purchase of 3,000,000 pounds of smokeless powder at 60 cents a pound will cost the Government of the United States $1,800,000; but if we manufacture that powder, the 3,000,000 pounds, at 33.6 cents per pound, we will effect a saving to the Government of $792,000 on this one item alone. And I want to say here that we have ample capacity to manufacture it all. Admiral Twining said we have capacity at Indianhead to manufacture 3,000,000 pounds of powder, and that we have the capacity at the Government arsenal at Dover, N. J., to manufacture 3,000,000 pounds for the Army, or a capacity to manufacture 6,000,000 pounds of powder altogether, which is 50,000 pounds more than the combined quantity that was purchased and manufactured during the past year.

What does that mean? It means that if the Government of the United States will manufacture its powder it will save every year on 5,728,886 pounds $1,512,425. Oh, but some one may say, "We are building up here a private institution in time of peace that will be valuable to the Government in time of war." I have read statements to that effect for 25 years, and what is the ultimate result? When the Spanish-American War broke out the Powder Trust did not have capacity for manufacturing smokeless powder, and they purchased from Germany the brown powder, and our gunners had to use it. What was the result? We had the best ships in the world, and we had the finest guns in the world. Our gunners surpassed in marksmanship the gunners of the world. And yet, with that brown powder at Santiago, we made less than 5 hits per 100 shots. To-day, after we have increased the quality of the powder, the same gunners, with the same guns and the same ships, are making more than 80 hits per 100 shots.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPP. The gentleman in his enthusiasm made the statement that the same gunners, with the same guns and the same ships, are making 80 per cent of hits where they made only 5 per cent in the Spanish-American War. Does the gentleman think that that even approaches the truth and the facts? [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. I understand that that is the record of the Navy.

Mr. KOPP. It is not a fact, for the reason that they used different guns, different gunners, and different ships. They have now improved the sighting and the firing apparatus at least 300 per cent—so it is estimated by the naval authorities—since the Spanish-American War, and they have improved the guns themselves—the rifling; and these are the main reasons why the gunnery has improved, and not on account of any great improvement in the powder.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman evidently has not read the reports and opinions of naval experts on the subject. If he had he would find that we had the poorest powder in those battles that the Government ever used in any conflict. [Applause.]

Mr. KOPP. If the gentleman will yield, I am willing to concede that, but I would like to ask the gentleman to give us his authority for his statement, that the powder is responsible for the low percentage of hits.

Mr. GOOD. Well, I will concede to the gentleman that we have been making improvements all along the line; we have made improvements in sighting and in gun practice and in ships and guns, but I want to say that it is the judgment of military men that the low percentage of hits at Santiago was due to the poor brown powder that was purchased by the Du Pont Co. from Germany, which was used in those guns. And in saying this I do so, not to detract but rather to add to the glory of our Navy in that great battle.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. KOPP. Who are the military authorities that the gentleman refers to?

Mr. GOOD. I have never seen that statement disputed, and I have seen the claim made a great many times.

Mr. KOPP. I do not deny the inefficiency of the powder, but I deny the assertion that military and naval authorities claim that the low percentage of hits was due to the powder.

Mr. GOOD. I suppose the gentleman has never discovered that we had very poor powder that was furnished by the Powder Trust during the Spanish-American War.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman think it is a fair test to compare accuracy of marksmanship when merely practicing with accuracy of marksmanship in the heat of battle?

Mr. GOOD. That may or may not be. I am not a military expert, and am not qualified to answer a question of that kind.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Would the gentleman think it fair to compare his own marksmanship when merely shooting at a target and his marksmanship when shooting at a man who was pointing a gun directly at him when the all-important question was which hit the other first?

Mr. GOOD. I can readily see how in the heat of battle a gunner might not have the same cool, deliberate judgment that he would have when he was simply practicing.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have the gentleman from Iowa tell the committee, if he can, in what respect the powder has anything to do with determining the direction of the shell toward the object at which it is pointed? Would it affect anything except the force of the shot?

Mr. GOOD. I am not a military expert and not able to enlighten the gentleman on that subject.

Mr. MADDEN. How can the powder have anything to do with the question whether they make a hit or a miss?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Poor powder would make a gun dirty, I should imagine.

Mr. GOOD. I have never seen the statement disputed before that the poor record of American gunners in the battle of Santiago was due to the poor powder. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have read with great interest the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I have been astounded at the efforts that were made by members of the committee to try to have Admiral Twining increase the figures that he had testified to as to the cost to the Government of manufacturing powder.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. The gentleman attributes the poor marksmanship at Santiago to the inferior powder used. To what does he attribute the good marksmanship of Dewey's men at Manila?

Mr. GOOD. I will say that Dewey's fleet was supplied with smokeless power and was not forced to use the brown powder that had been purchased by the Powder Trust from Germany.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman make that as a statement of fact?

Mr. GOOD. I have seen that stated. Of course I do not know it to be a fact.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman that that is on a par with his statement that military authorities give the brown powder as a reason for the poor marksmanship at Santiago.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I will not be drawn into side issues in order to give the Powder Trust by this appropriation $750,000 more than they are entitled to. The issue here is whether the Government of the United States shall continue to give this greatest monopoly, which has been declared by the Federal court of Delaware to be a trust in restraint of trade, unreasonable profits on Government purchases. You gentlemen on that side have been saying in your platforms that you do not believe in this kind of legislation and that you will enact legislation that will prevent the very existence of the trusts, but here you are providing in an appropriation bill $792,000 profits to the Powder Trust.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEALD. The gentleman says the powder manufacturers were responsible for the poor marksmanship of some of the ships of the Navy. I will ask the gentleman if he agrees with the opinion of Admiral Knight that the powder manufacturers are entirely at the mercy of the Government, and that the Government is not at the mercy of the manufacturers of powder?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know what that has to do with this issue. The issue here is whether the Government shall continue to manufacture powder at Indianhead and at the Army arsenals. I have no disposition to fight over the battle of Santiago.

We have passed two appropriation bills—one the Army appropriation bill and one the fortification bill—and now we are considering a bill that carries $1,150,000 for powder; and I am asking you on that side of the House, who have said that you were in favor of economy, whether or not you favor the manufacture of smokeless powder at Indianhead, which will produce more powder than the Government can use, or whether we shall continue giving lucrative contracts to the Powder Trust.

Mr. GARNER. What percentage of the Members on the gentleman's side of the House will he deliver?

Mr. GOOD. I am not speaking for my side of the House; I am appealing to the good judgment of that side to say whether or not you will carry out your declarations of economy.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that when the gentleman appeals to patriotism he appeals to this side of the House and leaves his side alone. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. How much is the Government now paying for powder?

Mr. GOOD. The last contract entered into by the joint board was 60 cents per pound.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And what does the gentleman say it will cost the Government to manufacture it, the same quality of powder?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know; but according to the testimony of Admiral Twining, the cost to the Government is 33.6 cents per pound.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What are the facilities for the Government manufacturing powder? Are they sufficient to produce and manufacture all the powder that the Government needs?

Mr. GOOD. Admiral Twining, on page 54 of the hearings, says that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, the Navy purchased 3,000,000 pounds of the Du Pont Powder Co., at 60 cents a pound, and that the capacity of the powder mill at Indianhead is 3,000,000 pounds per annum.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What arguments are advanced why the Government should not manufacture its own powder and save money?

Mr. GOOD. The only argument is that we should continue to pay the large profits to the Du Pont Powder Co., the only company that manufactures smokeless powder, and which has been declared by the Federal court in Delaware to be a trust and in restraint of trade, in order that that concern might supply powder in time of war.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. They do not actually urge that as argument against the Government manufacturing powder, do they?

Mr. GOOD. That is the only reason that has been urged here so far, and that is the only reason, the only argument that the gentleman from Michigan will hear urged here to-day.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. In the gentleman's investigation in the cost and manufacture and price of powder paid to the Powder Trust, did he find that there was a difference between that paid to the Powder Trust and the cost of manufacture to the Government of about 14.7 cents; that the Government paid that much more than it cost to manufacture?

Mr. GOOD. According to the testimony of Admiral Twining the difference is 26.4 cents; that is the difference between what we paid and what it cost the Government to manufacture.

Mr. HOWARD. What was the amount of powder used last year by the Army and the Navy?

Mr. GOOD. A little over five and a half million pounds.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. SIMS. Why should the country in a time of war be dependent upon any outside or private interest for the necessary material to successfully wage the war?

Mr. GOOD. I can not think of a single reason.

Mr. SIMS. If the Government powder manufactory is not sufficient to manufacture all that we need, and if we now manufacture a part, why should not the facilities for manufacturing be increased?

Mr. GOOD. The bill we are considering provides for increased facilities at Indianhead.

Mr. SIMS. What is the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. GOOD. The proposition in the bill is for the purchase and manufacture of powder, and my amendment provides for the manufacture of smokeless powder, and cuts down the appropriation for smokeless powder a quarter of a million dollars.

Mr. SIMS. Can the Government manufacture a sufficient amount of smokeless powder for its use until the increased facilities are provided for?

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely. The Navy is not equipped to manufacture quite that much. We are only running one shift, but by running three shifts of 8 hours each, it could be manufactured more cheaply, and we could manufacture 3,000,000 pounds.

Mr. SIMS. Is it against the law to work two or three shifts?

Mr. GOOD. No; both the Du Ponts and the Government at times use three shifts of 8 hours each.

Mr. SIMS. There is nothing in the organic law to prevent it?

Mr. GOOD. Nothing absolutely.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask one other question. What is the custom of other countries in this respect?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for two minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to cut off debate, but there have already been two extensions of time. We must get on with this bill. I shall not object to this, but I give notice now that hereafter, when there will be no personality in the matter at all, I am not going to consent to an extension of time indefinitely.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Iowa may be extended for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I want to ask the gentleman a question. What is the custom of other countries in this respect? Do they manufacture their own powder or do they buy powder? What, for illustration, is the custom of Germany.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I could not tell the gentleman what the practice or custom is in Germany. I think the custom in France is for the Government to manufacture all of the powder; not only the military powder used by the Government, but France enforces a monopoly in the manufacture of powder and manufactures the powder for her army and navy, but the Government sells powder to individuals. We went into that question a little with Gen. Crozier, who testified that he did not have actual knowledge as to the cost of manufacturing powder in Germany and could not give us a statement as to the relative cost in this and other countries.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What about England?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know.

Mr. HEALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HEALD. Is it not a fact that the gentleman's attitude on the question of powder supplies to the Navy is at direct variance with the recommendations of the Navy Department and the officers therein?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think it is fair to say that both the Army and Navy—Gen. Crozier for the Army and Admiral Twining for the Navy—believe the old policy of the Government of letting contracts to private individuals, not only for powder, but for the building of guns and limbers, ought to be continued. But, Mr. Chairman, in that connection it seems to me that Congress ought to have something to say. Gen. Crozier pointed out that we were paying for limbers and guns as high as 127 per cent more in purchasing them than it was costing the Government to manufacture them at its arsenals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What is the argument of these gentlemen?

Mr. GOOD. Why, they have no argument. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] has heard none. He will hear none.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not hold any brief for the Du Pont Powder Co. They have been practically the only powder company in this country for a great many years. They have furnished powder in every war in the history of this country from the Revolutionary War down to the present time, but that is not material here. So far as the question of trusts and monopolies is concerned, that will be settled in the courts. I suppose every day we are buying for the Government some supplies from trusts and monopolies, but the question of trusts and monopolies ought not to enter into this proposition. All such questions should be determined by the courts.

We must have powder for the Navy. We are spending $125,000,000 every year for the Navy, and yet the expenditure of this money is absolutely thrown to waste unless we have proper powder. Our guns and ships are worth nothing unless we have the powder, and it is a very small amount of money, comparatively speaking, that we use for the purchase of powder—$1,800,000 a year—a little over 1 per cent. Yet powder is the most important thing in connection with the Navy, because we could not use the guns and the ships without it. We do not want, by any action of ours, to cut down the efficiency of our powder or powder supply. We want the best powder and plenty of it, and our Government has pursued in the past, I think, a policy which has been wise and which has brought us to the condition to-day where we are using the best powder, in my judgment, of any navy in the world.

Some years ago, and it has only been in recent years, we discovered that the Government could manufacture this powder. The Committee on Naval Affairs recommended, I believe, an appropriation for the establishment of a powder factory, and Congress passed it; and let me say in this connection that the Du Pont Powder Co. cooperated with the Government and gave all its information, all its improvements in the manufacture of powder, to the Government free and clear, without any charge whatever. We are now manufacturing powder in connection with our Navy, and we have increased the capacity of the plant year after year, as fast as the Navy Department has advised, until to-day we manufacture—or did last year—a little over one million pounds of powder. We are in favor of increasing the manufacture; but at the same time I believe it is a wise policy on the part of this Government to give part of the contract to private concerns. I believe it is wise to encourage private powder manufacture, because in times of war it is infinitely easier for private concerns to extend their capacity than it is for the Government of the United States; and in time of war and great emergency it will take all the capacity of the Government plants and all the capacity of these private powder-manufacturing plants to supply the powder that we need.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Let me say another thing——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that he be given five minutes more time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSS. Now, there is one thing which increases the cost of powder to a private concern: They do not manufacture all their powder in one factory. They have a number of factories in a position so that in times of war they can furnish us a large amount of powder.

Now, so far as my friend from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is concerned in relation to the question of black powder, we did use black powder in the Spanish-American War. Smokeless powder is of a comparatively recent origin. There have been improvements in powder since the Spanish-American War, and improvements are going on to-day; but the specifications for powder during the Spanish-American War and before it and specifications for powder now, as I understand it, are made up in the Navy Department, and this company has to conform to the specifications of the Navy Department.

So far as the price of powder is concerned, that has been reduced, and now we are paying 60 cents a pound when only two years ago we paid 67 cents. How is that price fixed? Not by the Du Pont Powder Co., but by a joint Army and Navy board.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, yes.

Mr. GOOD. From what concern could the Government buy powder except from the Du Pont de Nemours—I refer to smokeless powder?

Mr. FOSS. That is the only concern that makes smokeless powder to-day except the Government.

Mr. GOOD. Then it is in a position to absolutely dictate the price, except as we limit the price that the Government can pay.

Mr. FOSS. I doubt if you can get any concern to go into the manufacture of powder when the only purchaser for it is the Government of the United States; and we buy a comparatively small amount. Why, the powder furnished by the Du Pont concern to the United States Government is only a small fraction of the tremendous business done by that great company—about 5 per cent, so the gentleman from Delaware tells me. Now, I said a moment ago the price of powder which we buy has been fixed by this General Army and Navy Board for a number of years, and it is based upon the actual cost to the Government in the manufacture of powder, so that the Government of the United States for a number of years has practically fixed the price and holds the whole matter in its hands.

Now, what about the cost of powder abroad? I am informed we are purchasing our powder cheaper than any country abroad, with the exception, possibly, of England, which country uses a cheaper powder—a cordite powder and a cheaper powder than ours. Germany pays 85 cents a pound for her powder. France manufactures powder which costs, I think, about 70 cents a pound.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him if the general quality of powder which France has manufactured in her national plant would be regarded as being as good as the powder we get or other Governments get by purchase?

Mr. FOSS. No; I do not think it is regarded as being as good. I know in one of our hearings it was stated by an expert that the French powder was not as good as ours.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have five minutes additional.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I have not any objection, but I just want to ask if the Chairman is going to enforce the rule on this side of the House and let it go on that.

Mr. PADGETT. I did make an exception. We had four extensions—three extensions and the original one—and this is the second extension on that side.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I understood him to say he would object to extensions by anybody.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I said I was not going to permit indeterminate extensions; that was the language I used.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Is there anything in the hearings this year that would indicate any test or comparison between our smokeless powder and that manufactured by the French Government?

Mr. FOSS. No; I think there is nothing.

Mr. GOOD. And, further, I will ask the gentleman if the officers of the Army and Navy have not refused to state at all times any difference in the quality now used by the two respective Governments? Is not that the case?

Mr. FOSS. I think it is true that they have not. They have stated confidentially, and it is not in the record. Sometimes, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa, we have confidential hearings, which we can not show in the record.

Mr. SIMS. Is the powder which the Government of the United States manufactures as good as that which it buys?

Mr. FOSS. I think it is just as good.

Mr. SIMS. So far as that is concerned, there is no reason for buying it from private individuals?

Mr. FOSS. The only question is as to the advisability of keeping in operation a private concern which we may have to call upon in time of war and in times of great emergency. We think it is a wise Government policy, so long as the Government fixes the price.

Mr. SIMS. In time of peace we keep on hand a vast number of warships that we do not need at all in order to have them when we do need them. Why not pursue the same policy in regard to the powder? Why not have a capacity in time of peace that we do need in time of war?

Mr. FOSS. Here is a concern which is interested in the manufacturing of powder all the time, and here is a Government concern. Improvements are going on all the time in the manufacture of powder, and the high standard of our powder is due in no small measure to the fact that we kept these two establishments, the Government establishment and the private establishment, working for the interests of the Government.

Mr. SIMS. Do they compete with each other in improvement of powder and in methods of manufacture? Is that the idea?

Mr. FOSS. A competition; yes. In that connection I will say that whenever the Du Pont Co. have seen an improvement in the process of manufacturing powder or have reached themselves an improvement in the constituent elements of the powder, they have given the information to the Government free, not charging a single dollar for it.

Mr. SIMS. If the Government only made what it really needs in time of peace, would not the Du Pont Co. go along making these improvements? In other words, they do not sell all their smokeless powder to the Government?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; that is all.

Mr. SIMS. The Government is the only customer?

Mr. FOSS. The only customer; and they make it for nobody else.

Mr. SIMS. You think on account of its being for the Government the Government officials do not make the same effort or make the same study to bring about improvements that private enterprise would?

Mr. FOSS. The competition by the Army and Navy factories amounts to a competition in the improvement of powder as well as in price.

Mr. GOOD. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that that competition was never effected until Congress wrote a limitation as to the amount the Army and Navy Board could pay for powder? We were paying $1.60 for smokeless powder, and it was not until Congress commenced to put limitations on the appropriation bill that we got the price down to 60 cents. And I will say to the gentleman on the question of manufacturing powder—and this is outside of the record—while Col. Buckner absolutely refused to tell the committee what it did cost to manufacture powder, the gentleman told me he knew what it cost the Du Ponts, that it cost less than 25 cents a pound, and when I take that statement in connection with the statement of Col. Buckner before your committee, where he would not give to the world his costs, I have a great deal of confidence in the statement of the gentleman who made it.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman state what, in his opinion, was the accuracy of those figures on the cost of manufacturing at the Government powder works, of 33 cents?

Mr. FOSS. Admiral Mason, former Chief of Bureau of Ordnance, came before the committee a year ago and made the statement that it cost about 45 cents for the Government to manufacture smokeless powder. Admiral Mason was the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance for a great many years and had conducted the manufacture of smokeless powder over a period of a number of years. And his judgment was that that was about the actual cost, as he figured it, of manufacturing smokeless powder, but he did not take into consideration a large number of things which would be taken into consideration and made a part of the cost of powder in a private concern. Now, Admiral Twining this year—and he has been chief of the bureau only a short time—has figured out that we are making powder at a less cost than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I will say just one word in conclusion: That the short experience which Admiral Twining has had in figuring the cost of powder is not entitled to perhaps the same consideration that the figures of Admiral Mason are entitled to as covering a series of years. But I have no doubt that there has been a decrease in the cost of the manufacture of powder.

Mr. BORLAND. Could you not, then, make a further decrease in the price paid to the Du Pont Co. from those figures?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding with my remarks, I wish to submit a question to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. What is the price we pay to the Du Pont Co.?

Mr. PADGETT. Sixty cents.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I did not want to make a mistake about that. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Members of the House will get the hearings and turn to page 602, they will find the testimony of a representative of the Du Pont Co. I admit that I am a new member on this committee, and I do not want to be a critic, but I turn to the first page of this volume that I hold in my hand and I find the names of the men who have testified before the Naval Committee; and if you will turn there and read with me you will find that I speak the truth. The names of every one of these men, save one, testifying before this committee on each question are those of officials—officials of the Government, of the Navy Department, Members of Congress, or some one in an official capacity of the Government who is presumed to come before the committee for the purpose of giving a fair statement of what the Government should do. In that coterie of distinguished men you will find a representative of the Du Pont Powder Co. appearing before the Committee on Naval Affairs, telling the committee what to do for the Du Pont Powder Co.

Now I submit, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that it is not fair to have a representative of a corporation come before the Committee on Naval Affairs to testify and explain why his powder is costing the Government more money and why the Committee on Naval Affairs should recommend to this Congress that we take his powder instead of making it cheaper.

Now, that is the situation that confronts us. As I said, I do not mean to criticize anybody, but there are the facts.

Now, we will turn to the hearings. You will find in these hearings that the statement is made that it costs the United States Government 33 cents and a fraction per pound to manufacture powder.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRIBBLE. When I get through; in a moment. I do not know whether my time is going to be extended or not. You will find there that it costs the Government of the United States 33 cents to make powder, the same powder for which we pay 60 cents to the Du Pont Co., and the gentleman to whom I referred undertakes to explain it. They go on and put in certain items of expense and get it up to 45 cents, and then they go on again and put in other items of expense and undertake to show additional expense to the Government. He puts in our machinery as a question of cost. We have got it. Why not use it?

Mr. SIMS. We have got to keep it up, anyway, whether it is running or not?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; we have got to keep it up anyway. These gentlemen come in here and say we ought to have this machinery, and I fail to see the consistency in not using it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] introduced, in substance, the amendment I had already prepared, ready to be introduced. Being in substance the amendment which I intended to introduce, I shall support heartily his amendment.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the proposition embraced in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is that the Government shall manufacture its own powder and thereby save at least a quarter of a million dollars a year, instead of buying it of the great Powder Trust, the Du Pont Powder Co.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] said:

> Let the Government go on buying of the trust and the monopoly and let the courts take care of the trust and the monopoly.

I am somewhat astonished at the statement of the gentleman from Illinois in the light of what has occurred in similar efforts, for if the courts and the officials charged with the prosecution of these trusts by the Government take as good care of the Powder Trust as they have taken of the Beef Trust there will not be a conviction in the next 25 years if either Mr. Taft or Mr. Roosevelt is continued President of the United States [applause], a thing which, however, is not probable, as the people under the revelations which have transpired in the last six weeks between these two aspirants have been convinced it is high time to retire both and secure a good Democrat for that important place. [Applause.]

I hold in my hand a chronological statement of the weary pathway that the prosecution of the Beef Trust has trodden through the courts of this country, which clearly proves the impotency of the Department of Justice and the courts to curb, suppress, or punish the Beef Trust, and is a splendid example of the manner in which the courts handle the trusts, and one which admonishes the whole country that but little hope can be reposed in them for speedy relief from the rapacious trusts. The history of the Beef Trust cases plodding their weary way through 10 years of futile litigation constitutes one of the darkest pages of judicial history ever recorded in any civilized country in the world. No loyal citizen of this country can refer to it without regret. The whole history supports the charge that it constitutes a travesty on justice. I submit it for the information of the country.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. With pleasure.

Mr. FOSS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it is very improper for the Government to buy powder from a trust?

Mr. CULLOP. I think one good way to suppress the trusts is for the Government to manufacture its own powder and quit patronizing the trusts. [Applause.] At the present rate of procedure in the courts, under the present methods of the administration of justice, none of the trusts are likely to be punished there.

Mr. FOSS. Does the gentleman pursue that course of conduct when he is buying his beef?

Mr. CULLOP. I buy where I can buy the cheapest, and I want every other citizen and every municipality in the country to do the same, especially the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the first suit was commenced against the Beef Trust on May 10, 1902, the United States prosecuting a suit against Swift & Co. for a violation of the Sherman anti-trust law in restraint of trade. On the 20th day of May a temporary injunction was granted, and it ran its course until the 27th day of May, 1903, when the injunction was made permanent. An appeal was taken to the United States Supreme Court, and, with the great trust buster in the White House, it dragged along in that court until 1905 before the case was heard, when the judgment of the lower court was affirmed, and the injunction remained in force and is in force now. I insert as a part of my remarks the chronological history of this litigation, which was in the courts from May 10, 1902, until February, 1912, when it went out of court by a nonsuit in the Federal court at Chicago with a Scotch verdict, "Guilty, but not proven":

May 10: Government files petition for an injunction against the Beef Trust in the Federal court in Chicago.
May 20: Judge Peter S. Grosscup issues temporary injunction.
September 10: Packers file a demurrer, alleging they are not engaged in interstate commerce.

February 18: Judge Grosscup overrules the demurrer and orders the temporary injunction to remain in force, giving the packers till March 2, 1903, to answer, appeal, or default.
March 1: Counsel for packers announce their intention of appealing to Supreme Court of the United States against the overruling of their demurrer, but do not do so. Judge Grosscup then fixes April 18 as the date for the packers to file answer to the Government's bill.
May 27: Judge Grosscup makes the injunction permanent, and the packers enter an appeal to the Supreme Court against the injunction.
June: Mr. Cortelyou, as Secretary of Commerce and Labor, orders Commissioner of Corporations Garfield to investigate the Beef Trust.

The Government, considering the Grosscup injunction as a complete victory, waits for the defendant packers to ask the Supreme Court to fix a date for hearing the appeal.
July 25: President Roosevelt orders the Department of Justice, through Attorney General Moody, to advance the Beef Trust case to the calendar of the United States Supreme Court, in order that it might be tried early in October.

January 4: Briefs filed in the Supreme Court by both the Government and the packers.
January 16: Beef Trust case argued in the Supreme Court.
January 31: United States Supreme Court sustains Judge Grosscup's injunction, and the way is clear for the Federal authorities to prosecute and punish packers who continue to defy the decree of the lower court.
February 21: Special Federal grand jury called in Chicago to pass on evidence of violation of antitrust law by packers. Criminal indictments sought.
March 4: Roosevelt transmits to Congress Commissioner Garfield's report on the Beef Trust.
March 29: Thomas J. Conners, general superintendent of Armour & Co., indicted for attempting to influence a witness before the grand jury in Chicago.
April 14: Four officials of the Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co. indicted for obstructing the service of Federal subpœnas.
July 1: Federal grand jury in Chicago indicts 17 individuals and 5 corporations; bonds fixed at $5,000 in each case.
September 4: Indicted packers obtain an adjournment on the ground they are not ready to plead.
September 21: Four officials of the Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co. plead guilty to conspiracy to obtain rebates from railroads and are fined $25,000.
October 23: Packers file a special plea in bar claiming immunity from prosecution under the indictment on the ground that the evidence on which it was based had been obtained by the Bureau of Corporations under authority of Congress, and that immunity had been promised them by Commissioner Garfield.
November 17: In an official statement Attorney General Moody declares that no immunity was promised and that none of the information obtained by the Bureau of Corporations had been used before the grand jury.

February 22: Commissioner of Corporations Garfield admits under oath that he had worked in conjunction with the Department of Justice.
March 21: Judge J. Otis Humphrey holds that the individuals are immune from prosecution under the criminal indictments, but the indictments against the corporations stand.
April 6: Attorney General Moody decides that no appeal can be taken from Judge Humphrey's decision.
October 13: The Department of Justice decides to drop the prosecution.

September 18: Another Federal grand jury called in Chicago for the prosecution of the packers for violations of the antitrust law. No indictments returned.

1908.

December 7: Grand jury investigation of railroad rebates to the packers and violations by the latter of the antitrust law is begun in Chicago. No indictments.

1909.

February 9: Renewed investigation by a Federal grand jury of charges of rebating and price fixing and effort by Government to prove "that the Meat Trust exists and that the National Packing Co. is its operative machinery."

1910.

March 21: Attorney General Wickersham files a petition against the Beef Trust—the National Packing Co. and 10 subsidiary corporations—for restraint of trade.
September 12: Federal grand jury returns three indictments each against L. F. Swift, Edward H. Swift, Charles H. Swift, Francis A. Fowler, Edward Tilden, J. Ogden Armour, Arthur Meeker, Thomas J. Conners, Edward Morris, and Louis H. Heyman.
September 12: Following these indictments, the Government files a civil suit for the dissolution of the National Packing Co. and the appointment of a receiver. In this suit 10 subsidiary corporations and 16 additional firms and individuals are named.
September 13: The packers give bail in $30,000 apiece.
November 17: Packers protest Judge Landis on the ground that in 1895 he had been employed as a special assistant United States attorney in connection with a prosecution against them under the antitrust act.
December 15: The indictments against the packers are amended and strengthened.
December 24: The packers claim the right to have the civil suit tried before the criminal indictments.
December 27: Attorney General Wickersham orders the civil suit dismissed, in order to avoid delay in the criminal prosecutions.
December 28: Packers protest against the dismissal of the civil suit. Are overruled.

January 2: Judge Carpenter denies a motion of the packers that the Government be restrained from proceeding against them criminally.
March 22: Judge Carpenter overrules a demurrer by the packers, who allege that Judge Humphrey's immunity decision is continuing in its effects and covers all future time so long as the acts covered by the 1906 decision remain the same. Judge Carpenter denies a motion to quash the indictment.
April 13: Packers present a special plea that the antitrust act itself did not create any new crime, and hence, even if the packers disobey the statutes, they are committing no criminal act.
May 17: Packers come into court again to have the indictments quashed on the ground that there had been no "unreasonable" restraint of trade as defined by the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil decision.
June 3: Packers file briefs asking for rehearing of their motions to quash the indictment against them.
July 5: Packers plead "not guilty," and trial is fixed for November 20, 1911.

What was the result? When the Beef Trust was about to be cornered the President demanded that the Department of Commerce and Labor investigate it, and the Commissioner of Corporations, Mr. Garfield, was called upon to perform that duty, and he made his report to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and he reported that he found that this great trust was making small profits, that it should not be interfered with, whitewashing the same, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor sent that report to the President, who transmitted the same to Congress, giving it a "clean bill of health." This was the course pursued by Mr. Roosevelt as the great "trust buster." It took four years to perform this great acrobatic performance. This is in part his disposition of this the greatest criminal combination in this country, and one which does injury to more people than any other. I desire here to submit an editorial from the New York World commenting on the Beef Trust cases:

THE BEEF TRUST'S CASE USED AS A FOOTBALL IN THE FEDERAL COURTS.

In an editorial leader published on September 5, the World thus comments on this shameful exhibition of judicial and executive inefficiency:

"Elsewhere on this page we print a chronology of the Beef Trust cases, showing how they have been used as a football in the Federal courts for more than nine years.

"No other trust so vitally affects the cost of living; no other trust has such tremendous power to oppress every class of citizens, from the richest to the poorest. Yet the Government's so-called prosecutions have been a continuing grant of immunity, and after nine years the first criminal case is yet to be brought to trial.

"Great corporations will never take the antitrust law seriously if the United States Government itself does not take the law seriously. They will never respect the criminal prohibition against restraint of trade if the Government itself does not respect it. The record in this case is a disgrace to American institutions. It is a scandalous thing that with all its power the Government of the United States in nine years has not yet brought a single packer to the bar of justice to prove his guilt or innocence.

"These prosecutions have served only to make the law ridiculous and to bring the authority of the Federal Government into contempt. In no other civilized country would such a record be possible."

This editorial admirably states the prevailing opinion existing, which we all deplore. Who is to blame for this deplorable condition? The courts and those charged with the administration of justice are solely responsible for the existing condition, and for the impatience manifested by the public over the procedure of the courts and the frequent miscarriage of justice, such as that furnished in the Beef Trust cases. It is in the power of the responsible parties to remove the distrust, to hush the criticism, and to restore confidence in this great department of our Government. But a repetition of such instances as exist in the Beef Trust cases will aggravate this condition and militate against the influence of this great department of our Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. I thank the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] raised the question a minute ago with regard to the propriety of the Government purchasing trust-made goods, and in response to that I will say that the first Secretary of War under President Taft wrote an order that no powder or ordnance or ordnance stores be purchased from trusts.

Mr. CULLOP. I thank the gentleman for the information, because at that time the Secretary of War was a Democrat from the State of Tennessee. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GOOD. How does it come that he was in a Republican Cabinet, then?

Mr. CULLOP. I presume that the Republican President, in looking over the field of eligibles in the Republican Party, could not find a man whom he thought would be suitable for the place, and therefore he appointed a Democrat. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, what more was done in the Beef Trust case? When they filed their plea for immunity, they set up the claim that Mr. Garfield, the Commissioner of Corporations, had granted them immunity. In a very short time the Attorney General of the United States denied that statement, and said that the Department of Justice had not cooperated with the Bureau of Corporations in procuring the indictment against the Beef Trust. Within less than 60 days after this statement was made, and the official statement of Attorney General Moody had been published to the world, James R. Garfield, the Commissioner of Corporations, filed a statement under oath in the court at Chicago that the information upon which the Beef Trust was indicted had been furnished by him, and the Beef Trust walked out of court scot free and went unwhipt of justice.

What was the next step? In less than 60 days the Attorney General dismissed the civil suit.

When the people began to get restless again under the great outrages of the Beef Trust, another Federal grand jury in Chicago was called to investigate their conduct, but it adjourned without returning an indictment, and again the great criminal combination was permitted to continue its plunder of a helpless people. Method after method was employed to suppress this great trust, but to no avail. Each and every suit was without success. Why was the Department of Justice unable to uphold the law, to enforce it?

The result of nearly 10 years of fruitless litigation strongly tends to establish it was. If this be true, then should it not be changed? Why did it bring so many suits and then dismiss them? Why did it fail to secure indictments, and when it did why did it not convict the indicted parties? Its failure is a humiliating confession that it appears to have been inadequate to meet public requirements. If not, then upon what theory can the result be explained?

We are now having the conduct of both Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt's connection with the Harvester Trust presented to the public by each other. The course pursued by both is not commendable, but it enlightens the public as to how lenient both have been in dealing with the trusts, and relieving the public from the hardships which they impose. And yet, as the statement of these prosecutions show, all the time the injunction was in force, the injunction which had been issued by the district court of Chicago, affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and never in a single instance did the Department of Justice under either one of these Presidents have the defendants cited for contempt for the violation of this injunction. It was suffered to remain dormant. The violation of it constituted a contempt of court for which severe punishment could be administered, but in all the 10 years of this litigation it was never invoked. Why did not the department proceed under it and enforce it, and destroy the power of this great combination in restraint of trade, instead of pursuing the fruitless litigation which has resulted in such ignominious failure?

The people, therefore, I say to the gentleman from Illinois, are not content to leave this question to the courts and not take advantage of the remedy presented here and now. [Applause.]

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I have no concern as to whether the Government manufactures all of its powder or not, but I do think the committee ought to be possessed of the facts before it is called upon to vote. If the committee wishes to place its objection to the purchase of powder from the du Pont works on the ground that it is a trust, if it wishes to say that the Government shall not purchase anything from a trust, then I have nothing to say. But the other phase of the question I want to discuss.

The reason why all the Governments of the world buy part of their powder from private concerns is that there may be well-equipped factories to start the manufacture of smokeless powder upon the receipt of a telegram when an emergency comes. For many years France manufactured her own powder, as I am informed, but during the last year she has let a part to private concerns, realizing the necessity of having factories equipped and ready to do business if necessity required.

Now, in this country there are three factories in the manufacture of smokeless powder by private concerns. These three factories are owned by the Du Pont Powder Co. One is located in New Jersey, near New York, where there is a great navy yard; another in New Jersey, near Philadelphia, where there is another great navy yard. We have two owned by the Government—one near the navy yard here at Washington and another factory at Dover, near the seacoast. So that we have five factories; and if war should come, on the receipt of a telegram they would be prepared to manufacture smokeless powder for the use of the Army and the Navy.

There is no other purchaser of this powder but the Government. If the Government does not buy, of course the works will close that part of their factories devoted to the manufacture of smokeless powder for big guns. Of course that is a small percentage of the manufacture by these companies, but they have a special factory and special equipment for it, and if there are no purchasers anyone can see that that part of the factory will be closed.

Now, I ask the committee to do one of two things—and so far as I am concerned it is immaterial which—either to continue the law as it has been, so that we may have three factories located in various parts of the country, or vote us money enough to build two or three more, one near the Philadelphia Navy Yard and one near the New York Navy Yard.

The gentleman says that we have one here, and that we could run it with three shifts. Stop and think. Suppose war should come and we have only one powder factory at Indianhead, and let us concede that it is running with three shifts and manufacturing all the powder needed for the Navy. War comes. We may protect that as well as we please, but one well-directed charge of dynamite would put that factory out of business, and we would be as helpless as a new-born babe. We must have factories located in different parts of the country, to be called upon when an emergency comes. I care not whether it be a private factory or a Government factory. My plea is either that you authorize us to let a part of the purchase go to the Du Pont Powder Works, so as to keep them in existence, or vote the money here to-day to build and equip other reserve factories in different parts of the country near the navy yards, which may be available when the time comes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman object to saving $250,000, instead of paying it to the Powder Trust, now under indictment by the United States Government?

Mr. KOPP. I would be a fool to violate my oath if I did not try to save every penny to the Government; but in saving for the Government I must not overlook the fact of my country's welfare and its safety.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman would vote to a trust a million and a half dollars a year for the purpose of guaranteeing that we might have a powder factory in time of war.

Mr. KOPP. We do not donate anywhere near a million dollars to the trust.

Mr. GARNER. According to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] it costs about $1,000,000 more a year to purchase all the powder we have to purchase, if we have to purchase it from the trust, than it would if we were to manufacture it ourselves.

Mr. KOPP. I am referring to the Navy in any remarks that I make at this time.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KOPP. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the report made by the Chief of Ordnance of the Army, Gen. Crozier, for 1911, in which he says that the saving from the powder appropriation has, therefore, been about $188,500, which is $23,500 in excess of the cost of the powder factory.

Mr. KOPP. I concede that, but let me ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPP. We ought to meet this question without any prejudice. As I said a moment ago, I certainly hold no brief in any sense of the word for the Du Pont Powder Works.

Mr. GOOD. And I certainly have none.

Mr. KOPP. I know the gentleman has not. I am opposed to the trust, and I said in my opening remarks if the gentleman wants to place it upon that ground I am with him, but does the gentleman think that we ought to manufacture all of our own powder at Indianhead?

Mr. GOOD. No. Until we establish a factory upon the Pacific coast we ought to manufacture all of our powder at Indianhead and at Dover. We have ample facilities and can save $1,524,000 a year by doing it, and until we have established a factory on the Pacific coast I favor the manufacture of every pound of smokeless powder in these two Government arsenals.

Mr. KOPP. Is the gentleman willing to appropriate money now for the building of a powder factory on the Pacific coast and one near Philadelphia or New York, where our greatest navy yards are?

Mr. GOOD. I think the two now in the East have capacity to manufacture all of the powder used by the Army and Navy. I am willing to appropriate money any time to build another Government powder factory on the Pacific coast.

Mr. KOPP. The gentleman overlooks the fact that it is not alone a question of capacity, but it is a question of expediency. It is a question of common defense. The gentleman must stop and reflect that if we should have war—and God forbid that we ever should—and had but one powder factory, and that was put out of business, we would be helpless.

Mr. GOOD. Well, where would we be if we had five factories and they should all be blown up? It is just as easy to blow up five factories as it is one.

Mr. KOPP. It is just five times as hard, and that is the only difference. If the gentleman wants to appropriate money for other factories, I am with him. My plea is to do one of two things, either continue the plan we have now or provide for the building of other factories.

Mr. BOEHNE. How much would one cost?

Mr. KOPP. I have not the figures.

Mr. HEALD. Mr. Chairman, the policy of monopolizing the manufacture of smokeless powder by the Government has not heretofore met with the approval of the officers of either the Army or the Navy. Of course I agree with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] that it is wholly within the province of Congress to say that we shall alone manufacture all of the powder supplies that we need, but up to this time the invariable opinion of the officers of the Army and the Navy has been that it is not advisable to do so, and I do not believe that, judging by the experience of the past, we are justified in doing so now. This House has always looked to officers of the service for advice and information in determining the policy we shall follow. Economy may be very shortsighted, but while we might save a few thousand dollars by the Government manufacturing all the smokeless powder we need at the present time, emergencies or accident might make it far from economy to be limited in our supplies to the capacity of the plants at Indianhead and Dover. We should not be unmindful of the fact that the smokeless-powder industry has been very largely developed by the private concerns which are to-day manufacturing smokeless powder for the Government only, and they are manufacturing it for the Government only at the behest and direction of the Government itself. The reports of the various officers, including the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, all go to show that it is their unprejudiced opinion that the national welfare—and I am quoting from the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance for the year 1908—requires the encouragement of these companies to keep up their plants and their trained forces, even if the output of the Government plants has to be kept much below their maximum capacity. Upon this point several reports of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance are interesting. In the report for the year 1907 we find the following:

> The specifications for the powder and most other points in connection with it are fixed by the joint board of officers of the Army and Navy, through whose labors not only the specifications have been improved, but the two services have been brought into perfect agreement as to the details of manufacture and inspection. Upon the recommendations of this board, made after careful consideration of all information available, but especially of that furnished by the Government powder factory at Indianhead, the price to be paid for powder purchased from private firms is fixed from year to year. This has been found a satisfactory way to regulate prices with the so-called Powder Trust, which has thus far accepted without serious protest both the price established by the board and the more exacting specifications which have been insisted upon. With the competition of the naval powder factory at Indianhead and the Army factory at Dover (soon to be completed), and with the revision of specifications and prices made each year by the joint board, the bureau has no fear of finding itself at the mercy of private manufacturers, and feels that it has much to gain by encouraging these manufacturers to keep up their factories and to maintain their valuable force of trained chemists, experimenters, and laborers.

In the annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance to the Secretary of the Navy for the year 1908 we find the following:

> The joint Army and Navy powder board has continued its work in connection with the specifications, methods of inspection, etc., and the two services purchase and manufacture their powder under exactly the same conditions with regard to methods, processes, etc., with consequent simplification and economy. One duty of the powder board is to recommend the price to be paid for powder, basing their calculations upon data obtained in the operation of the Government plants, and a small reduction was made during the last fiscal year in view of the slightly lower price of raw materials. The capacities of the Government plants are probably now such that during the continuance of peace the Government may be considered nearly independent of the Du Pont powder companies, and there is no danger of its having to purchase powder at exorbitant prices. Indeed, the companies have always accepted the price named by the Government, and it is only fair to state that during the past few years, when the bureau was obliged to purchase large quantities of powder, these companies have never taken advantage of the situation to charge exorbitant prices. The national welfare requires the encouragement of these companies to keep up their plants and their trained forces, even if the output of the Government plants has to be kept much below their maximum capacity.

In the annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance to the Secretary of the Navy for the year 1909 the following statement is made:

> The reserve supply of powder has been added to, although this reserve still remains inadequate. The situation, however, has improved since the last annual report. The extension of the naval powder factory at Indianhead has been taken in hand, and in about nine months the Government plant should be able to double its output. The policy of keeping in operation the private powder plants is a sound one. The manufacture of smokeless powder is attended with unusual hazards, the time required for its production is considerable, and the possibility of the Government plant becoming disabled through fire or other accidents is not to be overlooked. In time of war the Government plants, in spite of all the enlargement which could reasonably be made, would be altogether inadequate. These are sufficient reasons why private sources of supply should be fostered and the Government assured an unfailing supply of powder in case of emergency.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the manufacture of smokeless powder as a Government monopoly by France, about which the gentleman from Texas was asking some time ago, I will read from a statement of Admiral Knight, referring to an explosion which recently occurred, in which he says:

> Quite lately, as you gentlemen will remember, there have been two terrible disasters in the French navy. I have had occasion to study the evidence which has been brought out in connection with those accidents very carefully, and it has been made entirely apparent to me that the trouble was not in the formula by which these powders were made, but it was in the care with which they were made, or in the lack of care, rather, with which they were made. The powders were apparently good. They doubtless passed all the tests there.

It is clear from his further testimony that, in his opinion, the competition between the private-owned manufactures of powder and Government-manufactured powder does raise the standard and insure the quality of the product; and he further says that he would pass many sleepless nights on a boat where he was in doubt as to the stability of the powder which was in her magazines, and I have no doubt he would. For 100 years, Mr. Chairman, this Government has relied upon private industry for the powder which she has used.

During these more than hundred years the manufacture of powder has grown to enormous proportions, but never have the relations between the Government and the manufacturers of powder been other than amicable and satisfactory. As the Krupps have been relied upon by the German Empire for its guns, so this Government has relied upon the Du Pont Co. for its powder.

The annual expenditures of the Army and Navy are, in round numbers, about $300,000,000, and only about 1 per cent of this vast sum is spent for powder. The price of powder, when smokeless powder was in its experimental stage, was $1.50 per pound, and the last purchases made by the Government were at the rate of 60 cents per pound; and every evidence on the part of the department experts tends to show that this is a fair price. While this advance in manufacture was being made, the Du Pont Powder Co. was the first industrial concern in the United States to establish a service and accident pension for the benefit of its employees, which it is still maintaining.

We relied upon it for the powder which we used in the Mexican War, in the Civil War, and in the Spanish-American War, and to-day, according to the testimony that is before the Committee on Naval Affairs, the people who are manufacturing smokeless powder are maintaining three plants wholly for the service of the Government, wholly that the powder may be supplied to them when they want it, and in the quantities they want and at the price they want it, because it has been shown that the prices are absolutely fixed, and the testimony further shows that the contracts are not made with the manufacturers of smokeless powder for the delivery of powder, but that the price is fixed for the option to take such amount of powder as this Government might need, and at that price we purchase what we need if we need any.

It has been stated on the floor of this House at various times that during the Spanish-American War the Du Pont Powder Co. raised the price of powder to the Government. The evidence before the Committee on Naval Affairs not only shows that this is not true, but, on the contrary, the powder company actually reduced the price of powder in the midst of the war and released the Government from compliance with its part of the contract to take 2,800,000 pounds, the balance on a contract of 5,000,000 pounds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Delaware may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Delaware may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEALD. Mr. Chairman, in the testimony that has been developed in the various hearings for many years past it has been shown that the development of smokeless powder in this country has been largely the result of experiments that have been conducted by private companies. The testimony shows that the manufacturers of smokeless powder—the Du Pont Powder Co.—to-day are spending on an average $300,000 to $400,000 in experiments to improve the quality of powder and explosives. All of that has been to the advantage of the Government, just the same as when we built the plants at Dover and at Indianhead these private manufacturers of powder furnished every blue print, every model of a piece of machinery, every process for making it, and even furnished them the men to conduct their plant. This has been acknowledged by the various chiefs of ordnance and admirals having charge of that branch of the service.

I do not urge this as any reason why the Government should not extend its industry in the line of the manufacture of smokeless powder, but I do urge as a reason why, in the light of the testimony of Admiral Knight, it is better, far better, for us to maintain competition as such in the hands of private individuals at the same time we are manufacturing on the part of the Government, in order that comparisons may be made, in order that stability may be given to these powders and that the Government may have in the future, as it has to-day, better powder than that furnished to any other Government in the world. The smokeless powder which we are using to-day, in comparison with that which is used in the German Navy and the English Navy, has been improved to a point where it gives to the life of the guns three to five times the life which the English powder gives to the life of the English gun. The English powder costs less than our powder, as has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], but it is not cheap when you consider that the smokeless powder we are using prolongs the life of the gun from three to five times as long as the powder furnished to the English Navy. The statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin to the effect that the French Government during the past year, realizing the conditions to which I have called attention in the testimony of Admiral Knight, has determined in the future that it will no longer monopolize the manufacture of smokeless powder for its army and navy, but will encourage the manufacture at the hands of private individuals, tends to confirm the wisdom of the course we have pursued for so many years. There is no doubt but what this Government wants smokeless powder of the best quality. They want it in quantities when they want it, and there has not heretofore been any difference of opinion in the reports of the chairmen of the committees of the House, whether they have been on one side of the House or the other, as to the necessity of keeping alive these factories which are to-day manufacturing smokeless powder only for the Government.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does the gentleman know how much powder the Government has in reserve?

Mr. HEALD. The powder which the Government had in reserve last year was certainly not enough powder to fire all its guns in an engagement lasting one hour and a half.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does the gentleman mean that is all the powder that the Government has deposited here in the different places to be used in an emergency in the time of war?

Mr. HEALD. I am not referring to all the old brown powder.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. HEALD. The old brown powder is not good at all.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Then you have not read this.

Mr. HEALD. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HEALD] has expired.

Mr. HEALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KENT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, it is possible that as a result of experience I may be able to cast a little light on some phases of this subject. At one time, some 15 years ago, I started out in an attempt to manufacture powder in competition with the so-called trust. I was making a powder of a different kind from the nitro powders, which was known as picrate powder, the nitrogen of which was contained in picric acid instead of nitric acid. In the course of that experience I had to learn the cost of smokeless sporting powder as made by the Du Pont people and others. I secured what I believed to be accurate figures at that time as to the cost of shotgun powder, which is practically the same as the Navy powder, a little different in formula, but practically about the same in composition and cost. At that time the nitro powder cost was about 35 cents, according to the best information that I could obtain. Since then there have been economies practiced, especially in what is known as the absorbent part of the powder. These nitro powders rely for explosve qualities on nitrogen gas confined in nitric acid mixed with glycerin and held by an absorbent medium. For cotton there have been substituted much cheaper absorbents, and, without any doubt, a cheapening in the powder. I feel sure it does not now actually cost to exceed 30 cents a pound, if, indeed, the cost is not below 30 cents.

The Government figures here show what a minor charge in plant cost there is in powder manufacture. As a matter of course manufacturers have studied to put as little as they can in powder plants, because by accident they are liable to lose the whole thing. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] said the Government has invested in two plants $400,000, which would amount to 13 cents a pound for one year's annual output of 3,000,000 pounds.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENT. I do.

Mr. GOOD. He should state in connection with that that the plants are only run at one-third their capacity.

Mr. KENT. And still produce 3,000,000 pounds.

Mr. FOSS. They produce 1,000,000 pounds.

Mr. GOOD. Each plant produces 1,000,000 pounds, but at full capacity could produce 3,000,000 pounds.

Mr. KENT. Which shows the plant cost would be retired by an allowance of 13 cents a pound in one year's output, whereas the Government would pay to the trust about 30 cents profit per pound.

Now, taking another phase of it, if this powder costs not to exceed 30 cents, and the Government pays 60 cents per pound, the Government pays 100 per cent profit. If we wish to encourage private industry, why should we not go to a plant and say, "We wish you to manufacture some of the Government powder, and we shall pay you on a percentage basis"?

Should we give them 100 per cent on that basis? I imagine not. Thirty per cent, or about 40 cents per pound for cost and bonus, would be liberal and would then save the Government 20 cents per pound.

There is no secret about the manufacture of powder. There is no trouble about obtaining the quality in powder. The tests of powder are as definite as can be made in the manufacture of any known article. The tests for pressures, for velocities, the hydroscopic tests as regards the absorption of water, the temperature tests, the tests for breech pressure and deterioration are all simple, clear, and conclusive, and there is no reason why the Government powder should differ a particle from the Du Pont powder, when it is being made under exactly the same formula and with the same end in view.

There is no sanctity attaching to the Du Pont powder on account of the historical reputation of the company.

So far as the trust is concerned, I do not know that this is an item to be considered, except that when the Government pursues a policy of buying from private concerns it should have competitive bids. In the purchase of powder there is only one institution from which purchases can be made, as has been recognized and confessed by the gentlemen on the other side. That concern is a trust, and has been a most offensive and burdensome trust. I know that fact of my own knowledge; but that is neither here nor there.

Mr. HEALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KENT. I do.

Mr. HEALD. The company to which the gentleman refers has undoubtedly been declared a trust in restraint of trade. Is it not true that the Government, in entering a decree for the dissolution of the company, provided that the plants which manufactured smokeless powder for the Government should be maintained all together under the control of one company?

Mr. KENT. I am not making a demagogic argument against the trust; I am making an economic argument against the policy of the Federal Government being robbed by trust methods by a trust.

Mr. HEALD. May I ask the gentleman another question? He gives the price of smokeless powder at 30 cents a pound. How does he obtain his figures, when the Government figures and other figures bring the price up to between 40 and 50 cents per pound.

Mr. KENT. I do not know anything about Government figures, so called, or how derived. I spoke of what, to the best of my knowledge, were the facts.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I am disposed to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. The one proposition that seems to be in the way is the question as to whether the Government is now capacitated, with its present output from its factories, for supplying the Government's present needs during the current year. Has the gentleman from Iowa any information or evidence as to the capacity of the factories and the amount of powder needed by the Government? If so, I would be glad if he would give that information.

Mr. GOOD. Answering the gentleman's question, I will say that last year we acquired 5,728,886 pounds of smokeless powder. The testimony of Admiral Twining is that the plant at Indianhead has a capacity of 3,000,000 pounds per annum and the plant at Dover, N. J., has a capacity of 3,000,000 pounds. I think Gen. Crozier claims that the plant at Dover has a larger capacity than that. I do not exactly recall his statement as to capacity.

Mr. SISSON. That would supply the present needs of the Government?

Mr. GOOD. That would not only supply the present needs, but this 5,728,886 pounds is partly composed of reserve powder that the Government has been purchasing—purchasing it for reserve in time of war.

Mr. SISSON. Now, I have one other question. I notice that something over $5,000,000 is carried in this bill for enlarging these two plants that the Government now owns.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; there is nothing for enlarging them.

Mr. SISSON. What was it for?

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the items he refers to provide for the maintenance of the powder factory and proving grounds, and things of that sort.

Mr. PADGETT. There is nothing for an extension.

Mr. SISSON. How much of this reserve powder is carried over? Does the gentleman know how much is bought from the trust that is carried over and never used?

Mr. GOOD. I do have those figures. I think I am safe in saying that a considerable part was reserve powder. Is it not so, Mr. Foss?

Mr. FOSS. I think so.

Mr. SISSON. So that if the powder bought by the Government is not used for the current year it is reserve powder?

Mr. PADGETT. The purchase of the Navy was 3,000,000, and there was placed in reserve a portion of that.

Mr. SISSON. Then, I will ask the chairman of the committee this additional question, which was suggested by the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]: In reference to the cost of the powder, has the committee any information that that powder can be manufactured at, say, from 25 to 30 cents per pound?

Mr. PADGETT. None whatever; and Admiral Twining states that the actual money cost of the items that he includes was 33.6, and then he does not include various other items which legitimately go into it, which he says if added would run it up to 45 cents and something; and then that does not include any allowance for pensions to employees or taxes or insurance, or anything of that kind, so that it would go above that.

Mr. SISSON. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. The gentleman from Iowa said something about an agreement in which Gen. Buckner figured. Has the gentleman any information of the nature and character of that agreement?

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that that agreement was put in evidence in the suit that was brought by the Government against the Du Pont Trust in the Federal court in the State of Delaware, and it shows that powder manufacturers had divided up the various States among the powder companies; and in 1897 they entered into an agreement as to the territory of the world and agreed that the United States territory should be the property of the Du Pont Powder Trust, and that no other powder company in any country in the world could furnish any powder to any concern in the United States, even to the Government of the United States.

And again, in answer to that question, I want to quote from the testimony taken before the Committee on Naval Affairs last year when Mr. THOMAS asked a pertinent question of Gen. Buckner, who was the manager of the Du Pont Powder Trust. This is the extract:

Mr. THOMAS. As to the cost you start with, the 40 cents, I understand, and a fraction.

Mr. DAWSON. 43.21.

Mr. THOMAS. You start with that basis. Now, what is your actual cost?

Mr. BUCKNER. I submit that this is hardly a fair question. The Government is one customer of ours, and we have competition all over the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask that the gentleman may have one minute more. I want to ask him one more question.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. He further said:

If I give my cost on powder to you I give it to the world.

And yet he had an agreement with the world that the world would not interfere with him or his company, and it made no difference to the world what it cost him to manufacture powder. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Has the gentleman from Iowa any information as to what effect a failure on the part of the Government to purchase any powder from the trust would have on that institution in the conduct of its present business?

Mr. GOOD. I can answer that by quoting the language of Gen. Buckner again, the vice president of the trust. When he was asked a question as to the improved character of powder, he said before the Naval Committee:

They want—

That is, the Government—

They want what we want and they make us produce it. They get behind us and discover weaknesses in our powder, and insist that the powder shall be what they want.

So it is the Government that is producing the good powder and that makes the Du Pont Powder Co. supply good powder. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, this is precisely the same fight that was made against a corresponding item in the Army appropriation bill that was under consideration here a few weeks ago. No new arguments have been advanced. The enemy is the same—the trust. The chief assailant is the same—the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. He has said nothing new.

I think we may assume that the trusts are damned by everybody; certainly by everybody in this House. Having condemned them, we may proceed to the consideration of a business problem pertaining to the conduct of the business of this Government in a businesslike way. The trusts have no friends. We will admit that and go on without beclouding our thinking, if that be possible, by constantly injecting it into the consideration of this trust question.

The Government powder plant was established a few years ago for the purpose of an economic safety valve. It was intended to be regulatory. It was intended to prevent unjust exactions in the way of price by private manufacturers who sold munitions of war to the Government. It has served that purpose. I am glad that it has, because it happens that the plant established for and by the Army was precisely in accordance with the limitations in a bill that I myself offered for the creation of that plant. It has worked admirably. Coincidentally with the operation of that plant, the price of powder has gone down. Now, he would be a rash individual who would say that it has gone down solely because the Government established that plant. There have been steady improvements in the manufacture of powder, just as there has been a steady improvement in the manufacture of nearly everything which involves an intellectual process and where there are students engaged in the manufacture of that particular article. I am told—how true it is I do not know—that the Du Pont Powder Trust has on its pay roll gentlemen who command salaries ranging up to $20,000 and $25,000 a year. If that be so, it is because those men have knowledge and skill that are of that much value to the industrial plant that we refer to here in terms of opprobrium as the Powder Trust. I am also told—not by Gen. Buckner or any other employee of the Powder Trust, but by honorable, high-placed officials of this Government—that such improvements as have been made from time to time in the manufacture of powder, such developments of the chemical processes required in the manufacture of powder as have been made in the laboratory of that company through the efforts of its privately paid individual employees, have been given freely to the Government. If that be so, it is a patriotic service on the part of those citizens, and for that at least they ought to be commended and not condemned.

When the Government plant was established it was not anticipated that we would ever manufacture all of our powder, and in spite of the fact that circumstances may compel us to buy a large part of our supply from a trust, I say to you that I am not in favor of the Government manufacturing all of its own powder now any more than I would be in favor of the Government manufacturing all the shoes that are required for its soldiers or all the blankets that it uses to cover their bodies at night or all the clothing that they wear during the day.

I do not believe in having the Government engage in private business operations that may be done as well or better by the citizens, but I do not want to be misunderstood on that point. I want the Government to exercise the power which the citizen has, the opportunity of resisting the unjust exactions of private corporations, and for that reason I favored the creation of a powder plant for the Army; but I believe that it would be wise, while we keep the Army powder plant up to the maximum of efficiency and keep it ready at all times to manufacture the necessary ammunition for war, I believe it would be wise to buy the bulk of our munitions of war from private individuals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may have the five minutes undisturbed I will agree to quit. There may come a time when we will absolutely need, and urgently need, the help of private citizens in equipping the Army and Navy for the defense of the country. It was said by a man who came from the State of my friend on my right, Mr. GREGG, that he went 20 years without needing a pistol, but when he did need it, he needed it like hell. [Laughter.] That may be our condition in reference to powder made by private plants. I do not want to be in the position that we were placed in at the opening of the Spanish-American War. My friend from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] said that he thrilled and throbbed with pride at the performance of Admiral Dewey in Manila Bay. Why, Mr. Chairman, I did not get a single thrill or a throb out of that enterprise. After he had sailed into that bay, over that particular part of the bay that was supposed to be mined, he was in absolute safety, and he anchored off at a perfectly safe distance and engaged in practice with Spanish ships, that were entirely powerless to do us any harm, as targets. There was not much opportunity for thrills there. It was a good excuse for eloquence, but not for real thrills, and, as I suggested to the gentleman privately, in the interest of true history I hope he will correct that statement. We destroyed the Spaniards, but they did us very little harm.

Now, it is unwise, in my judgment, to leave these private plants out of consideration, to leave us in the position that we were in at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, when we did not have in reserve enough ammunition to quell an ordinary street riot. If we had had an enemy of any size, if we had had an enemy sufficiently powerful to occupy a high place in the military world, we would have been in a lamentable condition in the way of being utterly unable to defend ourselves.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this proposition is to deny the Government the right to buy. It is proposing to take away from the Federal Government the power and the privilege of protecting itself in a crisis by going into the market and buying what it may require for the defense of the integrity of our soil. Whatever may be my hostility to the manufacturers of powder, however much I may condemn them for monopoly, however pressing may be the political necessity for denouncing the trusts at home, I would never be willing to put my country in the attitude of helplessness, with its hands bound, denied the privilege of doing what the citizen may do for himself—go into the markets of the world and buy what it needs for self-defense. [Applause.]

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I understand it to be the declared policy of this country to oppose monopoly in so far as the sales are to individuals. I believe it is equally the policy of this Government, or at least should be its policy, to prevent monopoly in those things that the Government is compelled to use. I am sure that on this side of the House we have candidly said and candidly believed that monopoly was a dangerous thing. I am sure that that side of the House has protested it on many occasions, and yet I am quite surprised to-day to find men on both sides of this Chamber standing up and defending in the most vigorous way a thing that every man who has spoken here has said was the most complete monopoly in the world.

Now, I am not going to abuse monopolies. I am not going to discuss that question, but I am going to point a finger of warning to the American people against the condition of having an instrument of war, a thing absolutely vital for the Government to have in case of war, under the control and domination of a complete monopoly. The gentleman says, "Suppose that our plants should blow up, then where would we get our powder?" Let me ask the gentleman, Suppose this monopoly should refuse to sell powder to us in time of war, where would you be? [Applause.] It has already been shown here that this company has a contract with every other country in the world that they shall not sell us powder, and if this company should say they would not sell us powder, I then venture the assertion that the Federal Government would be put in a position where it would at least be willing to compromise the suit it now has against the Powder Trust.

Mr. HEALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.

Mr. HEALD. If the gentleman has read the record, and it is in the hearings here and in court, he would find that the contract, to which the gentleman from Iowa referred, with foreign countries was canceled in 1908.

Mr. PROUTY. I have not read that, and of course I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. HEALD. It is in the record.

Mr. PROUTY. Assuming it is true, no man has stood on this floor and said they did not have a complete monopoly of the powder business in this country.

Mr. KOPP. Of smokeless powder.

Mr. PROUTY. Of smokeless powder; yes. The gentleman says that we have been purchasing powder of that company for 100 years for the purpose of prosecuting our wars. That is true. But let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that they have not had a complete monopoly for 100 years. It is comparatively recent that they have become a complete monopoly. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], in discussing the question, stated that he was not in favor of the Government going into business. He said that he was not in favor of making shoes and clothing for the soldiers. Let me ask the gentleman this question: If there was but one concern in the United States that could or would make shoes for the soldiers of the Army, would he be willing to say that the Government should not then go into the business of making shoes for its own soldiers? Would he rely upon a complete and merciless monopoly to furnish necessary equipment for our soldiers? I think not.

Mr. TRIBBLE. And I can suggest right there to the gentleman that the record shows here that the Government has only one bidder for powder, and that is the Du Pont Powder Co.

Mr. PROUTY. I understand that. Every man has admitted that. I do not claim to have any knowledge or information upon this subject except what I have learned on this floor, but every man who has spoken on both sides of the House has said that they are a complete monopoly; and if the Government did not have any means of its own of making powder the Du Pont Powder people could charge any price they pleased in case of war. Is that a safe situation? I am unwilling to leave this great country at the mercy of any institution. Either break up the trust so there can be numerous manufacturers to whom we can go in time of war or have the Government equipped to take care of itself.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. It has been said here that through the liberality of this Du Pont Powder Co. there has been furnished to the Government all of the improved processes of making powder which it has learned in the manufacture of the same. Have they not been paid very liberally for that gratuity on their part—at the rate of 27.6 cents a pound?

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I was going to make that suggestion. I had a minute of it upon my paper; that if they have been kind to us some fellow has certainly been very kind to them. The facts, as disclosed by my colleague [Mr. GOOD], show that we have paid at least $1,000,000 for that courtesy, and it suggests to me—I do not know whether it so suggests itself to you—in view of what else I have heard on this floor that there is a wonderfully close working relation between certain members of the Government and this trust. I do not say that disparagingly, but it does awaken in my mind a suspicion that there is a close working relation.

[The time of Mr. PROUTY having expired, by unanimous consent he was granted five minutes more.]

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Certainly.

Mr. KOPP. The gentleman stated a moment ago that one reason why he favored the Government manufacturing powder was because it was purchasing it from a monopoly.

Mr. PROUTY. Not exactly that.

Mr. KOPP. That was his direct statement. The question I have to ask is this: Does the gentleman favor the Government undertaking to manufacture every article that it uses that is purchased from a monopoly or a trust?

Mr. PROUTY. No; I did not say that. What I meant to say was this: It is the duty of the Government, if it can—and it has been shown that it can—to divorce itself from the power of the trust to throttle it in time of war.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I believe I shall have to take a few minutes of my own time.

Mr. FOWLER. Just one question.

Mr. PROUTY. Very well.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not better for the Government to go into the manufacture of material which it needs to carry on the great departments of the Government, if it becomes necessary to break up a monopoly, than to allow the monopoly to prevail and to patronize that monopoly?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; I certainly believe that; but I certainly believe that with a commodity that is absolutely necessary in times of war, when the life of the Nation depends upon it, that the Government that has not the courage to go forward and create the instrumentality that constitutes its own instrument of defense is weak indeed, and it shows a marvelous surrender to this monopoly. Now, to go to the real thought that I arose to discuss——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question, in common fairness? Has anybody on the floor of the House advocated any such thing as he suggests?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes, sir; I will be frank. They may not have put it in those words, but the effect is the same. You say there is nobody who makes it but the trust, and for fear the Government might not get powder enough we are in favor of aiding the trust by buying from it, so it will not be put out of business. If that is not stimulating and encouraging and helping the trust, why I do not know anything about it. [Applause.]

Let me discuss my question for just a moment, please. Every man who has spoken on that side of the question has said when driven to the wall that the war officials have recommended this course, and that is the question that I arose to discuss. I have been in this Congress but a short time. I came from the prairies of Iowa, fresh from the people, and the few months I have spent here has raised a question in my mind whether I have any business here or not. It has become a question in my mind whether the departments are running this Government or whether the American Congress, elected by the people, are running it. I am willing that the war officials shall control certain questions, but I am not willing that the American Congress shall surrender its rights to determine great economic policies to a few fellows who are sitting down in a chair in charge of a department of this Government. Congress created these departments, and it was intended that Congress should direct them, and not that they should direct Congress. [Applause.]. We have said upon every platform in every section of this country that we are opposed to monopoly, and we are going to do what we can to protect all the individuals against the monopolistic effect of those institutions, and yet good men, honest men, stand here on this floor and advocate that the Government shall turn right around and stimulate and help these trusts by buying from them, and frankly say that they are buying of the trust so it will not go out of this business. [Applause.] Now, I would not be so deaf to the argument those people have offered—that we will not have any place to manufacture this powder—if I did not know a little about the powder business myself. I have had just a little bit of experience about that. It does not take any great plant to manufacture powder. If you give me a great big high fence, tin roof, and a few tanks, and a few chemicals, and men to handle them, I can start a powder plant. I am speaking of it in general terms. It is not like building arsenals, it is not like building great plants with vast machinery, it is an ordinary simple process after you have the chemical formula. It is almost as simple as making country soap, if you only know how. I can not do it, you can not do it, but there are fellows who can. There are fellows who can make powder who can not make soap, and there are fellows who can make soap who can not make powder. But our Government has demonstrated that it can make powder cheaper than it can buy it, and that it is just as good or better, and I am in favor of its doing it and beginning now. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, this discussion has been a very beneficial one to the country and, indeed, a very educational one to the membership of this House, and I am reminded of a country scene, which I presented here, of a Texas steer, 3 years old, turned out with his head and tail up, that goes upon the range, and pretty soon the ticks begin to congregate around his legs and sides until before the fall season comes on he is literally covered with ticks sapping out his lifeblood. Well, the people in the West have arranged what they call the "dip." A hole is dug in the ground and filled with liquid, and they arrange so as to drive the steers through or make them jump or swim in this dip to get rid of the ticks that are killing the cattle. Now, what is this picture? Uncle Sam on one side has fastened upon him the Steel Trust, on another side of him the Sugar Trust, on his back the Meat Trust, on his belly the Food Trust, on his rump the Tobacco Trust, on his head the oil, paper, salt, leather, and the Lord only knows how many other trusts that the American people are bedeviled to death with, until the time has now come when the people, through this Congress, are going to apply the dip. [Applause.] Here is an opportunity to save, as I understand it, $1,120,000 per year to the American people, and it is not strange to say Republican insurgents on the other side have admitted that all these years of Republican administration of this Government, that the administration has been paying out this money year after year without any objection. [Applause from the Democratic side.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of retrenchment and keeping our promises to the people; I am in favor of taking care of Uncle Sam as best we may, and eliminate these trusts from the body politic. There is no doubt but the Steel Trust, having been fostered by a Republican administration of this Government, has made fabulous fortunes off of the people. [Applause.] The Sugar Trust has made millions and millions off the people as the result of special privileges until the time has come when the people on the Democratic side of this House, with the assistance of the insurgent Republicans, and, God bless you, I admire and appreciate you for it, you are going to stand up in the limelight and let the people see you are going to join with the Democrats in trying to secure for the people the protection which the Government ought to give to our own people.

Let ex-President Roosevelt and President Taft cry and accuse each other of being corrupt, if they will. The people of this country are ashamed of such conduct, as it sets a terrible example before the people of this great country and humiliates us abroad in other and foreign lands.

Let us stand by our guns and defend the people of this land against graft and dishonor. Let us save the taxpayers this $1,150,000 each year by voting for this amendment, and show our colors, our interest in and friendship for our country. I am against the trusts. They have about bursted the Republican Party—the only good thing they have ever accomplished.

It is a remarkable spectacle, Mr. Chairman, that we all witness here on this occasion, when there is an opportunity to save $1,150,000 for the people. The time, I say, has come when the people are about ready to apply the dip to the trust. Let us get rid of these ticks; let the taxes be reduced; let the poor men of this country have meat on their tables at least once a day once more. When we do this, we help each other; and when we help each other, the world grows better and men nobler. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I will not trespass upon the time of the House except to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate how long this debate has run on this one amendment. I do not propose to detain the committee further myself, but there have been two references during the course of this debate which, in my judgment, were uncalled for and should not be allowed to pass without some remark. One of these references would belittle the execution of our fleet in the Battle of Santiago and the other would belittle our victory at Manila Bay.

It happens that I was in prison when the Battle of Santiago was fought, and I can, therefore, with propriety speak of it. Three days after that battle I was a member of the official board which examined every one of the Spanish wrecks. We went from stem to stern on every ship. I want this Congress to know when anyone reflects upon the marksmanship that in actuality it is not fair to compare percentages of hits on that day with percentages of hits to-day, because the conditions have been completely changed. The percentages of hits were high for those days. In addition the ships were burned fore and aft. Many shots struck them in the woodwork and inflammable portions, where they could not be counted. As we went from ship to ship we found that the execution was something remarkable, never before equaled in a fleet engagement.

Do not let anyone imagine that the Spaniards did not have good ships. They had four armored ships of the latest types in the world. They were homogeneous, of 21 knots speed. If they had come out and formed in squadron, utilized their powers of speed, and stood off and maintained 21 knots or 20 or even 19 or 18 knots, our fleet, made up of heterogeneous craft, in which we had not a single battleship of more than 16 knots speed, would have been strung out by night over a distance of 100 miles, and the Spanish fleet could have turned around and swallowed our fleet one ship at a time. What did happen? The Spanish ships of 21 knots speed made 16 knots in battle. The American ships of 16 knots speed made 17 knots in battle. [Applause.]

Ship after ship was so riddled with the fire of our shells that the conflagration that sprung up on them drove them to the beach. Admiral Cervera told me that you could not conceive how terrific the execution was aboard the ships. Speaking of his flagship, the Teresa, upon which the execution was not as severe as on the Vizcaya and Oquendo, he described how shot after shot came in and set them on fire, and the fire soon got beyond control. He said, "There was not a space as big as the palm of your hand where an insect could have lived. And the men had to get off of those ships or be burned." The wreckage, with dead men strewn about, showed that our execution was appalling. It could not have been greater. It is in very poor form for Members to get up superficially and reflect upon the execution of our Navy in that battle. Do you know it is the first time in the history of the world that any fleet ever totally destroyed another fleet?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am not certain that the gentleman is referring to what I said.

Mr. HOBSON. Not yet; I will in a minute.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say to the gentleman that I said nothing reflecting on the execution of the fleet at Santiago. What I said was that the Spaniards had poor execution.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman will recall that I paid a very high tribute to our fleet.

Mr. HOBSON. Neither of the gentlemen are involved. But I want it to be understood here that our Navy attained a marvelous efficiency in that war. There never had been a case in the history of the world before where one fleet totally destroyed another one. Neither has there been a case in the history of the world when in a fleet action one fleet gained a victory without suffering serious loss.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Then it is not a fact that the inadequacy of the powder prevented the execution which the guns were able to do?

Mr. HOBSON. Of course the gentleman must realize in ballistics that the homogeneity of the powder, its uniformity, is as much of a battle factor as the gun itself in the execution of marksmanship.

That is because the sights are set on the assumption that with a certain elevation you will attain a certain range. Now, if the powder is not uniform, if the powder does not fulfill the assumed qualities of the powder in the ballastic calculations, you will either fall short or go over or vary. It is just as important a part in the marksmanship as the gun itself.

Mr. MADDEN. But, as a matter of fact, the powder did not prevent the execution on the part of the guns in the case referred to by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. HOBSON. No; it did not. I wish to say, though, that it was a great pity that our Government was not supplied in the Spanish War with smokeless powder.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Make it 10 minutes if it is going to be as interesting as this.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman referred, I suppose, to the statement that there was less than 5 per cent of hits made by the American gunners in the Battle of Santiago?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I think I said that I was merely quoting what I had read.

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman, because I am confident he knows, what is considered to be the true percentage of hits in the Battle of Santiago?

Mr. HOBSON. I will say to the gentleman that, in my judgment, no fleet battle had ever been fought in the history of the world where 5 per cent of hits had been attained before. I do not say that such a percentage would be high now. I did not mean that.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman what is the percentage now?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I want to say to the gentleman that the fact was brought out that the powder has to be worked over every five years.

Mr. HOBSON. They have to work over the old powder, but not so much now as formerly. The new powder is more stable.

Now, out of my prison window in Santiago I saw the Spanish soldiers using smokeless powder. It was impressed upon me so much because I could not see them. I knew where they were and could follow them by the sound, but I could not see them, whereas our troops were supplied with the smoke powder. I could see them. The effect was to put us at a very serious disadvantage.

Likewise in the Battle of Santiago, the ships of our fleet, with perhaps one exception—the New Orleans, I think, brought some smokeless powder from abroad—had to use the smoke powder. The Spanish fleet was using the smokeless powder. But the point I wanted to bring out is that it has been more or less a frequent occurrence in print for Americans to reflect upon the Battle of Santiago and the execution of our fleet. I wish the critics could have gone aboard those Spanish wrecks and seen where, as the Spanish admiral said, an insect could not have lived, but would have had to get out or else be burned up. That was the case with every last one of them. It was the first time in the history of the world where a fleet was totally destroyed, and it was the first time in the history of the world where the victor came off without suffering serious loss.

Now, then, as to the Battle of Manila Bay, I was likewise out there after the war, and I reconstructed the ships that Dewey sank, and I know what happened to those ships. It was a gallant and a daring thing to proceed over the mines in that harbor. The fact that those mines did not destroy our ships ought not to be any detraction from the courage and gallantry of the act of going over them. As to the Battle of Manila Bay, some Englishman said, "Why did not you close in, where they could hit and hurt you?" We stood off to reduce their execution, in a very strategic way, and we finally won a victory with the same unparalleled efficiency as won at Santiago. The Spanish ships at Manila Bay were under the protection of the Spanish guns ashore, and whenever a fleet is under such protection it puts any opposing fleet at a serious disadvantage. Dewey could not go around the Spanish ships. He could not "T" them or cap them or go across them. He had to take the fire of their shore guns as well as that of the guns of their fleet.

I do not intend to reflect upon the Spaniards. As I say, I saw the dead men on the decks of those ships. I saw a whole gun's crew where every man was dead at his post. No. 1 was just about ready to fire his gun, No. 2 was training it, No. 3 was elevating it. It was a gun's crew of the dead. I saw the men there dead at their posts of duty all over those ships. No one ought to reflect on the Spaniards, for they fought like the brave and good and noble men they were; but the point is, let it be known now, as far as I can help it to be known, that there is no occasion for any American, at least, to reflect upon those victories at Manila Bay or Santiago. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask that the gentleman be given five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

Mr. HOBSON. I will try not to take all the time. I did not intend to go so far into this question. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, it would strike $750,000 out of the appropriation?

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. GOOD. It would strike out $250,000 and limit the acquisition of powder from these manufacturers.

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, what it really does is to prohibit the Government of the United States from purchasing powder under any circumstances.

Mr. HOBSON. I was not here when the amendment was offered, and only had it from hearsay. Now, as to the situation in the manufacture of powder. It has been illuminating to hear the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] make statements as to the manufacture of powder, and I want to say that they are correct in stating that it does not take a great plant to manufacture powder, but it does take organization and the development of experts, probably to a higher degree than in any other manufacturing process in the world. It would be a sound policy to increase the plant of the Government for manufacturing this material and all similar war materials that require this training. [Applause.] Our Committee on Naval Affairs has taken this into account. I believe also, equally as firmly, that where it can be properly done there ought to be encouragement for private establishments to increase their plants.

This fight comes up twice every year when the Military Affairs Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee present their appropriation bills to the House. My impression is that the agitation of this question in the last few years has brought about a decided improvement and amelioration in existing conditions, and that the resulting arrangement now adopted by the Government, by which the Army and Navy get together and practically determine the specifications and in large measure the price of powder for both services, is a sound method. We should continue it. I will not undertake a discussion of the question of the price. I am inclined to think the price is more nearly reasonable now than many Members believe. The method is a good one, and a wise course to pursue is not to be radical in any respect, but to increase the capacity of our plant and keep a watch over the price each year. Now, as to our present plant—when the gentleman says we can practically treble our capacity that would mean three shifts a day, and we do not want that. You ought to have a larger capacity, so that you can run up our production of powder to double or treble what it is now on a single shift. That ought to be our policy.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. I will.

Mr. GOOD. Considerable has been said in regard to the credit due to the Du Pont Powder Trust for developing smokeless powder. My opinion is, and I have tried to get at it from every source, that the real credit belongs to the officers of the Army and the Navy of the United States.

Mr. HOBSON. I am glad the gentleman brought that up, because some of the officers of the Army and Navy have practically devoted their lives to that matter and have taken great risk when the experiments in that direction were unsafe. I want to pay tribute to the late Lieut. Commander Bernadou, who was wounded at the time Bagley was killed. Bernadou put in years at Newport at the torpedo station when we began to develop the plant. He was assigned to the duty of investigating the development of smokeless powder. We had other expert officers, and if I had time I would mention them and describe the history of the development of powder by our officers. I do not believe that we ought to detract from the credit that properly belongs to private firms in this country, and all countries—it is true they did it for their own commercial advantage—and I do not believe that credit should be given them one jot or tittle more than is due to our officers and specialists in the Army and Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose what I shall have to say will fall flat after the speech of the eloquent gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON]. But I am somewhat surprised at the arguments made by some Members against this amendment, and also astonished at the weight it seems to have had. This amendment provides for reducing the expenses of the Government $250,000, and there is really no sound argument against it. It is said by some of those who have spoken that it is necessary for us to buy from the criminal trusts, for instance, so that we may be able to have powder in time of war. Do not you gentlemen think it would be much safer for the Government to save the $250,000 a year and establish and equip plants of its own which it would have absolute control of?

I want to say that many bugaboos have been presented here and through the newspapers of the country about a war. I want to warn those who are here and the people in this country, and you can take it from history of the wars in the past, that the greatest danger we have of a war is from the plutocracy of this country operating through the trusts and the system at the present time. [Applause.] It is remarkable that gentlemen say the trusts are condemned, and ought to be condemned; but it does not seem so by the action of this Congress. It is true we made the effort to have this same thing done in a previous bill, but failed. I believe that if the constituents of any Member of this House knew the conditions that exist and the harm that the trusts have done to the country, any man who would vote to favor the trusts and the profits that they are making, as this bill provides without this amendment, it would be at the sacrifice of his position in this House.

I want to say that I could not go back and face my constituents under the charge that I had voted against an amendment of this kind to reduce the cost to the Government $250,000 annually, also protect it against the inroads that the trust is making on it.

Now, the argument is raised when some of us desire that the Government shall construct its own battleships, that it costs too much money. We are weighing, then, the profits of the big business in the scale, and the argument is that it costs the Government too much, and therefore we ought not to do it. The statement is made by the officials of the Navy Department that it costs the Government 50 per cent more to construct battleships at the Government yards than it does in the private yards of private shipbuilding corporations. Let us see if that be so. If it be true, it is due to bad management. Let us suppose that bad management exists in the powder factories. If it were properly managed, where it is now understood that it costs 33 cents a pound, if properly managed, if there is the same difference in cost in this powder factory that exists in other bureaus, instead of its costing the Powder Trust what it claims it should, it may only cost them about 22 cents a pound to manufacture the powder.

I would not be surprised if we really found, after you take out the dividends on the large blocks of watered stock and the excessive salaries that are paid and other extravagant payments, that powder could be produced for 22 cents a pound instead of what is claimed by the Powder Trust. It has been said that figures will not lie but that liars will figure, and I have found in my experience that the reason that the criminal trusts and corporations of the country pay their agents large salaries is for the purpose of effectively deceiving the people. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, at the conclusion of my remarks I desire to take a vote. I have already indulged this debate quite a while. I now ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes, and then I shall ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman propose at the end of that time to conclude the debate?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. It has been running since 11 o'clock.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to have five minutes myself.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman can have five minutes at some other time on something else.

Mr. HEFLIN. But I want five minutes upon this particular subject, because I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Then I shall yield the floor now, Mr. Chairman, and let the gentleman from Alabama proceed for five minutes, but I must close this debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a perfectly plain proposition of economy for the Government, that it is a safe and sane step for this Congress to take. There is a difference of 14 cents per pound in powder manufactured by the Government for its own use and that purchased from the Powder Trust. Can any gentleman hesitate as to how he will cast his vote with that proposition looking him in the face? And yet we are frightened here with suggestions that something might happen to the Government powder plant and you could not buy powder on the outside. I have never seen the occasion arise in this House when the trusts were involved, and Members here were seeking to overthrow or dissolve them, that the trusts did not try to frighten us away from our purpose. [Applause.] If you permit this trust to flourish to the destruction of the Government powder-manufacturing establishments, what would you do in case of war with the Government out of the business of manufacturing powder for its own use? [Applause.] We would be helpless in the hands of the trust. How high would the price of powder go under those conditions? [Applause.] You remember the cotton famine during the war, from 1860 to 1865? Cotton sold for $1.27 a pound. Cotton was scarce. What would this Powder Trust do in case of war? It would put the price of powder high. Sixty cents a pound would not touch it. It would be $1.20 a pound; it might be $2.50 a pound. By the step suggested by this amendment we encourage the Government to make its own supply of powder, and we are dealing a body blow to one of the greatest trusts in the United States. [Applause.] Let us go back to the country, this side, at least, and say that we have kept our pledges; that we have fulfilled our platform, and that whenever we could we dealt a blow to every trust that came within reach of this Democratic House. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I further ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of my remarks debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does that deny the right to introduce further amendments?

Mr. PADGETT. Not to introduce them, but it does to debate them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and pending amendments close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I object. I do not want to speak myself, but I object to the latter part of that request.

Mr. PADGETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that at the end of 10 minutes debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that at the expiration of 10 minutes debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire in the few minutes that I shall occupy to address myself to the conservative judgment and the business sense of the committee. When I was a boy I heard the remark that whenever a preacher did not have much sermon he jumped on the Jews. [Laughter.] I know it is an easy matter to jump on the trusts. It is popular, and it finds a responsive chord. I have no more sympathy with the trusts than the most extreme man in this body; but that is not the question before this House. What is the proposition? It is that the Government, under no circumstances, under no condition or crisis that might arise within the fiscal year, could purchase a pound of powder.

Now, is that a sensible, conservative proposition? Can we forecast the events until July 1, 1913, and tell what contingencies or what emergencies might arise and say we will absolutely tie the hands of the Government and forbid the purchase of powder?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not in the time I have.

Mr. GARNER. It is a question at that point with reference——

Mr. PADGETT. I can not yield in the time, but must proceed with my remarks.

Mr. GARNER. I think it is unfair for the gentleman to cite as an illustration an emergency of that kind, when he should know that we could not have it without consideration of the Congress.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield to me for just a correction? Does not the gentleman know we have already appropriated over two and a half million dollars that can be used for the purchase of powder in that time? [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Of course, there are some appropriations, but I am speaking about this one. Now, let me invite your attention to some facts. The devil is entitled to his due. It is said that the Du Pont people are a trust. Assuming that they are and granted that they are. When the Spanish-American War broke out they did not raise the price of powder one fraction of a cent during the whole Spanish War, but continued to sell powder to the Government during the war at the same price at which they had been selling it under the conditions prior to the war. I want to state another fact, that the Government, in the exigencies of the war, made a contract for a very large amount of powder, and when the war terminated and we did not need the powder the company voluntarily gave up its contract, and told the Government to pay simply for what they had purchased and used, and they canceled the surplus and unused part of the contract. That is in the testimony before the committee taken two years ago. Now, then, I want to call attention to another fact. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] stated that the whole investment of the Government in the powder plant at Indianhead and Picatinny, in New Jersey, near Dover, was something a little over four hundred and twenty-odd thousand dollars.

Mr. GOOD. In each plant.

Mr. PADGETT. In each plant. As a matter of fact, if the gentleman will look on page 111 of the present hearings before the Naval Committee he will find that the value of the plant, as submitted by the bureau, for the manufacture of powder and the reworking of powder at Indianhead is $1,422,840. Now, let me call attention to another fact. We say it is a trust. The essential conditions will always make it so. There is only one purchaser for smokeless powder; that is the Government; and there only being one purchaser, there will never be but one manufacturer, because the Government does not purchase and does not use enough to justify the investment and the business enterprise of manufacturing this much smokeless powder used for large arms.

The amount of smokeless powder that is sold to the Government is a very small percentage of the output of their factories. It is a side product, so to speak. Now, then, if you destroy this enterprise you can only replace it with some other single unit. You can not and will not have two manufacturers under individual enterprises. Now, what are the facts further? The Government prescribes the conditions, the requirements, and specifications according to which the powder is to be manufactured, and the Government fixes a board composed of Army officers and Navy officers who fix the price. Now, then, when the Government fixes the quality of the powder and fixes the price of the powder, is not that a fair determination of that transaction, whether it is a trust or is not a trust? The Government fixes the price at which it purchases the powder. Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] made the statement, as I understood it, conveying the impression that the powder company was selling powder at more than $1 a pound and continued at that price until Congress fixed a limitation upon the price. My recollection is that when Congress fixed the limitation at 64 cents, the first time they fixed the limitation upon the purchasing price, powder was selling under the price fixed by the company and the joint Army and Navy board at 68 to 70 cents instead of a dollar and something.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman realizes the price originally obtained was $1.60 a pound.

Mr. PADGETT. Several years before that when it was in an experimental stage, when we first began to make smokeless powder—like everything else. I believe that there was a time when steel rails in this country sold at $80 or $90—$100, some one says. Reduction, volume of business, improvement in process and methods have gradually carried this down, like other things; and now, gentlemen, we come back to deal with this question as business men. The Government is manufacturing powder. Only last year the Naval Committee reported an appropriation, and it became the law, appropriating $250,000 to enlarge the plant at Indianhead, showing that we are not neglecting that enterprise. Only within the last year the $250,000 has been used, but you realize that under Government manufacture, under Government operation, you can not in an emergency have an expansion and an enlargement of business, as you can under individual enterprise and initiative. Do we desire to place the Goverment absolutely upon its own manufacture, with all the machinery that is required to expand, which we know is slow and awkward in its movements?

We do not desire to place the Navy dependent solely upon one institution. We want our own and we want others. If we destroy the one that we have, we have either to substitute somebody else or have to rely absolutely upon ourselves. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PADGETT. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 37.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. PADGETT, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. GOOD, will take their places as tellers.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The point of no quorum made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is well taken.

The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The inquiry is not in order. The Chair, in the absence of a quorum, has directed the Clerk to call the roll.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment reported.

Mr. BARTLETT. There is nothing in order except the calling of the roll.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing in order except the calling of the roll.

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. UNDERWOOD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. FOSTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 24565) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, finding itself without a quorum, the Chairman had ordered the roll to be called, 181 Members answered present, and that he presented herewith the list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] have been ordered, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. PADGETT, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. GOOD, will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 54.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D. C.: New and improved machinery for existing shops, $125,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of this item on lines 12 and 13 for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I notice that the committee has enlarged the appropriation for machinery, cupolas, furnaces, and for new foundry. This is a new item in the bill, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. No. In the appropriation bill of last year a new foundry was authorized, and also its equipment, and the limit of cost of all equipment was fixed at $125,000. But upon investigation we find that $100,000 will be sufficient, and we are reporting only $100,000 instead of $125,000 as authorized in the bill of last year.

Mr. MADDEN. Was any part of the $100,000 appropriated last year left?

Mr. PADGETT. Nothing was appropriated last year. It was only an authorization made.

Mr. MADDEN. Was any money expended on the equipment?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; on the furnaces, but not on the equipment.

Mr. MADDEN. This is a saving of $25,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] withdraws his pro forma amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 12, after the word "furnaces," insert the words "foundry equipment."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For lining and hooping to the muzzle 8-inch 40-caliber Mark V guns, $60,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee whether this is not a new item, this appropriation of $60,000, and whether it is deemed to be essential?

Mr. PADGETT. It was not in the bill of last year. Of course, in these matters of repairing and modernizing the different guns the amounts may vary in different years. Some years certain guns will have to be modernized, and the next year a different type may be modernized, owing to different contingencies in the service. This is in the general proposition of modernizing and repairing and improving the guns in the Navy.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] withdraws his pro forma amendment, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, on Thursday I made an address to the House in which I undertook to demonstrate the top-heavy and deplorable condition of our Navy because of our shortage in torpedo craft protection, such as destroyers and submarines and other necessary auxiliaries. This morning's Washington Post has an editorial, possibly inspired, in which it admits that top-heavy condition, but shifts the responsibility from the Navy Department to the Committee on Naval Affairs and to the House.

Now, what are the facts? In 1909 the Secretary of the Navy, in the building program recommended by him to Congress, asked for two battleships and one repair ship. The Committee on Naval Affairs recommended and the House authorized two battleships, two fleet colliers, four submarines, and six torpedo-boat destroyers. Congress therefore authorized ten times as many of these auxiliaries as the Secretary of the Navy submitted in his building program.

In 1910, in the building program submitted by the Navy Department, there were recommended two battleships, one collier, one gunboat, one river gunboat, two seagoing tugs, two submarine torpedo boats, and one submarine tender. The Committee on Naval Affairs recommended and the House authorized two battleships, two fleet colliers, eight torpedo-boat destroyers, four submarines, one submarine tender, one gunboat, one river gunboat, and two sea-going tugs. In this instance we authorized twice as many of the auxiliaries as was recommended in the building program of the Navy Department.

In 1911 the Navy Department, in its recommended building program, advocated the construction of two battleships and two colliers. The committee, however, has this year recommended two fuel ships, six torpedo-boat destroyers, one tender to the destroyers, and four submarine torpedo boats. So in this case we have recommended six times as many of these necessary auxiliaries as were recommended in the building program of the Secretary of the Navy.

Now, why should a newspaper with the pretensions of the Washington Post publish an editorial without taking the trouble to inform itself, so as not to mislead its readers? This recklessness has destroyed the power of the press as molders of public opinion in this country. The people know that some of the newspapers ignorantly mislead them and that others willfully deceive them; therefore they lose confidence in the whole.

This is not true of the entire press of the country. I am glad to say that the largest portion of the press is reliable and dependable; but the few have destroyed confidence in the whole, just as a few shysters bring discredit upon the whole profession of lawyers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For modifying 5-inch 50-caliber Mark V guns, $75,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, and I ask that it be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 4, page 20, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the several appropriations named hereinbefore for new batteries for ships of the Navy shall be expended for the purchase, manufacture, construction, or repair of such of the materials named hereinbefore, as manufactured in a Government establishment, from or by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of the commencement and during the prosecution of said work established an 8-hour work day for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged, or to be engaged, in the work on the materials named hereinbefore."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be considered as pending, like the other one, and that the paragraph be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this amendment be considered as pending and that the section be passed for the present. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Small arms and machine guns: For new small arms and machine guns for ships, $203,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order to the paragraph, commencing with line 15 on page 20 and ending with line 21.

Mr. PADGETT. That paragraph has been passed and the next paragraph has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is too late, because that paragraph has been passed.

Mr. CULLOP. I ask unanimous consent to return to it.

Mr. PADGETT. I decline to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] has offered an amendment, which must first be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 24, page 20, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase or manufacture of such small arms or machine guns, for ships, as have been or are being manufactured in a Government establishment, from or by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of commencement and during the prosecution of the work on said small arms and machine guns established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged or to be engaged in the work on the materials named herein."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be pending until the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this amendment be pending and that the paragraph be passed for the present. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to return to the paragraph indicated by me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana can not move to return. He will have to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. CULLOP. I ask unanimous consent to return to that paragraph in order that a point of order may be reserved or made against it.

Mr. PADGETT. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph beginning with line 15, page 20. Is there objection?

Mr. PADGETT. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee objects. The clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arming and equipping Naval Militia: For arms, accouterment, ammunition, medical outfits, fuel, water for steaming purposes, and clothing, and the printing or purchase of necessary books of instruction, expenses in connection with the organizing and training of the Naval Militia of the various States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, including salaries of the necessary clerical force and office expenses in the Navy Department, at Washington, D. C., $125,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language in line 8, down to and including the words "District of Columbia," in line 10, page 22.

The Navy Department has no authority to expend money for salaries, clerical force, and office expenses in the city of Washington. That is an item which should be provided in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. PADGETT. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill has provided, as it passed the House and is pending in the Senate, for these clerks, but directs that it shall be paid out of this money. I think the provision had better be left in here. The authorization for clerks is a matter that belongs in the legislative bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that if this provision is allowed to remain in the bill as written it will give this bureau not only the clerical assistance allowed in the legislative bill, but an unlimited authority to employ any additional number.

Mr. PADGETT. Not at all, because it expressly limits it in the legislative bill to the number specified.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is no limitation on the number in this bill, and, if passed, it will be subsequent to the other and will supersede it.

Mr. PADGETT. I acknowledge that it is subject to a point of order, if the chairman please.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I will state that I hold in my hand a bill which has been reported to the House to improve the efficiency of the naval militia of the several States.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman allow me to make one observation?

Mr. FOSS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PADGETT. I think the gentleman from Illinois has gone a little too far in his point of order. I do not think he intends to cut off the office expenses. He ought to limit his point of order to the clerks that go in the legislative bill, "including salaries of the necessary clerical force," and leave the words "office expenses" in.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will modify my point of order in accordance with the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words which the gentleman from Tennessee has just pointed out, "office expenses."

Mr. PADGETT. I will say to the gentleman that the office expenses are always provided for in this bill and do not come under the legislative bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What are the office expenses?

Mr. PADGETT. Furniture and supplies amounting to $404.88.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is not a new provision.

Mr. PADGETT. It was put in last year for the first time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have furniture and supplies connected with the office now.

Mr. BARTLETT. If the gentleman will allow me, I want to suggest that if it were necessary to have additional money for office expenses it ought to have been provided for by the legislative bill and been estimated for. No estimate was submitted, and therefore the Appropriations Committee made no appropriation.

Mr. PADGETT. The legislative bill provides for salaries but does not undertake to provide for these expenses.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the legislative bill would provide for these expenses if there had been any estimate furnished by the head of the Navy Department, or anything presented to the committee showing it to be necessary.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that the legislative bill does not take care of it; that the jurisdiction of those items does not pertain to the committee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is mistaken. It has jurisdiction of all the bureaus in the city of Washington, and if the head of the department had come before the Committee on Appropriations and asked for it in the usual and proper way it would have been allowed if proper. I want to suggest to the gentleman, when he says that there may be some money needed for furniture, that this office has been in existence but a little more than a year and evidently does not need furniture, and I presume when the head of the bureau came before the Appropriations Committee he did not ask for anything of the kind for that reason.

Mr. PADGETT. No; it was submitted to our committee. It is an old office and has existed for a great many years.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The proper committee for the head of the bureau to have gone before to ask for such expenses was the Committee on Appropriations and have it go in the legislative appropriation bill. Now, this is a practice that not only creates confusion, but is liable to involve the Government in a great deal of useless expense. If we have supplies in one bill and a little in another bill, there is great danger of confusion and unnecessary expense. There ought to be one bill for these items, so that the House may understand when it makes an appropriation that it is making the entire appropriation necessary for the year.

Mr. BARTLETT. I submit that the estimates ought to have been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, the committee authorized by the rules of the House to provide for all these items.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Precisely.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that, so far as my knowledge goes, the Committee on Appropriations have not heretofore provided for furniture in the Bureau of Navigation or the Marine Corps or any of the subdivisions of the Navy Department. They provide for the clerical force and the naval appropriation bill carries in it the provisions for the supplies and office expenses. Under this wording here, "office expenses," are included not only such small items of furniture as they need, but stationery, pens, ink, and things of that sort.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will get the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill which passed the House and is now pending in the Senate, he will find a liberal appropriation made in that bill for all the office expenses necessary—furniture, stationery, and everything else for the running of the offices in Washington—and I repeat that if we are to provide in one bill for the expenses of an office, and in a separate bill, a bill which does not have jurisdiction of these matters, an additional appropriation for the same purpose, the House will never be able to know what it is appropriating. In other words, it would be a double appropriation for the same purpose. I insist, for that reason, on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already sustained the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, as I stated before, the Committee on Naval Affairs has unanimously reported a bill which is now on the calendar of the House to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia. This bill is meritorious, and passed the last Congress and, I believe, the preceding Congress. I realize that it is subject to a point of order, but I ask unanimous consent that I may offer it as an amendment and that it may be considered as pending at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to have the bill read?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I simply ask unanimous consent that this bill—the Naval Militia bill—may be offered as an amendment in connection with the naval appropriation bill at this time and be considered by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 2588) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes, which is now on the calendar, be offered as an amendment at this particular time. Is there objection?

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the matter explained a little bit.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman that this practically defines the relations of the Naval Militia to the Regular Navy and puts the Naval Militia on practically the same basis as the Regular Militia to the Army is under the Dick bill, which was passed a number of years ago.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

The Clerk read as follows:

Equipment of vessels: For hemp, wire, iron, and other materials for the manufacture of cordage, anchors, cables, galleys, and chains; specifications for purchase thereof shall be so prepared as shall give fair and free competition; canvas for the manufacture of sails, awnings, hammocks, and other work; stationery for chaplains and for commanding and navigating officers of ships, equipment officers on shore and afloat, and for the use of courts-martial on board ship; purchase, repair, and exchange of typewriters for ships; the removal and transportation of ashes from ships of war; interior appliances and tools for equipment buildings in navy yards and naval stations; supplies for seamen's quarters; aviation outfits; and for the purchase of all other articles of equipment at home and abroad, and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels and manufacture of equipment articles in the several navy yards; all pilotage and towage of ships of war; canal tolls, wharfage, docks, and port charges, and other necessary incidental expenses of a similar nature; services and materials in repairing, correcting, adjusting, and testing compasses on shore and on board ship; nautical and astronomical instruments and repairs to same; libraries for ships of war, professional books and papers, and drawings and engravings for signal books; naval signals and apparatus, namely, signals, lights, lanterns, rockets, and running lights; compass fittings, including binnacles, tripods, and other appendages of ship's compasses; logs and other appliances for measuring the ship's way, and leads and other appliances for sounding; lanterns and lamps and their appendages for general use on board ship for illuminating purposes, and oil and candles used in connection therewith; service and supplies for coast signal service, including the purchase of land as necessary for sites for wireless telegraph shore stations; instruments and apparatus, supplies, and technical books and periodicals required to carry on experimental and research work in wireless telegraphy at the naval wireless telegraph laboratory; bunting and other materials for making and repairing flags of all kinds; photographs, photographic instruments, and materials; musical instruments and music; installing, maintaining, and repairing interior and exterior signal communications and all electrical appliances of whatsoever nature on board naval vessels, except range finders, battle order and range transmitters and indicators, and motors and their controlling apparatus used to operate machinery belonging to other bureaus, $3,843,300: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service at the several navy yards, naval stations, and coaling stations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, shall not exceed $209,093.60: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for the purchase of land for sites for wireless telegraph shore stations shall not exceed $50,000: Provided further, That the total expenditures under this appropriation at the naval wireless telegraph laboratory shall not exceed $5,000.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the second proviso, beginning on line 23, page 24, providing for a sum to be paid out of this appropriation with reference to land.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman in that connection that it is not authorizing an additional amount, but we are placing a limitation on the amount that may be expended out of the general sum to not exceed a certain amount. There are wireless stations and they desire to get land along the Atlantic coast and some on the Pacific coast in developing a shore-station wireless system. We are limiting the amount that they may expend for land for that purpose.

Mr. RAUCH. How many stations are intended to be covered?

Mr. PADGETT. My recollection is seven or eight.

Mr. RAUCH. I would ask the chairman of the committee if the station near the city of Washington is included in this proviso?

Mr. PADGETT. The next paragraph provides for the land for the Arlington station. I also understand that some is wanted down on the Florida coast and some in Alaska, and they want to get one on the Pacific coast. I could not say, without refreshing my recollection, as to the other points.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The following-described part of the Government land in Alexandria County, State of Virginia, known as the Arlington estate is hereby transferred to, and placed under the control and jurisdiction of, the Navy Department for use for naval purposes: Beginning with the stone monument at the southwestern corner of the Arlington Military Reservation, Va., and extending thence north 4° 5′ west 633.34 feet to a stake; thence south 89° 5′ east 1,110.23 feet to a stake; thence south 10° 44′ east 404.89 feet to a stone in the southern boundary of said reservation; thence south 79° 16′ west 1,160.7 feet to the place of beginning, containing 13.4 acres more or less. All bearings refer to the magnetic north.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the paragraph in order to ask the gentleman from Tennessee to explain just what this does.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman knows that over here on the Arlington property they are building a powerful wireless station.

Mr. TILSON. The towers are quite visible from the Capitol.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. The land on which it is built is under the jurisdiction and control of the War Department. The War Department and the Navy Department have recommended that this little portion of land on which this wireless station is situated be placed under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department. The Navy Department operates and has control and jurisdiction of the wireless telegraph.

Mr. TILSON. Then it is entirely with the consent of the War Department?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILSON. And it is not sufficient to interfere with Fort Myer or the reservation there?

Mr. PADGETT. It is only a question of the control of jurisdiction. Of course the Government still owns the land and it is only a question of the Navy Department having jurisdiction and control over that small part of 13 acres out of the one or two thousand acre tract over there on which the wireless towers are built.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of battle compasses for ships of the Navy heretofore completed, $120,000.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. I will be glad if the gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. RUBEY. I understand that this is new language, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; the purchase of compasses and outfittings for ships is entirely in order, and also the caring for those we purchase. This is a purchase of new kind of compass, but it is not a new business and the point of order does not lie, nor is there any law prescribing what kind of compasses shall be purchased. We are buying these compasses, which are considered to be the best, for the purpose of putting them on ships, it being considered that they are the most reliable compass for navigation.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserved the point of order for the purpose of getting information. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman whether we could not reach some agreement about the next section, whether it should be passed without prejudice? I do not want to lose my right to offer an amendment to the paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman can offer his amendment and then we can agree to pass it by without prejudice, if he desires to do so, until we reach the other part of the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman prefers to have the amendment pending?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Coal and transportation: Coal and other fuel for steamers' and ships' use, and other equipment purposes, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same, and for the general maintenance of naval coaling depots and coaling plants, water for all purposes on board naval vessels, including the expenses of transportation and storage of the same, $4,000,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 7, after the word "dollars," insert:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in time of peace for transporting coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans for the use of Navy vessels or navy yards on the Pacific Ocean, except this limitation shall not apply to vessels crossing the Pacific Ocean or stationed in the Hawaiian Islands or in the Philippine Islands, or to navy yards situated in those islands."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves a point of order upon the amendment. Then the gentleman from Tennessee desires to pass this paragraph with this amendment pending subject to the point of order worded that the undisputed parts of the bill may be read and then return to it?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that this amendment may be considered as pending, that the point of order be reserved against the amendment, and that the section and amendment may be passed without prejudice for the present. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know—of course, this amendment as offered will be printed in the RECORD, so Members will see what it is?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the reason I ask that it be passed now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It will be understood we return to this paragraph and dispose of it before the item for the increase of the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we want to dispose of everything before we take up the increase of the Navy.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I would like to have that understood.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask him how soon this matter will be reached.

Mr. PADGETT. I can not tell the gentleman exactly, but I would presume we would reach it upon the next day in which we had a full consideration of the bill. We may reach the item some time in the afternoon or might not reach it; but I think we would reach it during the next full day's consideration.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. That would be likely on Monday or Tuesday?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know we will get Monday, but we will get Tuesday, and I am going to try to get Monday.

Mr. TRIBBLE. What is the purpose of carrying this to the heel of the bill?

Mr. PADGETT. It is a question that has been up before, and we want to dispose of the undisputed parts; and then Members want to see the amendment in the RECORD, so as to be able to familiarize themselves with it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. What is the difference between this and the one we had up on yesterday which Members of the committee had never seen and the gentleman refused to allow it to take its course, although I, as a member of the committee, requested it?

Mr. PADGETT. Because we had the matter under debate, and we had been debating it when the request was made.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I do not know that I object, but I can not see the difference. If any, I think the difference is in my favor.

Mr. PADGETT. We were in the heat of debate when the request was made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14083) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to House joint resolution 142.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (S. Res. 320):

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected HENRY CABOT LODGE, a Senator from the State of Massachusetts, President pro tempore of the Senate, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Saturday, May 25, 1912.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Toward the purchase and preparation of necessary sites, purchase and erection of towers and buildings, and the purchase and installation of machinery and apparatus of high-power wireless telegraph stations (cost not to exceed $1,000,000), to be located as follows: One in the Isthmian Canal Zone, one on the California coast, one in the Hawaiian Islands, one in American Samoa, one on the island of Guam, and one in the Philippine Islands, $400,000, to be available until expended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] what is contemplated by this provision?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it fairly well explains itself. It is to establish a world-wide wireless-telegraph system, with a station in Panama, one on the California coast, one in the Hawaiian Islands, one in Guam, one in American Samoa, and one in the Philippines.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What expense will be involved in addition to the million dollars limited here?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think a great deal will be involved. There will be one operator at each place, of course.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this a matter of very great urgency?

Mr. PADGETT. It is regarded as such, especially so in view of the disaster of the Titanic recently.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there are several objections I have to the item. One of them, if there were no others, is the provision providing for the station on the Isthmus of Panama. Conditions on the Isthmus are such that the wireless station necessary there should not be under the control of the Navy Department, but should be under the control of the operating force of the canal. At present the Government has a wireless station at the Isthmus of Panama and the information necessary to be obtained from vessels approaching the canal is obtained only with the utmost difficulty.

The only messages, I was informed, that were ever transmitted with any degree of rapidity are the messages which announced the success of the Naval Academy in athletic contests with the Military Academy. In the operation of the canal it will be of the utmost importance that information be furnished to those in charge as to the approach of vessels, so that arrangements may be made for their passage and as to the character and amount of supplies. The information should not be sifted through some other source. But there is another reason why at this time I am very strongly opposed to this provision. The act of June 22, 1906, provides as follows:

Hereafter the heads of the several executive departments and all other officers authorized or required to make estimates for the public service shall include in their annual estimates furnished the Secretary of the Treasury for inclusion in the Book of Estimates all estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year for which they are prepared and submitted, and special or additional estimates for that fiscal year shall only be submitted to carry out laws subsequently enacted or when deemed imperatively necessary for the public service by the department in which they shall originate, in which case such special or additional estimate shall be accompanied by a full statement of its imperative necessity and reasons for its omission in the annual estimates.

The act of March 4, 1909, provides:

Immediately upon the receipt of the regular annual estimates of appropriations needed for the various branches of the Government it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to estimate as nearly as may be the revenues of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year, and if the estimates for appropriations, including the estimated amount necessary to meet all continuing and permanent appropriations, shall exceed the estimated revenues the Secretary of the Treasury shall transmit the estimates to Congress as heretofore required by law and at once transmit a detailed statement of all of said estimates to the President, to the end that he may, in giving Congress information of the state of the Union and in recommending to their consideration such measures as he may judge necessary, advise the Congress how, in his judgment, the estimated appropriations could with least injury to the public service be reduced so as to bring the appropriations within the estimated revenues, or, if such reduction be not, in his judgment, practicable without undue injury to the public service, that he may recommend to Congress such loans or new taxes as may be necessary to cover the deficiency.

The purpose of these provisions is very apparent. They were enacted to put an end to the practice that had been existing of transmitting to Congress estimates which were palpably insufficient, and after the annual statement was issued to the press by the Secretary of the Treasury as to the relative situation regarding estimates for appropriations and revenues, subsequently to flood Congress with an accession of new estimates, making the statement absolutely worthless.

They were enacted further to place upon the President some responsibility for the expenditures of the Government and to compel him to exercise some authority in preventing estimates being submitted to the Congress grossly in excess of the estimated revenues. No estimate was submitted for this particular service in the regular estimates, but in a letter dated March 2, 1912, it was submitted as a supplemental estimate. In compliance with the law requiring the head of the department to state the reasons for its imperative necessity and for its omission from the regular estimates, the following was submitted to the Congress by the Secretary of the Navy through the Secretary of the Treasury:

I have the honor to transmit herewith, for transmission to Congress, a supplemental estimate of appropriation required for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, as follows:

Bureau of Equipment: Navy wireless telegraph stations, $1,000,000.

This item was not included in the original estimates transmitted to you for transmission to Congress, as the department was desirous of keeping the total of the estimates to as low a figure as possible.

In other words, for the purpose of misleading the public and the Congress, an estimate, which is now submitted as necessary for the public service, was withheld from the Congress until after the statement issued by the Secretary of the Treasury had been made.

I took occasion at the outset of this session of Congress to call attention to the fact that the statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury to the effect that this administration was submitting for the next fiscal year estimates lower than the estimated revenues for the next fiscal year was grossly misleading.

I recall that in some of the partisan press of the country my statement was very severely condemned. Yet this is but one of several instances in which the departments have shown a contempt for the law of the land by presuming to send in such a statement as a compliance with the requirement that they should submit no new or supplemental estimates other than those included in the regular Book of Estimates, except to carry out some law subsequently enacted or because of conditions arising in the service which would imperatively require the appropriation to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Since the 4th day of March the Committee on Appropriations has been engaged in the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. We have already taken five volumes of testimony upon the estimated appropriations required for the public service during the next ensuing fiscal year. Every department of the Government has been aware of the fact that the committee has been working under the utmost difficulty and the greatest pressure in an effort to prepare this bill for submission to the House. To-day estimates have been submitted for $97,000 in one item, and yesterday in the sum of $575,000 for two additional items, in the belief, apparently, that a department needs but to submit an estimate to Congress to have its action ratified by an appropriation without consideration or investigation.

This particular service is not of such an urgent character that it is necessary to make this appropriation at this time, nor were the conditions such that it was not possible for the department to make the estimate in accordance with the law. So far as I am able to do, I propose to compel the executive departments of the Government to comply with the laws which have been enacted, without regard to partisan considerations, in an attempt to put the business of the Government on an intelligent and legitimate basis, and I propose in this instance to insist upon the point of order. If the gentleman from Tennessee wishes to make a statement, however, I shall reserve it for the time being.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the provision is subject to a point of order. But I want to say that the committee, at least the chairman of the committee and others, had in mind the laws that the gentleman has cited, and we also appreciated the fact that the estimates were not submitted and should have been. I concur fully in what the gentleman from New York has said with reference to the conduct of the department in not submitting estimates. All of the departments send in supplemental estimates. I do not think it is a good practice. At the same time, bearing in mind all these things and thinking of the importance and necessity of this matter and the great humanitarian benefit that would accrue from the establishment of such a wireless system, the committee felt constrained to waive that and to report the measure. If the gentleman insists upon the point of order, it is well taken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC WORKS, BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS.

Navy yard, Portsmouth, N. H.: Crane track and railroad extension, $20,000; tool house for naval station, $2,000; quarters for commanding officer, naval prison, $12,000; improvement and additions to power plant, $10,000; in all, $44,000.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the item for quarters for commanding officer as being new legislation and not authorized by law.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the point of order is well taken. Appropriations for the improvement of yards are always provided for in this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I inquire of the gentleman how much of this is new legislation?

Mr. PADGETT. Perhaps everything under public works is more or less new legislation in this sense, that it provides for something that has not heretofore been provided for. The Bureau of Yards and Docks is charged with the duty and responsibility of making these repairs and improvements. For instance, here is the crane track and railroad extension, $20,000. That extension is needed to reach other points on the yard, and it is simply a continuation of work already authorized.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is this a new crane track and railroad?

Mr. PADGETT. It is an extension of the track that is already there.

Mr. BARTLETT. The tool house for naval prison, quarters for commanding officer, and improvement and additions to power plant are all new provisions, are they?

Mr. PADGETT. No; they are continuations of existing projects or improvements.

Mr. BARTLETT. What law authorizes them?

Mr. PADGETT. The law that established the yard, and the law that heretofore authorized the establishment of a railroad there. This is simply an extension of that railroad.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman mean permanent law or some current appropriation bill?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know whether it was on an appropriation bill, but it was sufficient if it was.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no; an appropriation bill only makes the law for that year.

Mr. PADGETT. True; but if it establishes an institution, then under the rulings of the House an enlargement or extension of that existing institution is in order. If an appropriation bill authorizes the building of quarters, then a provision for the enlargement of those quarters is in order.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think I understand the rule very well, and I understand it to be that where Congress has authorized a public work, a continuance of that public work is in order; but have these officers' quarters been authorized in any bill, or are they a part of any public work now to be done?

Mr. PADGETT. The bills that we have had heretofore have authorized various buildings for this yard.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have particular reference to quarters for commanding officer, naval prison. What law is there now that authorizes such a work?

Mr. PADGETT. As I said, when they established the yard they authorized the construction of buildings, and among those buildings were officers' quarters. Now, this is simply an addition to the general scheme that is already there.

Mr. BARTLETT. As I understand the gentleman, then, it is proposed to appropriate for a commanding officer's quarters upon an authorization for yards and docks at Portsmouth.

Mr. PADGETT. The yard is there, and various things have been authorized there.

Mr. BARTLETT. I am trying to get the gentleman to state what has heretofore been specifically authorized.

Mr. PADGETT. I could not tell the gentleman that. The creation of a naval station there has been authorized, and then there have been various things authorized as parts of that naval station. As I was trying to explain to the gentleman, there was a crane track and a railroad authorized there.

Mr. BARTLETT. Has that been completed?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know that it is completed, because the length of it has not been limited. They simply authorized a track there and appropriated some money to build it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it being used?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the part of it that is completed.

Mr. BARTLETT. And this is to extend it?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman think that is a continuation of a public work?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. If you build a house, can you go on and build another house without further authorization?

Mr. PADGETT. That has been expressly held.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think not.

Mr. PADGETT. I think so—on the question of marine barracks. It has been held that where it is an extension or enlargement of barracks already built it is clearly in order to appropriate to add to it or to enlarge it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, suppose at the navy yard at Philadelphia previous legislation had authorized a canal 100 feet long from the river, I will ask the gentleman if he thinks that a subsequent House could have appropriated to extend the canal to New York?

Mr. PADGETT. The rulings are that whenever a public work is in progress, it is in order on a subsequent appropriation bill to enlarge or extend it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Well, that would be an extension of the canal from the yard at Philadelphia so that they could get through to New York Harbor. Would that be subject to a point of order?

Mr. PADGETT. The extension of a canal and improvements of harbors do not come under this bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman does not mean to say that we have nothing to do with navy yards?

Mr. PADGETT. I say that this bill has nothing to do with the construction of canals or the improvement of harbors; that belongs to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. You have been digging a good many canals.

Mr. PADGETT. But not under the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, here is an appropriation for a building for the commandant to live in.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; when we authorized the naval station it carried with it authority for the construction of places for people to work in and for people to live in. It is the general part and scope of the purpose of the bill to authorize the improvement of the naval station.

Mr. TRIBBLE. My answer and objection is that it is creating too many houses for officers to live in on the land and nothing on the sea. That is the reason I object to it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] wants to make a point of order to the whole paragraph, but I by my point of order cut him out, and therefore I will make a point of order to the whole paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say as to the point of order to the whole paragraph, Mr. Chairman, that this is reported for the purpose of improving the yard, to extend and maintain the work; and that having already been authorized, its enlargement and extension as a public work is not subject to a point of order, and the point of order is entirely too broad.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I understand that my colleague has made a point of order specifically against "quarters of the commanding officer," and then he makes in addition to that a point of order to the other parts of the paragraph. I have unsuccessfully attempted to find out from the chairman of the committee any law authorizing the erection of quarters for a commanding officer. There is a law that establishes this naval station in the navy yard at New Hampshire, and there may be a law carried in the appropriation bill authorizing the building of a railroad extension.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman claim that there being a law establishing a navy yard at Portsmouth, that you can not provide for the building of a crane, the building of quarters for the officers, the building of a public-service station; that it is subject to a point of order unless you have a report from the committee and legislation that there shall be these things at the navy yard that exists by law?

Mr. BARTLETT. I think I know the rule very well—that wherever a public work is authorized and begun you can in an appropriation bill appropriate money to complete it or carry on the public work. Where the public work has been completed, as building a railroad seems to have been done, authority to build another railroad can not be carried in a subsequent appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman is too narrow in his construction. I do not think it ever has been so held.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, an appropriation for quarters for a commanding officer—I suppose we have had quarters for the commanding officer there. I suppose a naval prison is not absolutely necessary to carry on a public work.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I will.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I know that there are such quarters there and have been for years. I know the railroad is there and has been there not for a great many years. There is nothing in this section that I see that I do not know of my own knowledge to exist there, and it is only continuing it.

Mr. BARTLETT. The fact that the gentleman from New Hampshire knows all about it will be accepted by me.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I state it as a matter of fact.

Mr. BARTLETT. Whatever facts the gentleman from New Hampshire states I accept without question, but it looks to me that the rule would be carried very far if Congress, after establishing a navy yard and appropriating money to build it, as the gentleman from New Hampshire states, after getting the commander's quarters and officers' quarters erected, could build others under guise of "improvements."

Mr. SULLOWAY. I suggest there have been quarters there for some time. It is an improvement of those quarters.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Those quarters are completed, are they not? They are not in the process of construction?

Mr. SULLOWAY. They are not completed in that sense.

Mr. BARTLETT. They need newer and better ones, I apprehend?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I do not know about the better part of it, but I guess they want something that will protect them from the dropping of rain through the roof.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, here is a naval station established by law. Suppose it burned down, is it subject to a point of order to reconstruct it? It may be that this station is not needed. It may be that a majority of the naval stations—the one at Pensacola, the one at Portsmouth, the one at Mare Island, the one at New Orleans—are not needed, but the point is whether or not, being established by law, it is in order for the House of Representatives on an appropriation bill to construct a prison and construct the railway.

Mr. BARTLETT. This is said to be a naval prison.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Have we established a naval station at Portsmouth?

Mr. CANNON. You have established a naval yard there.

Mr. HOBSON. The prison has been there for 15 years.

Mr. SULLOWAY. There is a prison there.

Mr. HOBSON. It was there when I was cruising as a midshipman 20 years ago.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Then what is the need of another one?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I insist that if this rule means what these gentlemen say it does, then there is no limit, and you can build 50 yards of railroad and complete 50 miles in addition to it.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, it will be in order, the naval station being there, established by law and occupied, so far as this rule is concerned, to add $50,000,000 in improvements on that navy yard, building officers' quarters, and prisons, and public-service stations, and what not. That does not mean, however, that the House would do it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I know the rule is pretty broad, but I never dreamed it would go that far.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, except as to quarters for commanding officer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] makes the point of order against that clause in the paragraph reading "quarters for commanding officer." The Chair finds a ruling on an identical state of facts, which the Clerk will read, being in volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents, section 3758, page 506.

The Clerk read as follows:

An appropriation for officers' quarters at a navy yard is not in order on the naval appropriation bill as in continuance of a public work. On February 13, 1907, the naval appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when the Clerk read:

"Naval station, New Orleans, La.: Improvement of water front, $25,000; levee improvement and grading, $25,000; central electric light and power plant, extension, $50,000; railroad system, $5,000; drainage system, $10,000; central heating plant, $18,000; paving, $10,000; quarters for commandant, $12,000; fitting up yard buildings 8 and 16, $4,300; dispensary building, $9,000; in all, navy yard, New Orleans, $168,300."

Mr. JAMES R. MANN, of Illinois, made the point of order against the words, "quarters for commandant, $12,000."

After debate, the Chairman sustained the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know who was in the chair at that time, probably a good parliamentarian, but I have a recollection that you can find conflicting decisions touching that matter on such amendments. I recollect away back in the early seventies and also in the nineties such decisions were made, but I am quite sure, without having examined the matter, that there are contrary decisions, and if the Chair will indulge me, I just want to say that, in my judgment, everything that goes to perfect that public work, including officers' quarters, in the light of the rule or any sensible construction of it, as it seems to me, although I do not desire to criticize either the Chairman who made that decision or the present Chairman, would be in order. I merely want to register my protest against the continuation of a ruling founded upon that precedent.

Mr. PADGETT. I was going to offer an amendment to reduce the amount from $44,000 to $32,000, and the $12,000 has gone out, and I want to ask general consent that the Clerk be authorized to correct all totals, as that will save going through it item by item. That is the customary practice.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection that will be done. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy yard, New York, N. Y.: One 50-ton locomotive crane, $50,000; paving and grading, $15,000; yard railroad, extension, $10,000; dredging, $50,000; in all, navy yard, New York, N. Y., $125,000.

Mr. MAHER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 4, after the word "dollars" insert "to continue improvement water front, $175,000."

Mr. MAHER. Mr. Chairman, the department has approved an appropriation for this purpose of $350,000. The Brooklyn Navy Yard has just completed the building of what we believe to be the largest governmental dry dock in the United States. This new dry dock just completed is able to dock ships drawing 33 feet of water, and if necessary 35 feet. The basin at the Brooklyn Navy Yard has never been dredged to a depth of over 30 feet and the newer first-class battleships draw between 28 and 29 feet. The amount of $50,000 allowed by the committee is insufficient to perform the work of dredging so as to fully utilize this immense dry dock. My amendment reduces the amount approved by the department by one-half. If we can only have $50,000 to do this work that is absolutely necessary to be done in that yard, why we might just as well try to get along without it, because it is in no sense a sufficient amount. I therefore hope that my amendment will pass in order that the basin may be properly dredged so as to enable the department in Brooklyn to dock the first-class battleships when they need repair.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, all I desire to say in regard to this amendment is that the committee first left out the whole proposition, but on the 15th of April I received a letter from the Secretary of the Navy calling my attention to the dock which has just been completed and the necessity of dredging in front of it in order to make it available, and he asked for $50,000, and we have included that $50,000 in the bill, so we have met the request of the department in this particular matter, and the other amount is not needed at this time for the general matter.

Mr. MAHER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. MAHER. Have you given any consideration to the improvement of the water front at that yard?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; we considered that. The department asked $350,000 in the general estimate, but the committee decided not to allow it; and the gentleman will remember that the department is considering, and the Secretary has given out some interviews relative to, the disposing of the navy yard at New York, and also at Boston and other places, and consolidating all of them in a great navy yard at Narragansett Bay. He stated to the committee that he had not yet reached any conclusion in the matter, and that it was only in the investigation stage; and while the matter is being investigated and until the department is prepared to make definite arrangement, we do not think it advisable to make extensive appropriations. But when he sent a letter to the committee that in order to use this dock it was necessary to have $50,000 to dredge it so ships could get in there, the committee thought that we had met the needs of the service.

Mr. MAHER. My information is that $50,000 will not be sufficient to do the necessary work there.

Mr. PADGETT. That is all that was asked for, and they said it would be sufficient, and it came from the engineers.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval station, Key West, Fla.: Power plant, $25,000; grading and paving, $5,000; paving and grading on Whitehead, Front, and Green Streets where abutting on naval station, $5,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, however, That the cost of the United States Government's share for paving and grading said streets shall not exceed one-fourth of the total cost thereof; in all, $35,500.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph as far as it relates to paving of streets.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not hear the gentleman's point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. That part of the paragraph which refers to pavement of streets at the naval station, Key West, Fla.

Mr. PADGETT. I will say to the gentleman the object of that is there are two streets that surround the navy yard, and they are to be improved. They are public streets, and they have a system there that the abutting property owner contributes his part, and then it provides that the Government shall pay one-fourh of the cost, which is a little more than $5,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say this: In every city in the United States where the Government has a building, or in every State in the United States where the Government has a building, the law provides that it will not take title until the State provides that no tax of any kind shall be levied against the Government for any improvement.

In the city of Chicago we have a Federal building surrounded by four streets. Under our system of assessments, the abutting property is taxed for the improvement of the streets. For a number of years the Government of the United States refused to pave the side of the streets which came next to the Federal building. I undertook, by an amendment to a bill on the floor of the House, to have a provision inserted providing that the Government should pay for the paving of the streets abutting this property. A point of order was made against the amendment.

Arguments were made for and against the point of order. The point of order was sustained, and, as far as I know, no appropriation has ever been made for the pavement of a public street fronting a Federal public building.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not only has it not been made, but it has been refused to be made by the Appropriations Committee or any other one.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. And time and again the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Boutell, a former Member of this House, offered an amendment to pay for more pavement in front of the public building in Chicago, and at the same time I offered one to pave such a street in my own State, calling for about $2,000, where we had paved the street, and the Treasury Department said it ought to be paid, but they were not authorized by law to do it. And uniformly it has been so held.

Mr. MADDEN. I agree with the gentleman that there never has been a case, so far as I know.

Mr. BARTLETT. They did get one through without a point of order being made on it.

Mr. MADDEN. So far as I know, there has never been such a case, and——

Mr. BARTLETT. I call the gentleman's attention to the following from volume 4, section 3779, of Hinds' Precedents:

Nor is it in order to repair paving adjacent to a public building but in a city street, although it may have been laid originally by the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no question but that it is prohibited under the rules of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I think there is no such case except one. I think the paving of the part of the streets in front of the post-office building at Chicago was done at Government expense, and afterwards there was appropriation offered to pave more of the street and the House promptly voted it down.

Mr. MADDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but he is wrong.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will look it up, he will find I am right.

Mr. MADDEN. We made a strenuous effort to get the Government to pave the street——

Mr. PAYNE. It was put on the ground that they had already commenced a public work there, and it was ruled out.

Mr. MADDEN. Here is what the situation was there——

Mr. PAYNE. There is no law for it.

Mr. MADDEN. The street on the side of the Government building was left unpaved—one-half of four streets—for a long time, and the final outcome of the thing was that the citizens owning the property on the opposite side of these streets were taxed not only for the pavement on the side of the streets on which they owned property, but for the side of the streets on which the Government owned its property. And if that be the case in the matter of the Federal building in Chicago, and all other Federal buildings that I know anything about, there is no reason why this particular case should be made an exception to the rule. Therefore, I make the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say that the city of Key West has made no assessment that I know of.

Mr. MADDEN. It could not make an assessment against the Government.

Mr. PADGETT. It has made no assessment nor attempted any. It has simply preferred a request that we should pay one-fourth of the expense.

Mr. MADDEN. The city of Key West has no power to make an assessment against the Federal Government.

Mr. PADGETT. I know that, and it has not attempted to do so. I simply stated it made the request.

Mr. MADDEN. And there was no attempt to assess the property I have reference to. They simply assessed the private owners of property.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. I want to say that last year there was a provision for paving Burwell Avenue, in Bremerton, in the State of Washington, at $1,000. There is a precedent. I will state that it is subject to a point of order, if the gentleman makes it.

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order.

Mr. GARNER. Could I ask the gentleman before he takes his seat, as well as the chairman of the committee, what is their idea of the policy of the Government having a law to pay one-half of the street work where they own property on the street?

Mr. MADDEN. I think they ought to have it without any doubt, but they have not it. They ought to have such a law.

Mr. PADGETT. I think it is entirely equitable and right and fair that the Government should do the same as it compels others to do.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; but it ought not to be done in a particular case unless it is applied to every other case.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation made in the naval act approved March 2, 1907, "For construction of two officers' quarters, navy yard, Pensacola, Fla., $10,000," and the naval act approved May 13, 1908, "To complete officers' quarters, marine barracks, navy yard, Pensacola, Fla., $5,000," is hereby reappropriated and made available for the erection of officers' quarters and improving grounds at the naval station, Key West, Fla.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] makes a point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the section preceding that.

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BARTLETT. The proviso on page 31, line 20, ought to go out, too.

Mr. PADGETT. It has gone out. The whole thing has gone out, including line 22, up to the words "in all," and so forth. All that goes out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be eliminated. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] makes the point of order against the paragraph just read.

Mr. PADGETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the gentleman, if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], that he will notice that the appropriations heretofore referred to have already been made, and this is to construct buildings at Pensacola. The department informs us that they do not desire to construct buildings at Pensacola, but they do need and desire to construct buildings at Key West. This is not an additional appropriation. It is simply the transfer of an appropriation and an authorization to use the funds heretofore appropriated for Pensacola to be used for the necessary purposes at Key West.

Now, then, if it is not permitted, the department will be at perfect liberty to go ahead and spend the money at Pensacola.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will they do it?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know whether they will or not.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is not desirable?

Mr. PADGETT. I say they have authority to do it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not think they would expend the money at Pensacola if it was not transferred to some other place?

Mr. PADGETT. No; but they have authority to do it. This is simply to transfer the fund that has already been authorized to Pensacola.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee, what rank these officers have for whom it is proposed to build quarters, and whether these quarter are to cost $10,000 each or $5,000 each?

Mr. PADGETT. As I understand it, the amount is $14,000 for the two sets of quarters, or $7,000 each, and then the difference between the amounts is $995. The $14,000 is to be used for the construction of two sets of quarters, which would be $7,000 each, while the $995, or so much thereof as may be necessary, will be used in the improvement of the grounds immediately surrounding the quarters.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is the rank of these officers?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I understand the commanding officer at Key West is an admiral, but his successor may be a captain.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is that the place where Admiral Young was living?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it proposed to rebuild the house for him?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I understand additional quarters are desired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The text of the bill is clear on that. It says:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation made in naval act approved March 2, 1907, "for construction of two officers' quarters, navy yard, Pensacola, Fla., $10,000," etc.

Now, was that appropriation of $10,000 the total, $5,000 each to be expended on quarters?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Fifteen thousand dollars in all; $10,000 under one act and $5,000 in another.

Mr. PADGETT. But they were for different purposes. Five thousand dollars each was for officers' quarters at Pensacola, and then by a subsequent act, "to complete officers' quarters, marine barracks, navy yard, Pensacola, Fla., $5,000." That makes $15,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then the amount to be made available for the construction of quarters at Key West is $15,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Fifteen thousand dollars, less $5, which has already been expended.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Practically $15,000. That is for two officers, including the admiral?

Mr. PADGETT. Two marine officers; not an admiral, but two marine officers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Of what rank?

Mr. PADGETT. Of the higher rank. I could not tell the gentleman the exact rank. I do not know.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman means of the higher rank in Key West.

Mr. PADGETT. They have a rear admiral there.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They have no admirals in the marines.

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman said they were marine officers.

Mr. PADGETT. They do not go by the naval designations in the Marine Corps. They go by the Army designations. It would be a lieutenant colonel or a major.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It strikes me it is a pretty extravagant house.

Mr. PADGETT. Seven thousand dollars.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] not to insist on this point of order. There is a principle of administration involved in the question raised here, and I believe that when the gentleman hears what I have to say about it he will withdraw his point of order.

You will find that the Navy Department has withdrawn almost every semblance of defense from the Gulf coast. You will find that the department has undertaken to abandon Pensacola, although it is the deepest harbor we have. You will find that the department has undertaken to abandon New Orleans, which is the mouth of the interior of our country, and protects the whole Mississippi Valley. You will find that the department has totally abandoned Charleston, S. C., and all of the southern ports, and surely the little sum proposed by this committee for Key West will not be swept away also.

Mr. MADDEN. I will not make the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do make the point of order, and I want to be heard to say just a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] renews the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I am not here to say that there ought not to be officers' quarters at Key West. I am not here to say that there ought to be officers' quarters at Portsmouth; but the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] makes the point of order, which is sustained as to Portsmouth, and insists upon it, taking from the Committee of the Whole the power to pass upon the desirability of erecting the officers' quarters there, and now, somebody else's ox being gored, he protests against the point of order.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does the gentleman know that the department has cared for all the yards on the eastern coast and left out those on the Gulf coast?

Mr. CANNON. I care not whether they be on the Gulf coast, the Pacific coast, or the Atlantic coast. The gentleman invokes a ruling that I think never ought to have been made, to prevent the erection of quarters at Portsmouth; but when it comes down to a place near his own home, where I think very likely the quarters ought to be erected, when the point of order is made, the gentleman from Georgia says, "Well, I hope the House will be allowed to pass upon it."

I insist on the point of order.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that it may be advisable to repeal this section in case this appropriation can not be given in this bill, because it is not going to be used.

Mr. CANNON. That would be in order under the Holman rule.

Mr. GARNER. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. PADGETT] that not knowing whether they would exercise this discretion, it would be well to repeal this section of the law.

Mr. PADGETT. If this goes out on a point of order, I am going to offer an amendment of that kind. I hoped, however, that it might be available.

Mr. MADDEN. In passing over pages 29, 30, and 31 of the bill I noticed there were items for paving—on page 29, at the Boston Navy Yard; on page 30, at the New York Navy Yard; and on page 31, at the Charleston Navy Yard. I assume that these items provide for paving within the grounds, and so I did not make the point of order, but I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether my assumption was correct.

Mr. PADGETT. It is entirely correct. This paving is entirely within the yards.

Mr. MADDEN. So that it would not come within the rule.

Mr. PADGETT. Not at all.

Mr. MADDEN. That is the point I wish to have appear in the RECORD.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Because I do not want it to appear that the point was made with reference to one item and not made with reference to three other items, if they all came under the same rule.

Mr. PADGETT. This paving is all within the grounds, and is clearly in order. Has the Chairman ruled upon the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that, under the citations submitted a few minutes ago in connection with a similar point of order, the clause in this paragraph relating to officers' quarters, if the point of order is made, is well taken. The decision the Chair cited was rendered in 1907 by the present Vice President, and it seems to have taken into consideration all the former precedents on this subject, and for that reason the Chair feels assured that it contains the weight of authority. So the point of order is sustained.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment, and as I have not prepared it, I will ask the Clerk to write it down. Amend by inserting:

The act approved March 2, 1907, for the construction of two officers' quarters, navy yard, Pensacola, Fla., $10,000, and the naval act approved May 13, 1908, to complete officers' quarters, marine barracks, navy yard, Pensacola, Fla., $5,000, are hereby repealed.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, may I offer a suggestion to the gentleman that he make the amendment read so much of these acts as provides for these things "is hereby repealed." As I understand the gentleman's amendment, as he stated it, it repeals the entire act, and it should be so much of the act as relates to these matters.

Mr. PADGETT. I will modify my amendment to that extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting at bottom of page 31 the following:

"So much of the naval act approved March 2, 1907, for the construction of two officers' quarters, navy yard, Pensacola, Fla., $10,000, and so much of the naval act approved May 13, 1908, to complete officers' quarters, marine barracks, navy yard, Pensacola, Fla., $5,000, are hereby repealed."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I may be the only one to resist that amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, but I want to say to this House that I do not concede that the Secretary of the Navy has the right to nullify the laws of this Congress that have been passed. This House provided for Pensacola in a previous Congress. I do not live within 400 miles of Pensacola; no, as my colleague, Judge BARTLETT, suggests, not within 500 miles; but, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Navy, as I have said, has undertaken to abandon every defense on the Gulf coast. The Panama Canal is being built in that section of the world, and it is claimed by naval officers, and others who study the map of the world, that if we have any wars in the future they will be fought on the Caribbean Sea, Gulf of Mexico, or Pacific Ocean, in that section of the world lying near the Panama Canal. And yet all the navy yards on the east coast are accorded permanent improvements, so that they can not be abandoned in the future, while every semblance of defense is being taken from the southern coast; and yet some southern gentlemen sit here and vote for appropriations that provide abundantly for the eastern coast and the navy yards on the east coast, and support all the appropriations asked for them, and open not their mouth on questions affecting our southern defense. This little pittance that provided for Pensacola is proposed by the chairman of this committee to be taken from the Gulf coast and to be covered back into the Treasury, and have a law of this Congress nullified thereby because the Secretary of the Navy says so. I, for one, will not stand here and not raise my voice in protest.

Now, Mr. Chairman, before we proceed further on the sections in this bill, I want to put gentlemen on notice that we are coming to provisions appropriating two or three million dollars for the Hawaiian Islands at Pearl Harbor, that pet of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I presume they have spent something like $5,000,000 over there in Honolulu, or Pearl Harbor, on these islands. I put them on notice right now that I will knock every item I possibly can out of the bill when you come to your baby on the Pacific Ocean. I have not been able to knock out those on the Atlantic coast, because I have not raised my voice in protest, except in a few instances. I say the time has come for that part of the country bordering on the Gulf and South Atlantic to be heard from. It is not a question of the South; it is not a question of the East or the North or the West; but it is a question whether or not the protection to the seaboard and navy yards of the South shall be abandoned simply because the Secretary of the Navy happens, forsooth, to say so, and then follow it up to the extent of nullifying an act of this Congress by taking from Pensacola the little pittance that was given her in the last Congress.

Now, it was provided by this committee to make a small appropriation to Key West and start up a small navy yard in one place on the Gulf coast. It is a very small appropriation; it is just a starter; and I felt like we ought to have something permanent, so that in a future Congress I or any other Member who stands for naval stations for the South as well as other sections could point back and say that we started a little navy yard down there and we will keep it up; but now you want to wipe out the last vestige by this amendment, and I protest with all the power I have.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much surprise to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE]. Touching this appropriation, we have our possessions here in the United States; we have Hawaii, for which we are responsible, being as it is a part of the territory of the United States; we are responsible for the Philippines; we have the great Atlantic Ocean as well as the great Pacific Ocean washing our shores. I do not know whether this appropriation for Pensacola should be transferred to Key West or not. I am quite sure I stand ready to vote for such improvements for the naval station at Key West as are desired. I voted for a dry dock at Beaufort, which had to be abandoned. The Indiana got in there, and we thought it would never get out. I have even voted to build a great navy yard at Charleston. I did not want to do so, because I did not believe there was sufficient water at Charleston Harbor, but I voted for the appropriation bill that carried it. I voted for a navy yard at New Orleans, and I expect to vote for these general bills, although not with the idea that they will be perfect; but I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] in all kindness that when he rises, representing a constituency the equal of the one I represent, and, speaking for that constituency, says that if the amendment transferring this appropriation from Pensacola prevails, he will on that account make points of order as to items affecting stations on the Pacific Ocean and in the Philippines, on which points of order will lie, it sounds very strange to hear him then turn round and say there is no North, no South, no East, and no West. I want to say to the gentleman that I shall consider the merits of each proposition and register my approval or disapproval by my voice and vote, but he will have to tarry in Jericho until his beard grows before he will coerce my vote or action as a Member of this House.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, when I became a Member of this House I hoped that before I reached the city of Washington to enter upon the discharge of my duties the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS containing the sectional arguments just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], incited by a point of order made by my colleague from Georgia, Mr. TRIBBLE, would have been put into a bonfire and burned, and such sentiments forever eliminated from the transactions of public business in this House. I think the time has arrived when we ought to discuss these matters coolly and deliberately, without regard to what section the appropriations are to go, and we should think only whether the appropriations will be economically expended and are needful. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has made a point of order against an appropriation carrying $15,000 for the purpose of erecting two officers' quarters at Key West, Fla. Upon what ground did the gentleman from Illinois make his point of order? Because of the fact that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] had made a point of order against a certain appropriation carried in this bill for Portsmouth, N. H.

The point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia carried an appropriation for $12,000. The point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois carried an appropriation for $15,000. My colleague placed himself in the surprising position of being euchered out of $3,000 on the deal. [Laughter.]

That is the ridiculous position this House is placed in when dealing with an appropriation carrying money to maintain one of the greatest establishments of the Government. I am really surprised to see so often in debate in this House this question of where a certain amount of money is to be expended. I want to be governed in what I do and what I say and how I vote upon this bill by the cool, deliberate judgment of these gentlemen who have had this discussion before the committee and who know whether or not these are economical expenditures, and whether they are necessary expenditures, and why they are necessary.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Naval Affairs Committee from the same section of the country as the gentleman who has the floor, and if the Committee on Naval Affairs overrides my efforts to prevent the Secretary of the Navy from abandoning all the naval yards in that section of the United States, does not the gentleman from Georgia think that if I am patriotic, and if I believe in patriotism and in my section of the country, it is my duty to come in here and fight for what I conceive to be just on the floor of the House?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is the duty of every man in this House to do what his conscience dictates to him he should do as a public servant in the discharge of his duty, but I do not believe that because of the fact that we can not always have our way about things we should take the bit in our mouths and run away with the cart and say, "You can not have anything because of the fact that I can not have my way." That is not the way we should legislate for the American people; that is not the way the people who send us here expect us to legislate for them, and I think that both the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE], are wrong when they come down to the proposition——

Mr. AKIN of New York. May I interrupt the gentleman to ask in regard to the $3,000, if the gentleman does not think that he had better grow whiskers, and he may get the $3,000?

Mr. HOWARD. Grow what? I do not think that question is pertinent to the discussion.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. HOWARD. No; I have but five minutes. I have a proposition here that I do not think ought to be treated lightly, and I am serious about this matter.

Now, it is said that points of order are going to be made against Pearl Harbor, against San Francisco, or anywhere else that an appropriation is to be carried, if it is new legislation, or if it is subject to the point of order, not taking into consideraton the question of whether or not it is necessary for the welfare of this country that that money should be so expended there.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to correct the gentleman. I have made the statement that I propose to make the point of order on the Hawaiian Islands, and there I stopped. As a member of the Naval Committee I am expected to take interest in this bill and to guard the Treasury, as well as spend millions on the Hawaiian Islands at Pearl Harbor.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know anything about Pearl Harbor, and I do not care anything about Pearl Harbor other than to say if this money at Pearl Harbor is to be economically and judiciously expended I would support Pearl Harbor, Portsmouth, N. H., or anywhere else in the United States, if the money so appropriated is essential for the protection of my country's honor and the preservation of its institutions. For the sake of our glorious Union, for the sake of our future welfare, let us stop this everlasting agitation that breaks out here once in a while in the heat of debate about sections, and let us all say with the immortal Henry W. Grady, "There is no North, no South, no East, no West, but one united country."

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of pointing out that this amendment proposed will actually precipitate the question of abandoning these yards. I want to call to the attention of members of the Committee on Naval Affairs as well as members of the Committee of the Whole House that the question of abandoning particular stations on the Gulf of Mexico is under serious consideration and that as a matter of policy we have decided not to determine it at this session.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Who has decided it?

Mr. HOBSON. Our committee.

Mr. HIGGINS. I would like to know, as a matter of information, has not the present Secretary of the Navy, either this year or the year before, recommended the abandonment of those stations?

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman is perfectly correct; the Secretary has requested it year in and year out, but with the opening of the Panama Canal the whole question of location of the battle water of America is being shifted southward, and the question of the Gulf and the Caribbean is assuming a new and prime importance; and the Secretary's policy of the abandonment of the stations in the South is more in accord with the old conditions.

This whole question is of great importance and ought not to be passed on in a flurry of exchange of compliments or points of order, and I do not think that this question of reappropriations should be decided from an afterthought following the point of order just made. If that point of order had not been made the amendment offered by the chairman would not have been made. Now, the point of order may prove of no effect in the Senate, but if the amendment of the chairman should prevail, it simply means that Congress is held down to the prejudgment of the Secretary of the Navy without a full investigation——

Mr. GARNER. If we could get the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], by some persuasion, to withhold his point of order and let the bill go through as it is we would cut out all this time.

Mr. HOBSON. I will say to the gentleman from Texas I can understand how the gentleman from Illinois feels.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that.

Mr. HOBSON. And I actually believe, in the interest of this House, that, with all due respect to the Chairman's rulings, that you can not go and appropriate for a building or any other part of a public work in connection with a station; it simply ties your hands for all time in matters of expenditure and the efficiency of this service and of all similar services. I think it is a great pity that we are confronted to-day with the proposition that a Member can rise here and there and prevent us from carrying out the policies of a generation.

But that is not before us. It is not involved in the amendment of the chairman. Irrespective of whether the previous paragraph goes out on the point of order or not, we ought not to decide here whether we are going to abandon stations on the Gulf of Mexico. We put the whole proposition on the Senate to put back these measures if the gentleman does not withdraw his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I quite agree with the gentleman, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment, the reasons having been assigned therefor. I am perfectly willing the House shall vote; but I for one shall vote in the negative.

Mr. GARNER. Would not the gentleman from Illinois, in deference to the judgment of the Committee on Naval Affairs bringing in this change of location in this appropriation bill, after he has heard these Members of the House and expressed himself with reference to his feeling for the gentleman from Georgia, be willing to withdraw his point of order?

Mr. CANNON. I shall not withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Could the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] go back and withdraw his points of order and let us all get along in harmony? Could not that be done by unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment I offered and let it go out on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. It does not require unanimous consent.

Mr. BARTLETT. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 29 of the bill, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] asks unanimous consent to return to page 29, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, on line 10, page 29, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

Quarters for commanding officer, naval prison, $12,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 29, line 10, after the word "dollars," insert the words: "Quarters for commanding officer, naval prison, $12,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the amendment. I move to amend by striking out the word "twelve," in line 11, page 29, and insert the word "eight."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "twelve" in the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the word "eight."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say one word. I believe $8,000 will build an entirely satisfactory residence for the governor of a small prison.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that this amount of $12,000 was fixed by the Committee on Naval Affairs on the basis of cost of quarters as fixed by the Army. The commander of this prison is an officer of a certain rank. Under the practice—and I am not certain but what it is a law; at least, we are trying to give it the force of law in the Naval Committee—we base the cost of quarters for different stations in the same proportion as is the practice under Army appropriations. And this price was fixed at $12,000 on that theory and that theory alone. So the gentleman will see, if his amendment should be adopted, that it is going to cut the quarters down below those that an officer of his corresponding rank should occupy and below what would be occupied by an officer of the same rank in the Army, and I do not think the gentleman wants to do that.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, if I thought $12,000 or $20,000 was needed in order to get adequate quarters, I would not interpose the objection; but I want to suggest to the gentleman a fact with which he is perhaps not familiar. In the construction of quarters for officers of the Army the administrative officials went wild for a while. They built palaces for colonels and majors and captains. But we have fixed a limit and reduced the amount that may be appropriated for quarters, grading them according to rank.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. That is just exactly what we have done here, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, and it is based exactly on the Army scale. That is why I wanted to call that point to the attention of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think if the gentleman will consult the Quartermaster's Department he will find there is no such allowance now made for the officers of the rank of the man who, if I am correctly informed, is to occupy this position at Portsmouth as the governor of the prison. I think $8,000 is an adequate sum. And even if the quarters for the officers of the Army of corresponding rank were fixed at a higher rate, which they are not, I still would not be influenced by that. I do not believe in the style of reasoning that increases the compensation of an officer of a certain rank in the Navy because an officer in the corresponding rank in the Army has had it, or vice versa. I do not believe in that style of argument. I think $8,000 will build an adequate house, and it is as much as is being allowed now for officers in the Army of corresponding grade. And I want to say to the gentleman that the officers of the Army have welcomed the change. Before we made that reduction the Government was constructing palaces for officers of limited income to live in.

They were beyond their means to keep up. It was an extravagance which was unwarranted, and it was an extravagance which was embarrassing to the occupant of the house. I shall insist, Mr. Chairman, on having a vote on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], that the Naval Committee have been through the same experience exactly with regard to the cost of quarters for officers at the various navy yards and stations. There have been in the past very expensive and elaborate quarters provided, and the Committee on Naval Affairs have sought to bring down the expense for those quarters, so we have fixed upon the basis adopted by the Army for quarters to be occupied by naval officers of a corresponding rank.

We hold in our bill to the amount that was adopted in the Army bill for an officer of the same rank. That is the case here. I do not think the gentleman is narrow in his views at all, and I do not think he objects to an officer of the Navy whose rank corresponds to that of an officer of the Army having equal quarters.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I thought the gentleman would not object to that, and I think he ought to accept my statement that this bill provides for quarters for an officer who corresponds in rank with an Army officer and who should have quarters of the same value.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. SLAYDEN. My information is that these quarters would be occupied by a major or lieutenant colonel of the Marine Corps. We are not providing quarters for officers of the corresponding rank in the Army that cost more than $8,000. At one time, as I tell the gentleman, they did so, but they do not any more. It is now a good time to reform, and to stand by the reformation. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 29.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 31 and offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to return to page 31 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. PADGETT. It should follow after line 23. At the end of line 23 add, as a new paragraph, the following:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation made in the naval act approved March 2, 1907, "for the construction of two officers' quarters, navy yard, Pensacola, Fla., $10,000," and that made in the naval act approved May 13, 1908, "to complete officers' quarters, marine barracks, navy yard, Pensacola, Fla., $5,000," is hereby appropriated and made available for the erection of officers' quarters and improving grounds at the naval station, Key West, Fla.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to return to page 31 and offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to return to page 31 for the purpose of offering the amendment which the gentleman has just read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say merely a word about that. I think this amendment should be agreed to, and if I may be indulged for a moment, I want to say, with the highest respect for the officer presiding over the Committee of the Whole, as a presiding officer and as a Representative, if I had been placed as he has been, I apprehend that, relying upon the precedents—and I am sure that there are other precedents that might be invoked—I should have ruled as the presiding officer has ruled; and yet considering, for instance, improvements for the New York Navy Yard, similar to those provisions for which were ruled out, or improvements in the navy yard at Honolulu or in the Philippines or at Guantanamo, I would let the House settle the construction, in the view of former precedents and the rulings in harmony with those precedents. Let us see where we are placed. I am quite in harmony with the principle of preventing legislation upon appropriation bills. I believe it is a wise rule, but the Senate has the power to amend, and after we have placed a narrow construction upon a rule, a construction that does not come within its reason or spirit and is not for the benefit of the public service, and an item goes out upon a point of order, then Members of this House go hot-foot to the Senate and the Senate reinserts the item in the shape of an amendment. Speaking with the highest respect for that great body, they have practically no rules, because if there is anything anybody wants they submit the question whether it is in order. So, in my judgment, we ought to construe our rules liberally, giving the House freedom to express its will through a majority. Otherwise the practice will continue to grow that has been growing, to my knowledge, for almost 40 years, that we cut off our power to originate and submit to the power of the Senate to originate at the sweet will of that body, and then we can not get rid of Senate amendments by points of order.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Where a point of order is made against a provision that is reported by the committee, and that provision is inserted in the Senate, are not the hands of the House conferees virtually tied, and are they not compelled to agree to that amendment in conference?

Mr. CANNON. Possibly so in the contest in conference; but the conference report is submitted to the House. If it does not meet with the approval of the House, a majority can turn it down, as I have seen conference reports turned down in many scores of instances, and the bills sent back to conference again.

I have asked the indulgence of the House to make these remarks. Perhaps I owe the House an apology. If so, I make it. If I have appeared to exhibit any temper in the last 30 minutes, I regret having exhibited it. It seemed to me that the position taken by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] ought to be combated; and while I may have seemed to have temper, I really had no temper, and after unanimous consent was given to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] I did not make any point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]. The truth of the matter is that both appropriations are exceedingly limited in importance in comparison with the great ocean of legislation on appropriation bills which involve annually, including the permanent appropriations, almost $1,000,000,000 for the public service.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I admit that for some time I have been smarting under what I have conceived to be unjust treatment of the Gulf coast by the Secretary of the Navy. My enthusiasm this afternoon has been in the interest of what I conceive to be right. I do not think I was wrong, as is shown by the headlines in the afternoon paper which has just been handed to me. My earnestness on behalf of the continuation of the appropriation for Key West was because I felt that it was an urgent need. Some kind gentleman has sent to me during the heat of this discussion the afternoon paper, with headlines reading as follows:

Warships to be sent to Key West—Navy Department issues orders at request of State officials—Greatest mobilization since Hudson celebration—Presence of vessels expected to awe rebels.

Mr. Chairman, I think what I have said this afternoon in regard to the Gulf ports, navy yards, and harbors being abandoned by the Secretary of the Navy, and in regard to the efforts which have been made absolutely to nullify the laws of this Congress that have been passed heretofore, was absolutely justified.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Station, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii: Dry dock (limit of cost is hereby increased to $3,350,000), to complete, $1,050,000; water-front development, $100,000; street paving, $25,000; water system, $17,000; power distribution, mains and conduits, $75,000; metal and lumber storehouse, $25,000; paint and rigging loft, $25,000; pattern shop, $60,000; storehouses, $100,000; latrines, $10,000; railroad equipment, $45,000; floating crane, to complete, $210,000; in all, $1,742,000.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against two small items of this enormous appropriation. I make the point of order against these two items: Lines 1 and 2, page 33, "street paving, $25,000," and lines 4 and 5, "metal and lumber storehouse, $25,000." It will be noticed that the next item is "a paint and rigging loft, $25,000." It seems to me that one building is all that is necessary, and that a paint and rigging loft is enough for both of them.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the point of order is well taken. The act establishing the naval station at Pearl Harbor provided:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to establish a naval station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, on the site heretofore purchased for that purpose, and to erect thereat all the necessary machine shops, storehouses, coal sheds, and other necessary buildings.

So that Congress does not fix any limit, does not define the scope of such buildings as may be necessary. It is in the discretion of the Congress and, of course, is in order on an appropriation bill. It was so held two years ago, when a similar point of order came up.

Mr. BARTLETT. What is this item for the paving of streets?

Mr. PADGETT. Pearl Harbor is a new place, out on an island, but there is nothing there in the way of highways. This paving of streets is simply the making of roads, so that the heavy machinery and things that are being carried there—heavy guns, and so forth—can be hauled over the roads.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is not a paving of streets adjacent to the land of the Government, but is on the Government land?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; on the Government land, in front of the buildings, so that these heavy articles—machinery, implements necessary to put it in condition, heavy guns, and so forth—can be hauled over the road.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is paving its own land, and not land adjacent to the Government land?

Mr. PADGETT. It is right on the reservation.

Mr. CURLEY. If the gentleman will allow me, it is a fact, is it not, that there are no natural highways there of such a nature as would be cut out of the rock itself?

Mr. PADGETT. No; there is no road there.

Mr. CURLEY. And it is necessary to have a paved street or a rigid highway in order to reach the dry dock with heavy loads?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and to reach the storehouses and the buildings we are putting there. It is really the building of roads instead of paving.

Mr. BARTLETT. How much paving will this $25,000 do? Is that all that has been appropriated?

Mr. PADGETT. That is all, so far.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman does not know what amount of street that will pave?

Mr. PADGETT. There was a general program submitted a year or so ago giving the various items.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will $25,000 complete the paving or building of the roads necessary to be constructed?

Mr. PADGETT. As I say, this paving is really road building. It is not sidewalk; it is the streets or highways themselves. We use the words "street paving," but it is really road construction.

Mr. BARTLETT. The language in the bill is street paving.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that is the language used in regard to all of these yards.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has the gentleman any estimate of the amount of road construction or paving that will have to be done?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it is here, and I have asked the Clerk to find it. It was submitted a year or so ago.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I just want to know what we are going into.

Mr. PADGETT. Here is a table submitted January 12, 1911, the dredging of the channel, $3,445,000. The amount appropriated was $2,800,000, and the amount in the later estimate is $545,000. All that is taken care of.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is dredging, and I am asking about road building.

Mr. PADGETT. The street paving, grading, and so forth, $200,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does that "and so forth" mean road building?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; street paving, grading, and road building.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is that the estimate that the whole thing will cost?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, it will cost a good deal more than that, but it is something to have an estimate of the limit.

Mr. PADGETT. The total estimate for the whole thing is $9,448,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am willing to appropriate money for the development and protection of Pearl Harbor, for I have some timid friends on the Pacific coast, whose fears I want to allay.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make the statement that the island on which Pearl Harbor is situated, on which this naval station is being built, is an undeveloped island which is not adjacent to any city. I think it is about 8 to 12 miles from Honolulu. It can not be reached except across the water. It is entirely undeveloped; so that when Congress directed the Secretary of the Navy to establish a naval station there and proceed with its establishment, that direction necessarily carried with it the opening and establishing of means of communication from one portion of the ground to another. At one part a building is placed and at another part a different building. At one portion there is a dry dock and at another portion there is another building. The establishment of a naval station from the very necessity of the case carries with it the authority to communicate from one part of the ground to another.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I would request the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES] to speak upon this subject, because it was his bill, and we went into the subject quite thoroughly on the subcommittee and then reported it to the full committee.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, the authority for these appropriations for Pearl Harbor is based upon an absolute piece of legislation passed as a distinct act by itself, without reference to any appropriation bill. This was some four years ago. As chairman of the subcommittee of the Naval Affairs Committee on navy yards, I had the honor of preparing the bill. It was reported by the subcommittee and by the full Naval Committee, and then, practically by unanimous vote, passed the House and Senate and was approved by the President. It was a distinct piece of legislation authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to establish at Pearl Harbor a naval station and navy yard, with all necessary adjuncts, and naming those specific features of the navy yard which came in logical order, such as the dredging, the dry docks, and the necessary buildings and machine shops, and all the appurtenances of a well-equipped navy yard. Since then the general Army and Navy board have, by unanimous vote, decided to practically abandon Olongapo and Cavite and make Pearl Harbor the principal naval base and station in the Pacific Ocean. The items of appropriation in this pending bill were all contemplated and authorized by the original act. They are not new legislation and are not subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina. I therefore trust that the Chair will overrule the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that under the provisions of the organic act that authority is given for the items against which the point of order is made, and the Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the proper control, protection, and defense of the naval station, harbor, and entrance channel at Pearl Harbor, Territory of Hawaii, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to adopt and prescribe suitable rules and regulations governing the navigation movement, and anchorage of vessels of whatsoever character in the waters of Pearl Harbor, island of Oahu, Hawaiian Islands, and in the entrance channel to said harbor, and to take all necessary measures for the proper enforcement of such rules and regulations.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I crave the indulgence of the committee once more. It is somewhat doubtful if I can be present when the bill has been finally concluded, and I ask unanimous consent, therefore, to return to page 3 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to return to page 3 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Insert, after line 8, page 3, the following:
"The grades of the active list of the Pay Corps of the Navy are hereby increased by 10 additional paymasters, in all 86 paymasters, and by 20 additional passed assistant and assistant paymasters, in all 116 passed assistant and assistant paymasters: Provided, That the total increase of the Pay Corps of the Navy shall not exceed 20 during the first fiscal year."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to ask unanimous consent to return to a section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submitted the request for unanimous consent to the committee at the time it was asked, and it was granted.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is this an increase of the Pay Corps?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. It is an increase of the Pay Corps, very much needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 6 of the bill, at the end of line 7, for the purpose of offering an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to return to page 6 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "rank," in line 7, page 6, the following:
"Provided further, That the service of a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy or of a cadet at the United States Military Academy who shall hereafter be appointed shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Navy."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry——

Mr. HENSLEY. I hope the gentleman will not object. It was put on in the Army bill, and there is no sort of reason why this should not be adopted at this place. There are other places in the bill where it might be adopted, but this seems to be the place for it.

Mr. HOBSON. It would be out of order in any place on an appropriation bill, because under the existing law the service at Annapolis is counted, and, furthermore, it ought to be counted. I have known class after class to leave Annapolis to go to the front and go to war, and I know the service there is as arduous as the service out of the academy, and it tends to give us younger officers.

Mr. HENSLEY. I can not agree with the gentleman from Alabama in the position he takes. This amendment was adopted to apply to the Army bill, and if it applies to the Army bill why should it not also apply to the Navy?

Mr. HOBSON. I think we had a rule with regard to the Army bill, but I am not sure; but this is certainly new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman for unanimous consent to offer this amendment?

Mr. HOBSON. To protect these officers I must utilize the power of objecting, which I seldom utilize. I think it is the first time I have objected to such a request.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for just a moment?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, an amendment almost precisely like this was put on the Army appropriation bill—a provision to save the people of this country a quarter of a million dollars a year. It simply says, in effect, that the schoolboy period of officers shall not be counted in computing the longevity service for any purpose whatever. It was brought out very elaborately in debate, and the House by an overwhelming majority sustained the contention, that these young men who receive an education at public expense, who are given an honorable profession at good pay, and when they reach the age of 62 years—I believe it is, in the Navy—are retired on three-fourths pay, are not treated harshly if academy service is not counted in computing for any purpose whatever. They are not officers. They graduate from the school to become officers.

Now, that has been adopted as to the Army, and there is no reason I can see why it should not be stopped as to the Navy. Of course the gentleman may interpose a technical objection to returning to the paragraph for the purpose of considering it now. A courtesy of that sort was just shown to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS], and I can see no reason why an equal courtesy should not be shown to the gentleman from Missouri. Of course there is no debate on the question of the point of order. It is legislation, but so is the other.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to a suggestion?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understand it is not a question of order yet, but it is a question simply of returning.

Mr. PADGETT. The question I want to suggest was, it has been called to my attention that there is this difference between the Army and the Navy, and it occurs to me the gentleman from Missouri might well look to this in perfecting his amendment. I want to suggest this about the perfecting of his amendment. In the Army there is no such thing as constructive service, and in the Navy there is such a thing as constructive service. Now, the Staff Corps that comes in from civil life are credited with five years of constructive service.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. PADGETT. In other words, whenever he enters he is credited at once with having been in the service five years.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Whether he was or not? That ought to be stopped by law right now. [Applause.] Does the gentleman stand up here and justify a practice like that?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not saying anything about it one way or the other.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Would the gentleman justify it?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it should be adjusted properly, but the fact that that practice exists, if the amendment goes in as it is, it will affect the line only and leave the staff stand as it is. Therefore I suggest to the gentleman that it might be well for him to withhold his request for a moment to prepare his amendment so as to take care of the whole question in a just and proper way.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that the gentleman has urged an excellent argument in support of it, and also a good reason why the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] might defer it and offer it later, and cut out that constructive service which is not an hour long.

Mr. HENSLEY. I withdraw the amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will withdraw the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Buildings and grounds, Naval Academy: For removing overhead wires, providing underground conduits, $60,000; reenforced concrete bridge across Dorsey Creek (to cost $50,000), $25,000; in all, $85,000.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, reserving a point of order, I would like to make some inquiries. What is the reason for taking down the wires and putting them under ground?

Mr. PADGETT. The Government has erected and established an institution down there at a cost, I think, of something like ten or eleven millions of dollars. These wires are running overhead. It is recognized that wires put underground render a much better service and are much safer. Then, these overhead wires furnish power as well as light, and atmospheric conditions, I am told, interfere very seriously at times with the efficiency of the service. And it has been recommended for several years that the wires should be put underground, both for ornamental reasons and for more efficient service reasons.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The previous Congress has refused to do it.

Mr. PADGETT. Just as we in this one have refused a great many items. We have struck out of this bill under this very bureau something like $4,000,000. Other items will come up next year. We never in any Congress allow all of the estimates that are submitted. We allow some. The others pass over to the next year, so that there is always a waiting list.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, does not the evidence show that this bridge there is not in serious condition?

Mr. PADGETT. It is in serious condition, and the position is this: There is an old wooden bridge there that is dangerous and must be repaired, and authority for the new bridge has been granted by the previous act, mentioned on page 34, beginning with line 3, the next paragraph of the bill. Last year we authorized the new bridge and appropriated $25,000. That was for a wooden bridge. When the Board of Vistors were there last year looking into it and considering the whole question, they recommended that the Secretary hold up the use of this $25,000 and that a recommendation be made to Congress for an additional appropriation of that amount and construct a concrete bridge that would be a permanent structure, instead of a wooden bridge which would necessarily be of limited duration. And this is carrying out the recommendation of the Board of Visitors, that was composed of three Members of the House, two Members of the Senate, and seven appointed by the President, coming from different States of the Union, who were there and inspected the situation.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the words:

For removing overhead wires, providing underground conduits, sixty thousand dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order against the clause which he has read.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the Chair the question as to whether or not it is subject to a point of order. There is an electric system there, and there is a power system. This is simply an alteration. It is simply a change, or, if you see fit to so call it, it is an extension. It is not an enlargement, but it is a repair or an improvement, and therefore is a continuation of a public work. The work is there, the system is there, and this is simply modifying it and changing it, and therefore I think it is not subject to a point of order. The wires were put up there in one way, and this is simply changing them to a modified construction, and therefore I do not believe it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this is authorized and overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval torpedo station, Newport, R. I.: New power house, toward building (cost not to exceed $60,000) and equipment (cost not to exceed $120,000), to complete, $120,000; paving, $5,000; extension of fresh-water, steam-heating, and conduit systems, $10,000; in all, $135,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, line 12, strike out the word "equipment" and insert in lieu thereof the word "equipping."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval magazine, Hingham, Mass.: Improvement of channel, $40,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that particular item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] reserves a point of order against the item.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, there is evidently not a quorum here, and I believe the colored folks quit at noon on Saturdays. That is my understanding. It seems to me we ought to have a quorum. I suggest to the gentleman whether it would not be agreeable to him to make the motion to rise.

Mr. PADGETT. I wanted, in view of final adjournment, to expedite the consideration of the appropriation bills as much as possible.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that he has made wonderful progress, and I congratulate him on it.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24565, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. MORRISON, until May 31, on account of important business.

FEDERAL COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution (H. Res. 551), presented by Mr. GARNER:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 14083) to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes, be recommitted to the Committee on Enrolled Bills, with instructions that it be reenrolled as a bill of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. That is the bill that was signed by myself and the Vice President, and was sent over to the White House, and the Senate passed a resolution asking that it be recalled because the Senate had not adopted the conference report. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 20586. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 5930. An act to extend the time for the completion of dams across the Savannah River by authority granted to the Twin City Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 22999. Providing for the construction and maintenance by the city of St. Louis, Mo., and of an intake tower in the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo.; and

H. R. 5602. Authorizing the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association to occupy and construct buildings for the use of the corporation on lots Nos. 3 and 4, block No. 114, in the city of Hot Springs, Ark.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, May 26, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting estimate of appropriation required by the War Department for topographic maps (H. Doc. No. 773); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, submitting list of lands reserved from location in connection with irrigation within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation (S. Doc. No. 718); to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting estimate of appropriation to provide payment for conveying to the seat of Government the votes of the electors of the different States for President and Vice President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 771); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting revised estimate for appropriation for Public Health and Marine-Hospial Service (H. Doc. No. 772); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting estimate of deficiencies required by the various departments of the Government to complete service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912 (H. Doc. No. 777); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, amounting to $200,665.27, which require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 775); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication submitting three judgments rendered against the United States and recommending an appropriation to pay same (H. Doc. No. 774); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Attorney General submitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases, amounting to $39,971 (H. Doc. No. 776); to the Committee an Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 338) authorizing the sale of certain lands in the Colville Indian Reservation to the town of Okanogan, State of Washington, for public park purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 758), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20739) providing for the issue of patents to allotments on White Earth Reservation in certain uncontested cases, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 760), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RUBEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the continuation of coal-mining operations on certain lands in Wyoming, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 761), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. EDWARDS: A bill (H. R. 24853) authorizing and directing the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase site and put in operation an agricultural and live-stock experimental station in the first congressional district of Georgia; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey: A bill (H. R. 24854) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend laws for preventing collisions of vessels and to regulate equipment of certain motor boats on the navigable waters of the United States," approved June 9, 1910; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. REILLY: A bill (H. R. 24855) to protect fraternal organizations from infringement on their titles or names; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. EDWARDS: Resolution (H. Res. 548) requiring the Attorney General to investigate the Fertilizer Trust; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 549) calling upon the Attorney General for an investigation of the trust or combination controlling the price of cotton bagging and cotton ties in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: Resolution (H. Res. 550) requesting the President to furnish the House of Representatives certain information; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CULLOP: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 320) relative to the rebuilding of levees on the Wabash River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HAYDEN: A memorial from the Legislature of the State of Arizona relating to mineral lands included within the Colorado River Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 24856) granting an increase of pension to Clinton Scoville; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24857) granting an increase of pension to Walter Barbo; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 24858) granting an increase of pension to James Boley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BROWN: A bill (H. R. 24859) for the relief of the heirs of Benjamin Grayson; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24860) for the relief of the heirs of Evaline Davis; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24861) for the relief of A. J. Collett, administrator of the estate of Thomas Collett, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 24862) granting a pension to Edward H. Osmond; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 24863) granting a pension to Joseph Miley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, May 26, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by Mr. LOBECK as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast called us into being and filled our souls with longings, hopes, and aspirations which time nor space can measure; our wisdom, strength, and love are but reflections of Thy wisdom, power, and goodness. Thou knowest the beginning and the end; we are Thine, dependent upon Thee. Increase our faith and confidence, and awaken in us the brightest hopes, that we may lean on Thee and look forward without fear, since Thy love encircles all. It were not more difficult for Thee to extend our being into some one of Thy many mansions than to have called us into existence. Thou hast taught us to love life; to think of annihilation is overwhelming. When our friends are taken from us our hearts are rent and torn with sorrow and grief, but the angel of love whispers:

Be still, sad heart, and cease repining;
Behind the clouds is the sun still shining.

We can not think our friends out of existence; they remain a part of us. Be this our solace as we here gather on this quiet, peaceful Sabbath day in memory of one who served his State and Nation as a legislator under the Dome of this great Capitol, chosen for the high station by the people who knew him and had confidence in his integrity and ability to serve them. May his bereaved wife and children cherish his virtues and look forward with the brightest anticipations to a reunion beyond the confines of this transitory existence, where they will dwell with him forever, and everlasting praise be Thine through Him who taught us Thy love and the immortality of the soul. Amen.

The Clerk began the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the Journal. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Journal was approved.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE JAMES P. LATTA.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska offers a resolution, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 552.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. JAMES P. LATTA, late a Member of the House from the State of Nebraska.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, we have gathered here to-day to pay tribute to the memory of one of the grand old men of this country, the Hon. JAMES P. LATTA, late Member of Congress from the third Nebraska district. He was born near Ashland, Ohio, October 31, 1844, and died at Rochester, Minn., where he had undergone a surgical operation, on September 11, 1911. He was, therefore, nearly 67 years of age at his death. He spent the early part of his life in eastern Iowa, and when he was 18 years of age he set out for the Territory of Nebraska, traveling alone and on foot the 400 miles across Iowa to his future home in Burt County, where he took up a homestead and where he lived the remainder of his life. His homestead at his death consisted of 3,000 acres of rich Nebraska land lying in the valley at the foot of the Missouri River bluffs. On the slope of the bluffs he built his first home, overlooking the endless miles of rich land untouched by the hand of man. From his doorstep he could see the tall wild grasses glinting and billowing in the sun for 25 miles lying spread out at his feet in a panorama of beauty. It was truly a land of magnificent distances and of great promise of rich reward to those who would subdue it. And to this home he brought his young bride, and there in that beautiful environment they reared their two splendid sons and have materially aided in the development of a great Commonwealth.

Men partake of the character of the country that produces them, and it naturally follows, as day follows night, that our friend should have been a man of large parts. He saw everything in a large way in its relation to the country as a whole, rather than how it might affect him personally at the time. He was never petty either in politics, religion, or business, and never separated his interests from that of the community. He grew so rapidly in business because of the responsiveness of that hospitable land to intelligent effort that in a very short time he became a large factor in the county and State, not only in business but in politics as well. From a farmer, stockman, and beef producer on a large scale he became a banker, and later on a member of the house and senate in the State legislature. In fact he became the financial backbone of his county in times of drought and panic when the small men took to cover to protect themselves. In 1893, after a few years of drought, when the faith of the hard-pressed farmers was about all oozed out, the panic came on to cap the climax. Mr. LATTA had already about exhausted his resources in backing up his faith in the country's future, and this final blow would have completely discouraged and driven to cover all but the bravest and best. But he never wavered in his faith or turned aside in his course. He simply gathered up another bunch of farm mortgages and started East on a hunt for more money with which to save the farmers from utter ruin. By pledging his honor and credit to the last dollar he always came back smiling with succor for the needy. When the broken and totally discouraged farmers, battling against the vicissitudes of nature and the cowardly fear of money lenders, would come to him he put heart into them and sent them back with the assurance that as long as he could hold out he would stand by them. No man knows what a friend like that means to him until he has been pressed to the very brink and is being pushed off, as were those poor drought-stricken farmers in the panic of 1893.

He was a benefactor to his people and for years after, as liquidation was extremely slow, it took all the courage he could muster to keep hundreds of discouraged men from abandoning their lands and giving up the fight. Here is where the devil took our friend up in the mountain top and showed him an empire he could take possession of by the mere acceptance as a gift, what all these men wanted to give, to get rid of further struggle against what seemed to them great odds. They wanted to turn over their lands and cancel the debts. The real test of manhood does not come when men are holding positions of trust under the public eye. It is easy enough to be a man when the band is playing a triumphant march and the world is applauding, but it is quite another thing to do your duty when you are hard pressed and no one but God and yourself are looking on. In such cases even God is sometimes forgotten. Yet I am glad to record that our friend whose memory we revere to-day stood the test. With the mere act of acceptance he could have taken the titles to thousands of acres of the richest land in the world, but instead he gave these broken-spirited men hope to work on, and in a few years the tide turned in their favor.

Cæsar put aside the crown offered him by his countrymen, but the plaudits of the multitude were ringing in his ears. But here our dead friend put aside great wealth that was being thrust upon him because he believed in the Golden Rule and practiced it in his business. He knew these broken-spirited men could not get a fair view of their situation because of their distress, and he was too big to take advantage of them.

As the years went by and prosperity returned these men baptized in the fires of hard times and misfortune of every kind began to come into their own, and one by one they redeemed their homes and got back their titles and never paid a cent of tribute for the splendid service this grand old man of Nebraska rendered them. So it leads me to say that after all it matters little when a man was born or when he died or what station he reached in life, but it matters greatly how he lived. The history of northeastern Nebraska is largely a history of the life and work of Mr. LATTA, and when the end came and we all gathered around his bier it was largely a gathering of those seasoned pioneers who had felt the grip of his friendly hand in times of stress—men who had carved an empire out of the wilderness and made it into the garden spot of the world.

He was just the sort of man required for the work of conquering a new land. He was big and brawny in body and clear of mind. Having been born and raised on the frontier he had little school advantages, yet, in spite of this handicap, he was one of the best-educated men I have ever known, according to my own standards of what the word education means. If that man is best educated who can do the most useful things, then, according to that test, our friend had no peer in the West. He has a record of accomplishments that very few men possess. He has demonstrated his ability to successfully perform every class of work from that of a farm hand to that of a legislator in Congress. There was not a single occupation followed by our people of the West that Congressman LATTA did not master and could not do better than his fellows. He knew the secrets of nature better than any schooled scientist knew them, and he knew how to wrestle from the kindly old earth her glad tribute to those who understand her ways.

It was a most remarkable gathering of pioneers who assembled around his bier when we laid his body away on an eminence overlooking the great Valley of the Missouri. There he had stood as a boy and viewed the splendid prospect with much satisfaction, and there we laid his body nearly 50 years afterwards, where the first rays of the morning sun would silver the grasses over his grave.

The tribute to his memory paid him by these neighbors and friends was the most touching and beautiful I have ever witnessed, and it proved beyond a question of doubt that the rewards of an honest and unselfish life of service are beyond human understanding. It inspired me to hope that I might live long enough to be as useful and well beloved by my neighbors and countrymen as was he.

But the finest tribute of all was paid him daily by his two splendid sons, in their loyalty and admiration of him. These boys, now grown to be busy men of large affairs, up to the day of their father's illness were his constant companions, and every day of their lives, if circumstances permitted, they spent an hour or so with their father talking over their affairs, their hopes and ambitions. I have never known greater appreciation shown a father than these boys showed for theirs. It is a touching proof of the great and kindly intelligent soul of the man who could command the love and admiration of his grown sons in such a manner.

We can not prove by scientific data what the condition of life is on the finer planes of matter where men go after they have laid off their earthly garments, but by analogy we can approximate it, and it is reasonable to assume that the conditions there are closely related to the conditions here, and that the process of growth continues in an unbroken line. That would seem to be a universal law, and we need have no fear of crossing this line of demarcation. The God of the universe only puts us to sleep while the crossing is being made, and I anticipate that our dear old friend has found plenty to do in that new land across the border. I hope he has found work befitting his great strength and courage, and that his life will be as useful there as it has been here.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in my remarks a biographical sketch of Mr. LATTA, written by a close personal friend of his and published in the Burt County (Nebr.) Herald, and also an account of the funeral services.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a biographical sketch and account of the funeral of the late Representative LATTA. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The biographical sketch and description of the funeral of Mr. LATTA are as follows:

"IN MEMORY OF CONGRESSMAN LATTA.

"[By J. R. Sutherland, editor Burt County Herald.]

"'Congressman JAMES P. LATTA died at 7.20 this evening,' was the Associated Press dispatch flashed over the wire from Rochester, Minn., Monday evening that brought deep sorrow into many a home in Tekamah, the home town of the deceased.

"It was here where he came when a boy of 18 years. It was here where he began life by working by the month, chopping wood, breaking prairie, or teaching school. It was here where he bought his first 40 acres and built his first cabin. He commenced farming and raising and feeding cattle, at which he was very successful. He kept on increasing his land holdings until now he owned nearly 3,000 acres. It was here where he engaged in the banking business in 1877 and in 1890 organized the First National Bank of Tekamah, of which he continued to be president until his death. It was here where he was married December 29, 1870, to Miss Libbie Jonas, of Jackson County, Iowa, and reared and educated their two sons, Ed and Bur, in our schools.

"No man could be held in higher esteem by the people whom he associated with all these years than was Mr. LATTA. He had their confidence and respect to such an extent that they loved to honor him in every way possible. He served the city as mayor, councilman, and treasurer; he served the county in the legislature in the session of 1887; he was elected State senator in 1906, and was a member of that reform session of 1907. It was Mr. LATTA who introduced the first bill for the present 2-cent passenger fare. In public matters he knew no party lines; with him it was what is best for the public welfare. He assisted in the passage of all reform measures in that memorable session. It was his record in the senate that singled him out for his party as a winning candidate for Congress in this third congressional district in 1908. He was again reelected in 1910 by the largest majority ever received by a Congressman in Nebraska. In the Masonic order of which he was an early member of the local lodge, he was master for several terms, and he was past high priest of the Royal Arch and past commander of the Jordan Commandery of Knights Templar.

"We have no gift of eloquence or command of language with which to grace a splendid eulogy, ours is the simple tribute of a friend—a friend who knows no words commensurate with the mighty flood of feeling that surges through his breast. Why eulogy? Are not his own life and character his most eloquent eulogy?

"When we remember how he succeeded in every field that he engaged his interests in and to which he gave his endeavor, when we remember his unswerving loyalty to every cause that he espoused, to every promise that he made, to every friend that he had, we begin to appreciate his true worth—he was a man made to be loved, and he was loved. To-day the world seems to be lonesome without him. We miss his kindly face, his cordial handclasp, his genial companionship, his helpful council. To those who knew him as we knew him for more than 40 years, he was an unusually lovable man. He was bright, cheery, kind, strong, and ever ready to lend a helping hand. Combined with these characteristics, he was blessed with good intellectual endowment, a powerful physique, and a pleasing personality, an agreeable voice, and an absolute freedom from affectation. His conceptions were quick and remarkably accurate. His judgment was uncommonly good of both men and measures. He had a wonderful faculty of approaching men, although at times almost bluntly, in such a manner as to prepossess them favorably both as to himself and his object. Few men have been favored with such a rare combination of faculties and powers as he possessed, and yet lacked qualities ordinarily deemed indispensable to success.

"He was not a scholarly man, nor a student in the ordinary sense. At the age of 2 years he came to Jackson County, Iowa, with his parents in 1846, which was then the frontier, and his education was limited to a few terms in a log schoolhouse. His training and experience as a business man enabled him to comprehend accurately and appreciate fully every problem that confronted him. He did not pretend to have the powers of the college bred; he belonged to an altogether different class of men. Although a pleasant and agreeable speaker, capable of presenting his views in a logical manner, he made no attempt at oratory and did not seek to mold audiences by the persuasive powers of eloquence. In Congress he directed his energy in an effort to obtain relief from extortion practiced by the eastern manufacturer on the western farmer. He was only in Congress 14 days when he engaged in a spirited debate for the reduction of the cost of wire fence. Being a new Member, an effort was made to ignore him, but his keen sense of what was right spurred him on until he won his point and secured him recognition that proved much to his advantage through the entire session. He was also very successful in securing increased pensions for old soldiers, and at the close of the session the RECORD showed that he had more special pensions allowed than any other Member of Congress, and had the honor of being the only Member who added an amendment to the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill. He adhorred unfairness; nothing could swerve him from the course that his sense of justice and right marked out for him. It was this splendid side of his character that so endeared him to his fellow men, regardless of political affiliations, and enshrined him in their affections.

"The world is better because he lived. So exalted was his character, so noble and unselfish were his ambitions, that life gave him up reluctantly, and death was proud to take him. But death can not take from us the memory of what he was and what he did. Men come and go; he alone lives in the hearts of his countrymen who truly loves and serves his brother man. Though dead, this immortality, this endless life of human heart and history, is the supreme, the sovereign reward of JAMES P. LATTA."

FUNERAL OF THE LATE CONGRESSMAN LATTA.

The following report of Congressman LATTA's funeral is reproduced from the Omaha Daily World-Herald, of September 16, 1911, whose special reporter was present at the obsequies:

"By the rugged rock of granite that marks the family burial lot on the highest point of Tekamah Cemetery, the body of Congressman JAMES P. LATTA was buried this afternoon—a place typical of the rugged character which had chosen the place in years gone by.

"It was after a funeral service such as Tekamah has never known before, because Congressman LATTA belonged not alone to Tekamah, but to all Nebraska, and from far and near his old friends came with sorrowing hearts. The early train from the south brought many; two coaches attached to an early afternoon freight from the north brought large delegations from Bancroft, Lyons, Oakland, and other points; by automobile and carriage they arrived by the hundred.

"The funeral service was at the LATTA home, where on the large lawn were arranged hundreds of seats and where those for whom seats had not been reserved remained standing while Canon Marsh, of Blair, said the Episcopal service. A quartet composed of Miss Irene Sutherland, Mrs. Neil Cameron, Ralph D. Conkling, and N. W. Preston, the private secretary of Mr. LATTA, sang sweetly, "Softly the Day Fades," "In the Hour of Trial," "Abide with Me," with Miss Adelaide Thomas at the piano.

"The body had rested in the parlor of the old home during the day, surrounded by a wondrous gift of flowers and guarded by Knights Templar in uniform, while thousands passed by to view for the last time the face of their beloved old friend. As the hour approached for the funeral service the casket was borne to the lawn, where the deceased Congressman had passed many happy hours with his family and friends, now meeting again to weep where once all had been joy and laughter.

"After the service was taken up the long march over the hills to the cemetery, located on the crest of one of them. The Masonic fraternity at this moment took charge of the services. Tekamah Lodge, No. 31, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of which Mr. LATTA had been a member for 32 years, of which he had been master for two terms and of which he had been treasurer for many years up to the time of his death, Fred Wixer now being master. Jordan Commandery of Knights Templar, of Blair, of which Mr. LATTA was past eminent commander, of which all the Knights Templar are members, was the escort. The active pallbearers were: T. A. Minier and Oscar Samson, of Oakland; C. A. Darling, of Lyons; E. A. Hansen, of Decatur; John Harrington, of Wayne; E. C. Houston, C. Jeep, and L. D. Phipps, of Tekamah. The honorary pallbearers were Col. Wellington Harrington, J. R. Sutherland, R. A. Templeton, sr., and S. T. Story, of Tekamah; Dr. J. B. Whittier, Decatur; Dan V. Stephens, Fremont; Charles P. Mathewson, Walthill; James Parry, Jackson; Watson Tyson, Blair; J. B. Garland and H. A. Garland, who were boyhood friends of the late Congressman, from Jackson County, Iowa. Col. John P. Cameron was marshal.

"The order of march consisted of Jordan Commandery of Knights Templar; Tekamah Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; the hearse and pallbearers; relatives and friends in carriages; relatives and friends in automobiles.

"At the cemetery the Masonic burial ritual was observed with all of the pathos and impressiveness and tender sentiment possible. Robert E. French, grand custodian of the Grand Lodge of Nebraska, was in charge of the ceremonials committing the body to earth.

"Official recognition of the dead Congressman was given by the presence of the entire congressional delegation of Nebraska, consisting of Congressmen C. O. LOBECK, of Omaha; JOHN A. MAGUIRE, of Lincoln; CHARLES H. SLOAN, of Geneva; MOSES P. KINKAID, of O'Neill; and GEORGE W. NORRIS, of McCook; and PHILIP P. CAMPBELL, of Pittsburg, Kans.; and I. D. YOUNG, of Beloit, Kans., appointed members of the House committee by Speaker CLARK; and by the presence of Nebraska's two United States Senators, NORRIS BROWN and G. M. HITCHCOCK.

"Other men prominent in public life present were: Acting Gov. John H. Moorehead, of Falls City; Speaker John Kuhl, of Randolph; Senator George W. Wiltse, of Randolph; Willis D. Reed, of Madison; Senator Fred Volpp, of Scribner; DAN V. STEPHENS, of Fremont; Judge W. L. Stark, of Aurora; Gen. John C. Cowin, William Wallace, B. H. Robison, Robert Robison, Herman Peters, and Thomas J. Nolen, all of Omaha; Rev. John F. Poucher, of Stanton; Editors Don C. Van Dusen and Thomas Osterman, and Judge Clark O'Hanlion, of Blair; Senator Philip H. Kohl, of Wayne; Col. John A. Ehrhart, of Stanton; Col. J. C. Elliott and P. Moodie, of West Point; C. E. Bardwell, of Lincoln; Judge Walton and Charles Selleck, of Blair; besides many other friends from over the county and State.

"The relatives and intimate family friends from abroad were:

"Mr. and Mrs. John Harrington, Mrs. Chris Astor, and Mr. and Mrs. Dan Harrington, of Wayne; Miss Margaret Latta, Mrs. Ryan, and Miss Powell, of Omaha; Ed Callery and P. T. Flynn, sons-in-law of the late John Latta, of Duncomb, Iowa; J. B. and H. A. Garland, of Cranston, Iowa; Mrs. Bectol and Mrs. Goza, of Tama, Iowa; Dr. N. P. Hansen, of Elk Creek, Nebr.

"Among the elegant gifts of flowers was a huge shield done in colors, the offering of the United States Congress, besides lodge offerings and many from friends near and far.

"It was just such a funeral in just such a place as would pull the hardest on the heartstrings of the members of the family who are left to mourn, as it would bring more vividly to memory the tender moments that had been spent on the same spot with the deceased in his life. Yet there was something about it— the deep shade of the trees, the songs of the birds, the music selected for the occasion, the words of the minister, the sorrowing friends, the solemnity of the scene— that seemed to designate it as the funeral of the deceased and made to be just the kind of a funeral he himself would have desired had he been able to plan it for himself.

"Those of the immediate family who survive him are: His wife and two sons, Ed and Bur; a sister, Miss Louise Latta; and a brother, George C. Latta; also a cousin, W. W. Latta, who has during all these years been as a brother, so close have been their associations."

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune to become intimately acquainted with Mr. JAMES P. LATTA. We entered Congress at the same time, and for nearly two years we lived at the same hotel. Notwithstanding the difference in our ages, a warm and lasting friendship sprang up between us. Living under the same roof, seeing him nearly every day, I had an opportunity to know his worth and appreciate his merits.

Mr. LATTA was a self-made man. He many times recounted to me the hardships and trials of his early life. When a mere boy, he followed the star of empire westward and, unaided and alone, "exacted from the grasp of reluctant fortune" that success which characterized all his efforts.

Prudent, resourceful, painstaking, and honest, it did not take Mr. LATTA long to acquire what men call a competency. He was not a brilliant man, nor a great orator, but he was rich in that great gift which, for want of a better name, is called common sense. When some question would arise in the House affecting the interest of the people of his district or that of the people of the entire country, I have seen Mr. LATTA rise in his seat, and in earnest tones, and with an eloquence born of the justness of the cause he was advocating, become convincing, forceful, logical, and persuasive.

He was at all times armed with the courage of his convictions. His pioneer training gave him that self-confidence with which he met and vanquished the difficulties which so often confronted him.

His fearless nature, his rugged honesty, his independent spirit, his plain matter-of-fact manner, his industrious habits, his cordial greeting, his genial disposition, his innate modesty, his sterling worth, and true merit were recognized by all who knew him, and the possession of these qualities not alone endeared him to his friends, but gained for him an enviable position in the House of Representatives.

Faithful, conscientious, true to himself and his friends, in the fullness of his strength he accomplished his daily tasks and performed well his work in this busy world of ours.

He left behind him as a heritage to his family an "honest name, the memory of earnest deeds well done."

Death had no terrors for JAMES LATTA. He was firm in that faith which is founded upon the Rock of Ages. He believed with the poet who said that—

Death is but an angel, who to man at last his freedom brings;
And the grave is but a nest in which the soul shall find its wings.

JAMES P. LATTA fought a good fight; he kept the faith; he was affectionate to his family; he was true to his friends; he was devoted to his country; he was faithful to his party and conscientious in his convictions.

His colleagues sincerely mourn his death, and though these historic Halls will echo no more with the sound of his voice, and his pleasant smile, his cordial greeting, and his hearty handclasp have gone forever, yet he is not forgotten.

Death is a mystery which all the intellectual forces of mankind have vainly endeavored to solve.

The lips of the young inquiring "whence" and the old asking "whither" are alike unanswered.

Why some are called in the early morning of youth and some fall asleep in the evening of their days we know not; we can but wonder.

When childhood, tender childhood, meets the dread messenger, though our hearts may be torn with grief, yet we are comforted by the thought that, safe from life's trials and temptations and hardships, ignorant even of the knowledge of evil, the little ones sleep secure in the Master's arms. When death halts the faltering steps of old age, we draw some comfort from the knowledge that threescore years and ten is the allotment for usefulness here on earth. But when the bitter stroke descends unexpected, unannounced, upon vigorous manhood, we stand appalled, our hearts are troubled, and we wonder why this should be. But in this hour of doubt and trouble and grief there comes to comfort the aching heart "the Divine assurance that He doeth all things well."

For 'tis idle to talk of the future, the sad might have been mid our tears.
God knew all about it, yet took him away from the oncoming years.
God knows all about those that love Him; how bitter this parting must be.
And yet through it all God is loving and knows so much better than we.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, we have assembled here to-day to do honor to one who in all the affairs of life in which he participated discharged his full duty as a public servant and as an honest man. JAMES P. LATTA was born 68 years ago on a farm near Ashland, Ohio. He came from a race of sturdy pioneers. He belonged to that class of our citizens which pushed sturdily forward ahead of the march of civilization, which for a hundred years came down our rivers in flatboats and through our long forest avenues in oxcarts, pushing always forward toward the undeveloped sections of the great West. While he was yet a child, his parents yielded again to the call of the West, and in the old, primitive way which characterized the westward march of the early settlers, moved across the States of Indiana and Illinois, then being rapidly settled up, across the great river which flows through the center of the country, and found a home on its western bank in the State of Iowa. They were among the very earliest pioneers in that section of the country.

Here young LATTA grew to manhood, working on a farm during the spring and summer and fall—and farm work in those days was the hardest kind of toil—acquiring in the winter time, in a district school, the rudiments of the education which he afterwards developed in the hard school of practical everyday life. When he attained the age of 19 years, the call of the West came again to him. The section of Iowa in which he lived had rapidly settled up. He started out on foot and traveled alone across the great State, having in view, as he often told me himself, but one definite object—the finding of a new country with fertile soil and those natural advantages which could be developed by the population he felt sure would settle there.

An old friend of his in a Mississippi River town had given him this advice:

If you ever go farther west, travel until you reach a river and then settle on its western bank. The most important towns and cities in the interior of the country along the rivers which flow south are on the western banks of those rivers, and the most valuable land is there.

With this advice to guide him, before he attained his majority, with no money in his pockets, with no capital except his own buoyant spirits, his own hopeful disposition, his splendid, vigorous health, and his hard common sense, he started on his long march toward the West, until finally he reached the Missouri River; and, following the advice of his old friend, he crossed the river, and on the other side, in the Territory of Nebraska, he made his home.

He took up a homestead and commenced to develop it. Seven years later he married an Iowa girl, who stood by his side during the years that followed, fighting with him the hard battle of life on a Nebraska farm. Prosperity came to them as the years passed. He acquired more and more land; the land he acquired increased in value under his skillful methods of development, until finally, at the time of his death, he had accumulated for himself and his wife and his children a comfortable fortune. He organized the First National Bank of Tekamah, now one of the strong financial institutions of that section of Nebraska. He represented his district in the State legislature and in the State senate, and was finally elected to Congress.

He journeyed toward the west across the State of Iowa ahead of the railroads. He lived long enough to see the Territory in which he settled grow into one of our greatest States. He saw the section which he selected as his home develop until on every hand there were cultivated farms, thriving villages, towns, and cities, and a happy, cultured, prosperous, contented population.

He discharged his full duty in all the walks of life—loved by his family and the citizens of the community in which he lived, respected by all who lived within his adopted State. I knew him during the entire period of his service in Congress. Early in our acquaintance I learned to admire his rugged honesty and his keen perception of the duties of the high office he filled so well. I knew him better than most Members of Congress and I profited many times by his judgment in important matters of legislation.

He belonged to that type of men who have made this Nation great. He served courageously, honorably, and honestly the people of his State. He was a good citizen, a faithful, honest public servant, a kind husband and father, a true friend. He discharged with honor to himself and his family and neighbors and friends all the duties imposed upon him in the many years of his active, useful life. He possessed the confidence of men; he never betrayed those who believed in him. He was my friend; I desire to add my tribute to his memory.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, during the past four years, which measure the length of my service in this honorable body, the hand of death has visited with unusual frequency its membership. In looking over the personnel of those who have been taken from among us we have been made painfully aware of the fact that those whose services to their country in these legislative halls could be least spared, and whose association with their colleagues has been most helpful, have been conspicuous. Though on account of the brevity of his service he was not so prominent as some of those whose deaths we have come to mourn, yet JAMES P. LATTA, even in the brief period of his membership in this House, not only endeared himself to his associates but left upon them his impress as a man of sterling worth and unusually good judgment. Assiduous and conscientious in the discharge of his duties, he reflected the highest credit upon his constituency.

Early attracted to him by his genial manner, I had an added interest in his career from the fact that he was born in Ashland County, Ohio, which forms a part of the district which I have the honor to represent. While the element of environment has necessarily an important influence upon the career of all men, yet to that of heredity must still be credited the greatest force in giving bent to and shaping that career. I think this must have been essentially true of the one whose death we mourn to-day, for the Lattas of Ashland County, and the branches of that family tree, were people of sterling worth and character. The stock from which he descended was, I take it, typically representative of the so-called Pennsylvania Dutch families who have contributed so much to the prosperity and good name of that splendid county. Though he moved, with his parents, to the West early in life, yet it is easy to imagine that the sturdy characteristics of such people well fitted him for the hardy undertakings which confronted the western settler of 60 years ago. Indeed, we could hardly expect any other result from the life work of such a man than the achievements which were his and which were so signally recognized by the people among whom he lived.

While it is difficult, in a comparative sense, to measure the value of the work of Members of this House, yet there can be no such thing as relativity in those traits which make for integrity of character and personal honor. It is a wise dispensation of Providence which endows men with different abilities and varied attributes. The varieties of the fields of usefulness could hardly take a wider range than is exemplified by the services of the Members of this House, and perhaps in no other assembly of men is the value of such service more accurately gauged than by its membership. To some are given that power of fluency of speech sufficient to exert a potent influence in shaping important measures which come up for discussion upon the floor of the House. With the keenest logic and most forceful rhetoric, fallacious theories are exposed, while to others to whom such endowments have been denied are left the more plodding but not less useful work of framing the essentials of legislative work in the committees. It is in this latter field that our late friend and associate must have been of much practical service, for his experience in agricultural pursuits and wide acquaintance in that work which still has to do with the consideration and treatment of the rights of our Indian population were intimate and accurate.

There is another phase to be considered in connection with men in public life beyond that of mere capacity for usefulness. Is it too much to say that fundamentally in the appreciation of a Member's work lies that element of genuineness of character and integrity of conduct? Judged by this criterion, our friend who has gone before, whose death we mourn, and in whose praise we speak to-day, stood very high in the estimation of his colleagues. With him, even in this day, when party ties bind so lightly and partisanship is almost a thing of the past, his attitude upon all public questions was singularly free from bias and prejudice. His was truly a high conception of the duties of his office. The membership of this House never had a more faithful coworker nor American citizenship a higher standard of fidelity to its best interest. Though it was not vouchsafed to him to occupy a conspicuous place in our country's affairs—for he was rather a private in the ranks of duty—yet in all the essentials that constitute the warp and woof of manhood's structure none possessed them in a higher degree. Truly, in his death not only the people of Nebraska have lost a faithful Representative, but his colleagues a kindly friend.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Speaker, JAMES P. LATTA, in whose memory we have assembled to-day, was born in Ohio, in 1844. Ohio at that time was of the older civilization. When but a child of 2 years his parents moved to Iowa and became pioneers in that Territory. As the settlers increased and the land went under the dominion of man's labor the spirit of the pioneer moved JAMES P. LATTA, then a boy of 18, to again turn his face toward the setting sun. It was during the dark days of the great War between the States, when the land was stirred with civil strife. With indomitable courage and a determined perseverance this boy started for the Territory of Nebraska, walking the entire distance. The pioneer will always do his part when he has nature's heritage—

> Stout muscles and a sinewy heart,
> A hardy frame and a hardier spirit;
> King of his two hands, he does his part
> In every useful toil and art.

The spirit of the pioneer has been the motive power of our civilization. It seems to have been an instinct in the Caucasian race. We know not what developed it in the centuries past, but we do know that it led our people from their original home in Asia across mountains and sea, over river and plain, ever and ever to the westward. Meeting every obstacle, enduring every hardship, overcoming every impediment, it reached our Atlantic seaboard; from thence, with renewed determination, it again moved to the westward; heeding not the war cry of the savage, the stealth of the wild beasts, nor the hardships of nature, it went on and on to the rolling Pacific, leaving in its wake fertile plains, beautiful cities, and happy homes. The pioneer sowed the seed. Those of us who are so fortunate as to live in this century are reaping the harvest. In the State of Nebraska JAMES P. LATTA was a pioneer.

Here he lived and here he died; here he married and reared his family; here he received the bountiful return of nature for his hard labor, and accumulated a competency; here he received the plaudits of his neighbors, and was repeatedly honered by them in being sent to both houses of the State legislature and the Sixty-first and Sixty-second Congresses. This tells the general story of his span of life.

One of the greatest blessings of our system of government is that an open door and a free field is constantly before all our sons and daughters. The humblest, the lowest may ascend to the highest field of usefulness and success. The poorest boy with a clear conscience, a rugged body, a vigorous mind, and a stout heart has no limitations. Merit—intrinsic merit—is what finally prevails. Mr. LATTA possessed these qualities of heart, of soul, and of mind. He made a success of everything he undertook, because to him failure was unknown. In his lexicon there was no such word as "can't."

It was my good fortune on coming to Washington at the opening of the Sixty-first Congress to be thrown in close touch with JAMES P. LATTA and his devoted wife. While he was my senior by many years, we became close friends. I grew to love him as a father, and when I learned that the angel of death had summoned him it seemed as though one of close kin had been taken away. Death is always an unwelcome guest, and to JAMES P. LATTA an unannounced one. Strong and vigorous of stature, it was little dreamed by those who knew him best that a dreaded malady had fastened upon him its poisonous fangs. He was hurried to the greatest hospital in the world, but there told that life was his but a few weeks longer. With that fortitude which had characterized the every act of his life he prepared for his departure to the unknown world from whose bourn no traveler returns. He had lived his life well; he had performed every duty to the best of his ability and went to the future with no dread, save that dread of parting from those who were near and dear to him.

Our congressional life has many joys and pleasures, many sorrows and vicissitudes. Most that we say here will never be heeded; much that we do here will soon be forgotten; but one thing will never—no, never—perish—sweet friendship, the most delightful relationship of life, will remain like the evergreen and leave us only when body and soul are parted. JAMES P. LATTA has gone, but the memories of his friendship will be with us forever.

Farewell: A word that has been and must be
A word that makes us linger—yet—farewell.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I am honored by being able to say something of the life and character of Hon. JAMES P. LATTA, formerly a Member of this House.

On Mr. LATTA's entrance into Congress it was my fortune to become acquainted with him immediately, and I lived in the same house with him during his entire service in the House of Representatives.

Mr. LATTA was of that pioneer, rugged stock that knew what it was to fight for what you get in life. He was deprived of an education, except what he could secure at the public schools of that early time. His education, though, was the learning of good common sense, honesty, industry, and integrity.

When a young man, scarcely 19 years of age, he left his home in Iowa and all that was dear to him then, and started across the country afoot, traveling several hundred miles, settling in the Territory of Nebraska, there to seek his fortune and make his way in the world.

We who have not had that experience little realize what it means to go out into a new country and make a home. I have always felt that those who go into the wilderness, go into a new country, and blaze the way, deserve great credit. It is an easier thing to follow the trail after it has been blazed than it is to start out and make the trail. Mr. LATTA, having industry, integrity, and character and force of determination to win, did win in his new home and became one of the prominent citizens of that great State. He was honored by the people of his State by being elected to the lower house of the legislature, and on his election to Congress he was then a member of the State senate of Nebraska. In these positions he showed his worth as a man. He stood for the right of the people; he knew what it was to struggle. He knew what it was to be poor, and when he became independent, so far as this world's goods are concerned, he did not forget those less fortunate, and his sympathy was always with them.

As a Member of this House he discharged his duties with great credit, which was reflected upon his district, upon the State, and upon the Nation. He took an interest in public affairs and was always at his post of duty, ready to discharge whatever duties might be necessary to be performed as a Member of this House. I feel that the Nation has been honored by the election of such a man as JAMES P. LATTA to Congress. It is to be regretted that he did not live long enough to serve his term and pass to higher honors in the State and the Nation, where he might be of even greater service to the people.

His domestic life was of the happiest. He was a devoted husband and father and took great delight in the company of his family, and he was happy when he was with them. He always tried to make the life of his devoted wife one of pleasure, and she was his constant companion.

And so, my friends, we can offer but little comfort to the sorrowing family in the loss of this dear man, but we can offer them the hope that when they look above and beyond this life they will some day meet the husband and the father there; because we read in the Good Book that it is said, "I will go and prepare a place for you," and I believe that JAMES P. LATTA's spirit rests with his Maker above, and that when his spirit ascended on high was received, it was said, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of the Lord."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, the frequency of such occasions as has called this House together to-day admonishes us of the uncertainty of life and the irrevocable fate of all humanity. Travel as man may and the same fate is his ultimate destiny, from which there is no rescue.

JAMES P. LATTA, whose memory we have convened to honor, has traveled the great highway of life from one terminal to the other, and entered into the enjoyment of his well-earned reward. His was an unusual life, full of the experiences which few men have enjoyed. Twice a pioneer on the western frontier, he bore witness to the marvelous development which has transpired in the last half century in a great and growing section of our country.

Born in the State of Ohio, at the age of 3 years his parents moved with him to the far distant Iowa, then the western limit of civilization, and there began the life of a pioneer. He was reared among the hazards and dangers of frontier life until he was about 20 years of age, when he resolved to move westward and become a pioneer on his own responsibility. Not a single mile of railroad or telegraph had been built west of the Missouri River, and the prairie schooner and stagecoach on the old National Trail were the only means of transportation which invaded that boundless territory, with its inexhaustible resources, awaiting the advent of a civilized people to open nature's great storehouses.

Before he had attained his majority, armed with dauntless courage, supported by stalwart manhood and a fixed determination, he started for the frontier in northern Nebraska to found a home and carve out a fortune for himself. He had been educated in the great school of human experience, with limited facilities to cultivate his mind and but few opportunities to apply the fragmentary rudiments of the meager education afforded the old settlers. For 200 miles he penetrated the West on foot, seeking the place of his future home, where he lived until he died. He was one of the first settlers who carried the flickering lamp of civilization into that land where the painted and plumed barbarian held undisputed sway, that its feeble rays might radiate over the expansive prairies and announce the beginning of a new era. He built his home with the hostile Indians as his only neighbors, where the moan of the buffalo, the howl of the wolf, and the scream of the eagle alone broke the silent vigils of the long weary nights.

His pioneer cabin was home, and around it the winds which swept the broad untamed prairies sang requiems to break the monotony of slowly speeding time. But time worked its weary way, and the civilization of which he was the advance guard came trooping along in its westward march, and the uncivilized red man reluctantly, like the Arab, folded his tent and moved along toward the setting sun. As the processes of a never-ceasing evolution unfolded its progress before him for review, he saw the Indian villages disappear, and towns and cities, hives of human industry and thrift, erected on their ruins; he saw the wigwam decay and the home of the sturdy settler take its place; the schoolhouse and the church builded for the diffusion of knowledge and civilization, and the arts of peace supplant the habits and customs of barbarism. He saw the great prairies over which herds of wild beasts had fed and roamed reduced to cultivation and produce beyond the sanguine expectations of the most optimistic; he saw the dry and parched desert drink of the living waters of the streams flowing along its borders and become rich and fertile lands, teeming with products to supply the wants of the people at home, and furnish a surplus to swell the markets in distant sections and aid the ever growing commerce of a mighty people in the greatest country on the globe.

All these occurred within his time, passed under his review like a panorama, and in their marvelous growth he had been a potent factor, and in the important part he had played in this wonderful transformation, this great and good work, his people recognized his merit, his real worth, and confided greater responsibilities to him. They elected him to represent them in their State legislature, where he acquitted himself so satisfactorily that they chose him to represent them in the State senate, and for his faithful attention and splendid work they called him twice to serve them in the United States Congress, which he was doing when his untimely end came. In every public capacity he was the same true and faithful public servant and never betrayed their confidence or forfeited their esteem.

His experience, covering the many stations he had occupied from a pioneer homesteader to the position of a man of wealth and influence and high public position, enabled him to understand the various wants of the people engaged in various vocations, and his sturdy character and unflinching integrity made him a positive force in advocating the cause of his constituency, which he ably and faithfully did as a Member of this body.

The pioneer is rapidly passing from among us; soon, ah, much too soon, we will know him no more. Their places will not be easily filled. They were heroes whose virtues should be extolled. Their contribution to civilization, to the country's progress, deserves particular attention, and their characters, standing out boldly among the most useful the country has produced, should be impressed upon posterity as great, good, and patriotic. But few, if any, can excel them; their work speaks for itself, and we are forcibly reminded of their wise endeavors in every institution in our common country as the product of their handiwork.

Their work, unaided by example or experience from which they could pattern, dedicated to the foundation of a new civilization, the organization of society and the creation of a new Government, called for the exercise of the best faculties of the head and heart, and the truest wisdom with which man could be endowed, the highest order of integrity and patriotism the world could furnish, in order that what they created might meet the requirements of succeeding ages and measure up to the responsibilities which the future would demand of them. Imbued with this great responsibility, penetrating the darkness in which the future was veiled, estimating with almost mathematical certainty the marvelous progress which would follow their endeavor, they accomplished their work with such wonderful accuracy, with such unselfish patriotism and untiring devotion to public welfare, that it has adequately performed every purpose to which it was dedicated, and as time unfolds the secrets hidden from view, their wisdom and capacity is the more firmly established and revealed.

We venerate the names of our military heroes and great statesmen by the erection of monuments and statues to show our appreciation of their great services to their country; we signalize their achievements in story and song; we glorify their virtues by emulating their examples, but we have failed to pay the proper amount of attention, I fear, to the sturdy characters of our pioneers, who, amid the dangers and hardships, formed settlements, established civilization, and founded social government among hostile foes and conquered the enemies of progress.

To them the country's posterity for all time owes a debt of gratitude which it can never pay. The sturdy pioneer performed a work which redounds to his glory, erected for himself a monument in the hearts of the people which will endure long after monuments of marble and statues of brass have crumbled to dust and have perished from the minds of men. His work was dedicated to the uplift of humanity, and an appreciative posterity will regard it as the greatest heritage ever bequeathed to the human race. Time will not diminish its importance, the people can not underestimate its value, and the future will keep secure their fame and revere their precious memories. In the demise of our lamented colleague a pioneer has fallen and the country suffers because of his removal, but his example is left as a precious legacy to his family and friends. "Peace to his ashes."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the Members of this House are once more called upon to mourn the loss of one of its most useful Members—Hon. JAMES P. LATTA, of Tekamah, Nebr.—near the close of the Sixty-first Congress. He represented the third congressional district of Nebraska, having received 26,832 votes to 24,865 cast for his Republican opponent, Hon. John F. Boyd, in a district that had for many years been a strong Republican district. Mr. LATTA was a member of the State senate at the time of his election to this House. Who has not observed the wonderful, although undefinable, power some men possess over their fellows? Is it personal magnetism or electricity, or is it to be found in what we sometimes hear called electrobiology or mesmerism? Is it the mysterious force of the human will? Is it a secret or unknown power which the human mind can not understand? Whatever it may be, this power was possessed by Congressman LATTA in a remarkable degree. He drew men to him by his earnest, direct, and convincing manner. It has been truthfully said that an honest man is the noblest work of God. The honesty and integrity of Mr. LATTA were unquestioned, and impressed themselves on the voters of his district and his associates in this House in so convincing a manner that they regarded him as one of God's noblemen. And for this reason we who knew him best as a Member of this House reverence his memory the most. Mr. LATTA was a good father, husband, friend, and legislator, and always so impressed himself on his associates. I served on the same committee—the Committee on Indian Affairs—with him, and he was my close personal friend and party associate, and there was no man on the committee for whom I had a higher personal regard. He possessed a remarkably clear judgment on all business affairs, having been a very successful man himself. He very readily grasped the many business matters coming before our committee relating to Indian affairs. He was regarded as one of the safest and best legislators on the committee.

Mr. LATTA was born near Ashland, Ohio, and when 2 years old his father removed to eastern Iowa, being one of the earliest pioneers of that country. His father was a farmer, and young LATTA worked on the farm during crop seasons, and attended school during the winter months, where he acquired his limited education. In 1863, at the age of 19 years, he emigrated to Nebraska, where he lived at the time of his death. He walked several hundred miles in making this change of residence. There were no railroads in this country at that time, and Nebraska was then a Territory. Mr. LATTA was a pioneer and an original homesteader of Nebraska, and grew up and prospered with his State. Mr. LATTA is the only Congressman I ever knew who moved to strike from a bill under consideration in the House an appropriation of money to be expended in his State. Yet this is exactly what he did on February 1, 1910. Page 1345 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that the Clerk read the following clause of the Agriculture appropriation bill:

Nebraska National Forest Reserve, $18,250.

Mr. LATTA rose and said:

Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have listened yesterday and to-day to this discussion about the appropriations for these national forest reserves. In my State of Nebraska you appropriate $18,000 for the maintenance of a national reserve. You can buy all the timber on that reserve for less than $5,000. You can not propagate timber there, because the reserve is leased to sheepmen, and the sheep eat off every bush that grows. I agree with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that these appropriations seem extravagant, unreasonable, and uncalled for. We commenced in 1901 with an appropriation of $90,000. In nine years we have increased it to $5,000,000. Now, what have we got for it? Are we making parks or pleasure reserves, or are we trying to propagate and increase the growth of timber? If we are trying to increase the growth of timber, we are also leasing these reserves to men who are grazing sheep, goats, and cattle and horses on them, and thereby destroying every small tree and bush. Now, the two things do not work together. It is unwarranted extravagance and misjudgment, in my opinion. I am not criticizing the members of this committee, but are the people getting value received for the money expended? It looks to me as though they are not.

Mr. LATTA then offered an amendment to strike out this Nebraska appropriation, but his amendment was defeated by other Members of Congress from Nebraska. But this incident shows the self-denial and honesty of purpose of our deceased friend. Refusing this needless, in my judgment, appropriation of public funds places Mr. LATTA in a class by himself.

Mr. LATTA did not believe in landlordism and was opposed to large landed estates, and believed that some equitable means should be devised of dividing them up into small holdings, so that the tenants on large farms and ranches and Indian and other land reservations could become the owners of small tracts by making small annual payments therefor. He said that he would be glad to divide up his own large farm and ranch property in the same way, and that he had often advanced money to young tenants on his ranches to pay for their land on the annual installment plan. The members of our committee valued very highly the advice given us by this excellent business man and kind-hearted philanthropist in regard to the best disposition of the large Indian landed estates of the West.

Mr. LATTA was born, lived, and died on the outskirts of American civilization, where he helped to settle and civilize one of the best States in the Union. All honor to this old sturdy pioneer, statesman, loving husband, kind and indulgent father, safe adviser, and faithful friend. This fast-fading school of old pioneers may well be described as—

Tall and strong, and swift of foot were they,
Beyond the dwarfing city's pale abortions;
Because their thoughts had never been the prey
Of care or gain: the green woods were their portions.
No sinking spirits told them they grew gray;
No fashion made them apes of her distortions.
Simple they were, not savage; and their rifles,
Though very true, were not yet used for trifles.

Motion was in their days, rest in their slumbers,
And cheerfulness the handmaid of their toil;
Nor yet too many nor too few their numbers,
Corruption could not make their hearts her soil.
The lust which stings, the splendor which encumbers,
With the free foresters divide no spoil.
Serene nor sullen were the solitudes
Of this unsighing people of the West.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, we have laid aside the usual routine of public business and assemble here this afternoon to pay a brief tribute to the life and services of a late Member and our lamented colleague, Hon. JAMES P. LATTA.

He was born near Ashland, Ohio, October 31, 1844, and when a child of but 2 years of age he moved with his parents to the eastern part of the Territory of Iowa. He grew to manhood with much the same training and surroundings as other boys of his time—working on his father's farm and attending district school during the winter months. In 1863, before overland railroads were constructed, he traveled across Iowa and into Nebraska Territory, where he located on a Government homestead in Burt County, near the Missouri River and close to the present town of Tekamah. He lived on this farm, which has been enlarged to 3,000 acres, and in the town of Tekamah till his death on September 11, 1911. A few weeks before his death he sought relief for stomach trouble and underwent an operation, from which he never recovered. He leaves in his immediate family a widow and two sons to mourn his loss.

While we are eulogizing the memory of Mr. LATTA here in this House more particularly from the point of view of his public service, still I can not fail to recall the more realistic and vivid story of his life as told by his friends and neighbors at his home on the day of his funeral, which I attended as one of the official congressional party. The people had gathered there not only from among his neighbors and fellow townsmen, but also from many parts of the State to pay their respects to a departed friend. Each one in that gathering felt a personal loss in Mr. LATTA's death. The simple but eloquent story of his everyday life was in the minds and upon the lips of the thousands of those who knew almost his every deed and act and thought. To them his life was an open book, and in it they prided themselves in having a part. Friends vied with each other in relating his many acts of charity, kindness, and early sacrifice. The people of his district had implicit confidence in his honesty, his industry, and his ability. To travel with him over his large district seemed like going through his own neighborhood, where each one had a personal interest in his welfare and all knew him as "Uncle JIM LATTA."

Mr. LATTA was a man of simple tastes and democratic in manner and sympathy. Because of his companionable disposition, large experience, and good judgment it was indeed a pleasure and a profit to accept his hospitality. Entering Congress at the same time and living at the same hotel, I found it a privilege to have the advantage of his association. Although a man of strong convictions, still he was tolerant and charitable in thought and accorded to others the right to follow their own standards of right living. His long experience gave him a keen insight into the problems and trials which multiply around the average man. When there was conflict of ideas among men he saw and understood how honest differences of opinion might arise among many minds and diversity of environment. He did not fail to take the larger view of life. He was an optimist and had unfaltering faith in the future. Courage and hope rather than fear and despair characterized his attitude toward life. Integrity of word and action made him understood by all, and you always knew what he meant by what he said. Physically he was large, strong, and rugged, and conserved to the last his energies. Temperate in all his personal conduct and habits, he was able, therefore, to lead an active and strenuous life to the very close.

While he directed most of his efforts to the building up and development of the new country and to the care of his increasing properties, still he had been the recipient, more particularly in later years, of many public honors, which he modestly accepted. In 1887 he represented his district in the lower house of the Nebraska State Legislature and in 1907 was a member of the State senate. In 1908 he was elected as a Democrat from the third Nebraska district to the Sixty-first Congress and was reelected to the Sixty-second Congress. Where he played the larger part, I believe, was as a pioneer and Nation builder. He was contemporaneous with the last and greatest epoch of our history which comprehended our industrial and civic expansion and growing nationality.

The rounded character of the man made it possible for him to become a potential force in our industrial expansion, while his constructive nature helped in the organization of political society. When he reached Nebraska Territory he found the Indian and buffalo in possession, with only a few scattered settlements of white men. Natural obstacles in the new country yielded slowly at first. The blizzards, droughts, grasshopper pests, and hard times made up some of the conditions which tried the courage of men, and many were the pioneers who were compelled to surrender the heroic struggle. But with Mr. LATTA he refused to yield and ultimately reaped a comfortable reward, but not more than he deserved. He was a man who was not satisfied with meeting simple situations, but insisted on overcoming great obstacles. When he had passed from the stage of poverty and hardships he did not forget nor cease to help those who still suffered through misfortune. He gave freely to those in need and without any assurance or guaranty of return. While he lived his later years in the new surroundings, still he felt the early spirit and sympathized with the old conditions. When he was called into the larger activities of life and the complex problems of expanding business he never forgot the joys and sorrows of his friends and neighbors.

While his congressional career was not long, still it was an enduring one of splendid service. He was a constant attendant at his committees and in the House and to all his congressional duties up to the time of his last illness. His large fund of information and practical experience were brought to bear in the examination of every question, and in the material and economic development he spoke with some authority. He held a high conception of the public service and left the impress of his life and character as a contribution to the parliamentary history of his country. He ceased to act and laid down life's activities only when the ministering angel of death approached. When the soul of this man passed to its Creator and the earth closed in upon all that was mortal of JAMES P. LATTA, then ended the career of a Christian soldier, a true man, and an honorable public servant.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, as a Member from the great agricultural State of Nebraska, which sent JAMES P. LATTA to Congress, I desire also to add tribute to his memory. My remarks will not be based upon a long and intimate personal acquaintance. Though I had been a resident of Nebraska for nearly 30 years, I had not actually become personally acquainted with Mr. LATTA until I met him here in Washington as Member elect of the third Nebraska district. But, Mr. Speaker, energetic and enterprising men, who for years have helped to build up and advance their communities, their home towns, counties, and States, become known for their citizenship; they gain a reputation which makes them known farther and wider than it is practicable, even, to one with much travel to extend his acquaintance. A man may do so little as never to be heard of beyond the confines of his small community. On the other hand, he may achieve so much as to become widely and favorably known for his great value as a citizen, by reputation merely, throughout a great country like ours and even beyond the seas. LATTA was so much a part of his part of Nebraska that its history could not be written without making him, among its other strong pioneers, one of the principal factors.

Thus it was that for nearly 30 years before I met him here as a Representative of his district I had known him well by his well-earned reputation as one of the leading men and citizens, not only of his home county, but of the territory which comprises the congressional district he so ably and faithfully represented. We had seldom caught sight of each other in Nebraska from the circumstance that we lived on different railway lines which carried us to the metropolis and to the capital of the State and, in a measure, that we were not both Democrats. It was on account of what Mr. LATTA was doing as a business man—a large landowner and farmer, a breeder of pure-bred and high-grade live stock, a leading, active, and popular banker, and a Democratic political factor—that, incidentally, I came to know him by reputation. If prominent farmers and live-stock raisers were being talked of, LATTA was one of them. If popular bankers were the subject, LATTA was sure to receive favorable mention. If a Democratic district or State convention was being discussed, "JIM" LATTA, of Burt, was sure to be taken into the reckoning. So, while I had not really become acquainted with LATTA before his coming here, I knew him as you may know parts of your State or country you have never seen—by learning its geography from a map.

LATTA was so much a part of the business, citizenship, and political geography of his part of the State; he had put himself on the map of northeast Nebraska so conspicuously in its upbuilding that he became, in the county of Burt, in particular, one of its early landmarks, and so he remained during life. LATTA grew as the country grew. Every time a new map had to be made, on account of the development and advancement of his section of the State, such as the formation of new counties and new political divisions, his prominence as a landmark thereon became increased. His progress and development kept pace with that of the new and rapidly developing country which he had chosen as his home. He made good the advice of Greeley, "Go west and grow up with the country." He helped to develop and advance his section of the State and by so doing developed and advanced himself.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is due mutually to LATTA and northeast Nebraska as a section to observe that his section was not lacking in strong men, successful men—successful in business, prominent as citizens—some who were entitled to be considered as financiers in a great State, others prominent for their citizenship. In fact, the county of Burt, his home, can boast of a number of men who became conspicuous for their ability and achievements in commercial and in public life. The county seat town of Tekamah, where he made his home for nearly 50 years, produced, noticeably, a number of men who distinguished themselves in official life. As a consequence, the favorable estimate to be placed upon LATTA is increased rather than diminished by the character of his environments. It was necessary that he be found worthy in comparison and in proportion with his surroundings in order that he should become politically honored, and it is to his credit that he was found thus worthy, with the standard of the citizenship of his town and county so high.

Taking a wider view, going away from his home to the other counties of his congressional district, the estimate is legitimately increased by the fact that situated therein are some of the best towns and foremost men of Nebraska, men who, like LATTA, distinguished themselves as business men and financiers and, at the same time, for their high qualities and attainments in the best citizenship—political and official honors included.

Mr. Speaker, observation and reflection have convinced me that two particular qualifications contribute largely to exceptional or extraordinary success. From the practical business standpoint, one possessed with the faculty to perceive opportunities, coupled with the ability to improve them, to turn them to his advantage, such a man becomes a capitalist by the possession of these qualities alone. A scholar who was a world-wide traveler declared, having the United States particularly in mind, that "America" was another name for "opportunity." The history of our country, its rapid growth in population, in development, and wealth, and its relative standing with the civilized nations of the world, together with the attainments and achievements realized by persons of humble beginnings, abundantly prove the declaration to have been true. Our United States, over all its broad domain, has been a country of unusual opportunities, and the newer and less developed part has all the time afforded, according to the popular idea, the best opportunities for making a start.

The star of empire has all the time moved from the East westward into the new and undeveloped West. Young men have emulated the example set by their pioneer fathers by leaving their old homes and going West to grow up with the country. It would seem likely LATTA inherited this predilection, his parents having removed from Ohio to eastern Iowa, and this inheritance, Mr. Speaker, proved a rich legacy to LATTA. He was possessed of a practical turn of mind. To him was given the clear vision to recognize opportunities large and small, and he was possessed of the qualifications to make each his own. In his make-up he was not lacking in confidence; neither was he overconfident. A good, sound judgment secured for him about the right balance. Many men perceive opportunities to be good, but have not the ability or confidence or courage to improve them. Others pass opportunities by for want of the faculty to perceive them. It is the few who both perceive and avail themselves of the advantage of the better or best opportunities. It is easy enough to look backward and see the numerous valuable opportunities we have passed, but this constitutes only observation and experience; thus we see what we have lost or missed. It is the foresight which makes for success, Mr. Speaker. Hope pictures the future better than the past or present and sees the distant land superior to the home neighborhood. Distance lends enchantment to the imaginative view, and the farther away the more alluring.

> Thus with delight we linger to survey
> The promised joys of life's unmeasured way.
> Thus from afar each dim discovered scene
> More pleasing seems than all the past hath been.

Young LATTA might have done well at that period, 1863, to have remained near the parental homestead in eastern Iowa. It is certain that on his journey across the State for the Missouri River he passed through much virgin country, affording opportunities equal to what he found in eastern Nebraska, but the imagination of the son of the pioneer parents brought to him the view of the country west of the Missouri as a promise land, where it appeared to him his success might become equal to that of the most successful within the limits of his hitherto limited observation. At this time—1863—the Missouri River Valley did abound in great opportunities—chances commensurate with the work and worth of industrious and virile men.

New communities were to be established; towns, cities, and a capital and metropolis were to spring up in Nebraska; but the new and fertile farm lands were the infallible investment. They were certain to reach a value tenfold, if not a hundredfold or two hundred fold more than then could be realized. LATTA saw this, and he proceeded to make the most of it. He acquired lands and live stock, and continued to expand in these until he had become one of the leading men of business and wealth in his community. Finally, his surplus of money being adequate, he embarked in a bank. When drought, grasshoppers, and, as a result thereof, depression came, he did not lose faith, but persevered, maintaining his faith in the future of the country and the people as well. He banked on his faith in the future of the country; one less farsighted, resourceful, courageous, and magnanimous might have viewed it that he even banked his bank on risks taken with his patrons in their financial exigencies; but LATTA'S never-erring business prescience reassured him and he firmly adhered to it. When the patrons of his bank were confronted with executions and mortgage foreclosure, chattel and real, he did not forsake them, even when their holdings, judged by their selling value at the time, did not warrant the risks which he took.

But LATTA looked beyond the exceptional conditions; he reasoned that the country possessed a sure foundation for a prosperous future. He reasoned that the crop failures caused by drought would be followed by a succession of abundant crops, and that grasshoppers might never return again, and his faith was vindicated. The risks his bank took, which in some cases caused his wisdom as a banker to be challenged, turned out to be bread cast upon the waters to bring him an hundredfold. Prosperity restored, business men and farmers, who had been borrowers of his bank, with a few years of good crops and good business became themselves money lenders and depositors, with the result that the deposits of LATTA'S bank were greatly augmented. I have not heard that Mr. LATTA in his young manhood aspired to a political career, and infer that his going into politics, being elected first as a representative to the Nebraska State Legislature, and afterwards to the State Senate, was the result of his successful and popular business and citizenship reputation. I deem it probable this was the evolution of circumstances. He had proven, even vindicated, his faith in the country and his confidence in his fellow men, and how could they better return the compliment than by showing their confidence in him by choosing him, first as their State legislator and thereafter as their Congressman? With two terms in Congress, his political ambition was fully gratified.

For some time previous to receiving any warning of his affliction which proved to be fatal he had declared his intention to not be a candidate for renomination or reelection. He had also stated to friends that he would not entertain the thought of a candidacy for governor, for which he had received favorable mention. He regarded his two terms in Congress as a testimonial, a reward, of his previous career, the merits of his citizenship, business and otherwise, including, also, his two terms in the State legislature. Politically, his cup was full, and it was his desire to go back to the sunlit prairies, to his large farm, and behold the broad acres, heavy with grain, to hear the low of countless cattle grazing on green pastures, the industrious rattle of the mower and reaper, to scent the clover and apple blossoms, enjoy the songs of birds, and watch his herd of deer and antelope race and gambol over the hills of the ample park they feel they own.

Mr. Speaker, for his locality LATTA was a man of large wealth, and his constituents had conferred a well-earned distinction by several times choosing him as their lawmaker, state and national. He was fortunate in his domestic life. He could not have wished for more. He is survived by a most estimable wife, with sons who have already become successful and prominent and promising in business spheres. One of them has been honored by being elected mayor of the home town, which office, I think, he now holds. These worthy young men are sure to conserve and add to the property not only they inherit, but as well the good name of their distinguished father.

Mr. Speaker, with other Congressmen I was present at the funeral of Mr. LATTA. The capacity of the town to accommodate even for the daytime the thousands of friends and admirers who came to pay their last tribute of respect to the deceased was taxed to its limit, if not overtaxed. During my stay of 24 hours it was my pleasure to converse with many who had known Mr. LATTA for years and had known as well the people of Burt County by whom Mr. LATTA was so well known, and I was deeply impressed by the numerous expressions voluntarily made of the high esteem in which he was held. The personal popularity of which I was so strongly convinced he had enjoyed and deserved to enjoy explained fully to me why it was and how it was that Mr. LATTA, a Democrat, in a county which was normally Republican by seven or eight hundred had been able in his several campaigns to carry the county by so large a majority.

In the throng that assembled at the tomb on the green tableland which overlooks the peaceful Missouri Valley were men of every calling and every variation of political faith. Settlers who had been carried through depression, pioneers whose faltering courage had been sustained in seasons of distress, and business men who had found help in periods of panic came to mourn the loss of the man who was ever a vitalizing force in the community where he had established his home. And while older men remembered many a kindly act, the young looked away from the quiet resting place, there in the State which had been the land of promise to the Iowa boy of long ago, and felt within them the power to make much of their opportunities.

Surely, the value of a man's life, the true meaning of his span of years, shall be measured not in material possessions or even in special achievements, but in his relations to his fellow men. If he shall have in him the spirit which recognizes the universal brotherhood, and if he shall be guided by that spirit, then he is to be numbered among those whose sojourn in the world has made the world better. By this measure JAMES P. LATTA is to be remembered as one of the Nation's builders, a man who labored conscientiously in a small way at first, because he could cheerfully accept as his task whatever was nearest to his hand. With a large faith in humanity, as well as in opportunity, he held himself loyally to the work of developing his part of the country, and thus he contributed liberally to the general welfare—thus he set the example of noble citizenship which prepares wisely and abundantly for future generations.

In the years that are coming the influence of JAMES P. LATTA will remain potent. The love and gratitude which he kindled in the hearts of all who knew him will stimulate effort and preserve high ideals which will be passed on. This is the rich heritage that he left, and all who contemplate it must bow in reverence to the name that will stand in Nebraska for all the sterling virtues, the kindly sympathies, the unselfish traits, and the exalted ideals which combine to make a man the representative of the highest type of American citizenship.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, when the history of the great West is written and the story of the development and the advancement, the civilization, the progress of education on the great plains is told it will be found that to JAMES P. LATTA, late Member of this body, and to other men like him, is due more than to any other class of people the wonderful development of that country, the wonderful progress of education, of civilization, and of advancement.

Born of humble parents, living, as I understand it, a life of poverty, he struggled along through life learning from his own experience every one of the trials and difficulties that beset the pioneer. That he was successful in his life financially and politically and in every other honorable respect only goes to demonstrate that he was made of the stuff that constitutes the truest and the noblest manhood.

In our great Commonwealth Congressman LATTA took a prominent part in every one of its steps of advancement. He was there at the beginning; he saw it develop into a great garden spot. He came into the country when it was uninhabited, save by the red men; he saw it pass through all its trials and its troubles, and finally develop into one of the greatest agricultural sections of the country, if not of the entire civilized world. He lived in the midst of its greatest development. He was part and parcel of the advancement that it made. He was moved, Mr. Speaker, by no great personal ambition; he had no particular desire for honor or achievement, but he did every day what he believed was his duty to perform.

Many are the incidents that could be recounted, in addition to those that have been spoken of, that showed, during his life and the development of his great State, the wonderful tenderness of his heart as well as the ability of the man in a business direction. He never sought public office. He had decided, long before it was known either to him or to his friends that his days were numbered, that he would not again be a candidate for election to the House of Representatives. When this announcement was made in the newspapers of Nebraska there was immediate mention of his name in connection with the governorship of our State, but he promptly stated through the public press that at the expiration of his term he would never again seek or accept public office.

He had led an eventful life, marked by honorable deeds all the way through. He had been successful in business, and he desired to put in the balance of his days in living a quiet life in his own home, enjoying the well-earned competency that his efforts had brought to him, and therefore he declined all further political honor. If he had consented to the use of his name as a candidate, it is my judgment that there would have been but little if any opposition to his nomination for that office. His life is emblematic of what comes to the life of the higher class of pioneers. They are courageous, honest, and tenderhearted. The many deeds of kindness that marked his pathway through this world would be an honor to the heritage of any man, and if at his funeral, around his open grave, every man to whom he had done a favor or a kind deed would have thrown upon the coffin a rose of recollection his grave would have been filled with the fragrant flowers of remembrance.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in an immortality. I believe that beyond this life there is an existence better, higher, and happier than the life we live here—a life of everlasting peace, of eternal bliss. We can not brush away the tear from the aged widow's cheek; we can not banish the sorrow from the hearts of loving children and loyal friends, but we can even in this hour reach a condition of satisfaction, almost of joy, at the thought that he whose loss we now mourn, while he was among us, planted along the thorny pathway we must all tread flowers that are blooming for our benefit, for our happiness, and for the comfort and pleasure of those who follow. Mr. Speaker, the Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but it is love, peace, and joy. Into that kingdom Congressman LATTA has entered, and that peace he now enjoys. We can confer no greater honor upon his memory than to practice the virtues that the story of his life has taught us. We can do nothing greater or grander for the upbuilding of humanity than to remember the example of his every-day life from the time he was a penniless boy walking across the plains of Iowa to his pioneer Nebraska home up to the time of the close of his eventful career. Believing in the life he led, having faith in his honesty, in his integrity, recognizing the benefit that his life has been to humanity, to a broader belief in the Fatherhood of God and the fraternity of humanity, I want to say, honor to his memory here, peace to his ashes now; rest and repose to his soul beyond.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, a stalwart member of our Nebraska delegation, in his late sixties has fallen. The affliction which wasted his vigor and drained his life was brief.

Few men of his age came to this House with form so erect, carriage so virile, and such goodly physique as JAMES P. LATTA. His name, personality, and presence would trace his ancestry near unto the channel which divides the land of Moore and Burns. His facial dress and courteous bearing favor an earlier ancestral strain. So, I believe, we had in him a mingling of the Celt and Gaul.

He was a distant neighbor of my parents in eastern Iowa. He left that place the year I was born. His span of life and activities covered two pioneer periods; one of these in a forest county bordering the Mississippi, the other a somewhat similar county in Nebraska bordering the Missouri. Before his life ended the Nebraska pioneer period had passed; its boundaries had inclosed as fair a field, subdued and adorned by the arts of genius and industry, and its people registered as great an intellectual and moral advance as any part of this superb Union.

I visited his farm home and saw his devotion to the tree planters' cause in the care of the natural forestry as well as the magnificent trees of his own early planting. He was an advocate of tree planting for which our State is named and famed. Among these sported the herds of deer and antelope—forest denizens, which he kept and for which he cared. It was a devotion to the lessons and memory of his youth to love the trees, to preserve and build the forest, and so follow the motto of Nebraska's great secretary, who, in season and out of season, bade the world "Plant trees."

So I thought of my friend LATTA's untimely taking off in figure and imagery of trees. His fall from the appearance of health and strength was the fall of the oak. In the country where he and I spent our respective youths there grew the bending willow, the swaying birch, and the monarch oak. I have seen all of these lashed by the storm. I have seen the droop and disfigurement of willow and birch, but the oak, in all its sturdy grandeur, stood defiant. I have seen a later storm further wound and disfigure willow and birch which still stood to live a weakened life and a delayed dissolution; but the oak, once betraying a weakened heart, defective body, or decayed root, under the blast of the elements fell with mighty crash, there prone to lie in sublime humility where the shadow of its once proud form had rested. So the human willow or birch oft becomes the scriptural trespasser of fourscore years, while the human oak is not permitted its span of threescore and ten.

There are men who strive for the unattainable and expend their energies in vain though perhaps laudable pursuit; there are those whose faith would move mountains; and there are those whose ideals, pressed with industry and vigor, inspire the living and generations to come. Congressman LATTA was not one of these. There are those who, attempting to move no mountains, lift from the human path obstructing stones; there are those who see the immediate problems of life and solve them; and there are those who see a present task and hasten to perform it with what diligence and ability they possess. Of this latter class was the Congressman. Through a useful and active life he met with resolution and industry the tasks and problems which confronted him. He did not pause to regret yesterday's lost opportunity or dream of to-morrow's mighty achievement. He did the homely duty of to-day. He was a type of Nebraska pioneers; one of that class who came and stayed; the class that inconvenience of frontier life did not fret, frowning nature did not frighten, pestilence did not dishearten, and poverty did not present itself as tarrying guest.

He had faith in the golden West, but he looked not for metal in Pikes Peak slope or California gulch. He looked to his steps and saw beneath his feet more gold in the rich and fecund soil of Nebraska plains than all the Rocky Mountain yield or added coasts' production or yet the product of the Klondike or South Africa's golden store. In this he saw not wealth in lucky strike or deep and devious vein. That, to be pursued, meant leaving the sunshine and pure air of heaven to dig and delve in darkened pit where nauseous gases are. He saw, in prospect, reasonable wealth to be had by stirring seasonably the rich surface, seeding with scientific purpose, cultivating with the art of an engineer, garnering with care and marketing like an economist. Good results and fair reward for him and those about him of his bent and energy followed, so that Mr. LATTA, in building up himself and fortune, drew his community measurably with him.

In the economy of sentiment and practice "neighbor" is a great word. From a neighborhood there can not be banished envy, jealousy, unwarranted grudge, or even hate. But the man who can overstep these, reduce each of them to a minimum, and command the respect, obtain the support of not only friend and ally, but those of different political faith or business affiliation, has not lived his life in vain. That man has achieved one of earth's sweetest, if not most commanding, distinctions.

JAMES P. LATTA was a neighborhood man. His business associates depended on his ripened judgment. His competitors respected his methods and admired his ability. His fellow citizens, overlooking party ties, supported most liberally his political aspirations. His church valued highly his attendance and support, his lodge esteemed his fraternal support, and his family saw in him the qualities of which devoted husband and worthy father are composed.

I had met him casually in Nebraska and found him friendly and courteous. When I first came to Washington, we talked about many practical matters touching a new Congressman's work. Of these he seemed to have a special grasp and freely communicated many helpful suggestions. As I saw more of him I learned more of why he stood so well at home. His bent of mind and corresponding course of action followed practical lines. He talked with a calm and modest pride of his district, its people, and its resources. I assume that, thinking of these, talking of these, and acting concerning these, in his everyday intercourse and relation with his neighbors, inspired a confidence in his honesty and rectitude, which, after all, goes a long way to supplant ultrapartisanship. So it was, whenever he appealed to the people of his county their response was generous and whole-hearted.

Our friend LATTA has answered the question of his being—"whither?" We do not know what message he would return if the question of time should be submitted to him in regions eternal. We are taught the equality of action and reaction, and the unerring relation of cause and effect. Every lesson of well-founded faith indicates the life to come to be a realization of the feeble suggestions read in the acts of this life. If doing well the tasks of earth is warrant for fitting compensation when time shall cease, then Congressman LATTA is enjoying his reward.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, we meet to-day to pay tribute to the memory of our friend and colleague, the Hon. JAMES P. LATTA.

For over 30 years it was my great privilege to know, personally, Congressman LATTA, and from the first day I became acquainted with him I realized I was in the presence of a manly man, a strong, noble character, whose word was as good as the safest bond and who commanded, by his daily life, the respect and confidence of his neighbors in every avenue of life's activity.

During life he was actively engaged in the banking business, also attending to and supervising his farms near Tekamah. Being a keen observer of events, with great foresight, he acquired much land near his home, which has since become very valuable. His great success in life in all his undertakings may be attributed to the uprightness and honesty which he displayed in all his dealings with his fellow man, observing in his daily practice the golden rule—doing unto others as he would be done by.

Congressman LATTA was a strong man of the common people. His ability to use common sense, his knowledge of men, and his foresightedness were keen and his judgment clear on all matters that confronted him. These characteristics made him a giant among all men, and his opinion and judgment were eagerly sought and accepted as coming from one clothed with authority.

In his dealings with the pioneer settlers of northeastern Nebraska he was kind and fair; he knew their struggles in developing that new country; he held out to them a helping hand; and many well-to-do, aye, even wealthy, farmers in his region owe a large measure of their success to the kindness of JAMES P. LATTA. No better corroboration of this statement can be made than the high respect in which he was held by these pioneer settlers. They showed their devotion for him throughout his political career. No office in his State, had he desired it, would they have withheld. They gave further evidence of their love and respect for him when, with the great men of their State, they gathered from near and far to pay their last loving tribute in accompanying his remains to their last resting place.

I met him first when I was a commercial traveler. Often, and on nearly every trip, it was a pleasure to me to go into his bank and visit him. He was so strong, yet so kind and cheerful, that when I left him the world seemed brighter for having met him. The greatest inspiration to our fellow men is to scatter sunshine as we pass by with a happy smile, a cheerful word, kindly advice, and by lending a helping hand. This was one of his strong characteristics. The Master, the gentle Nazarene, understood kindness, taught it, and it has ever been so and will be until the end of time.

I knew Congressman LATTA in public life as a member of the law-making bodies of the State of Nebraska. He commanded, while serving in this capacity, the respect of his fellow legislators and his opinion was eagerly sought by his colleagues and his votes always cast on the basis of equal justice to all. It was my pleasure to campaign in his district at his first election to Congress. Everywhere I went the pioneers knew "JIM LATTA," and everyone loved and respected him. When, later, my people honored me by electing me a Member of this Congress, among the first to congratulate me was JAMES P. LATTA.

Upon coming here, he personally gave me the benefit of his experience; to me he was as a brother—nay, more, a wise counselor—and was so kind in helping me in every way that I at once felt at home in my new work and new associations.

When his illness came he could not understand it. To me it seemed so strange to see this strong, rugged man feel weary; but it was the final call. When he left for his home to rest, as he hoped for, we waited for good news. Every day the Members would ask me, "How is Mr. LATTA?" They knew him, respected, and loved him. We hoped and wished for a speedy recovery and watched for news from the sick room until one day, the news flashed over the wires, "JAMES P. LATTA is no more."

It was my sad privilege to attend the funeral of my friend. A great concourse of neighbors were present to pay final tribute, thus showing the esteem in which he was held. Gentle hands laid him away on a great hill overlooking to the east the State of Iowa, to the north and south the great Missouri River, and to the west the beautiful farms of Nebraska.

JAMES P. LATTA loved his country, his flag, and the Nation. He loved, too, his adopted State of Nebraska. He had known the State for nearly a lifetime. He and his beloved companion knew by experience the struggles of the pioneer. He had seen his great State grow. He had helped develop it to become one of the greatest agricultural lands, and it was fitting that at the close of his busy life he should be laid away along the banks of the great Missouri, overlooking the fairest of lands, the States he loved best.

No language or words of mine could do justice to the strong character and upright manhood of JAMES P. LATTA. His daily life is his best eulogy. In his passing away his city, his State, and the Nation lost a noble, true-hearted, and upright citizen.

To me it was a personal loss. He was my counselor and my friend, and I accord it a high privilege to pay tribute to his memory here to-day.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, a number of the Members of the House who desired to speak to-day are necessarily absent, and I ask unanimous consent that those who wish to do so may have the privilege for five days of extending remarks in the RECORD upon the life, character, and services of the late Hon. JAMES P. LATTA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LOBECK). The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent that Members wishing to extend their remarks may have that privilege. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

In accordance with the resolution previously agreed to, and as a further mark of respect to the memory of Mr. LATTA, the House (at 2 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, May 27, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 27, 1912.

Prayer by Rev. John J. Van Schaick, of the city of Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. SIMMONS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SHOE AND LEATHER TRADE IN THE UNITED KINGDOM (S. DOC. NO. 719).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of Commercial Agent Arthur B. Butman containing the result of his investigations of the shoe and leather trade in the United Kingdom, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16661) to reliquish, release, remise, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all the lands held under claim or color of title by individuals or private ownership or municipal ownership situated in the State of Alabama, which were reserved, retained, or set apart to or for the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians under or by virtue of the treaty entered into between the United States of America and the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians on March 24, 1832.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution:

S. 5930. An act to extend the time for the completion of dams across the Savannah River by authority granted Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908;

H. R. 14083. An act to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17029. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convert the regimental Army post at Fort Oglethorpe into a brigade post;

H. R. 20586. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. J. Res. 142. Joint resolution to declare and make certain the authority of the Attorney General to begin and maintain and of any court of competent jurisdiction to entertain and decide a suit or suits for the purpose of having judicially declared a forfeiture of the rights granted by the act entitled "An act granting the Washington Improvement & Development Co. a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington," approved June 4, 1898.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 4.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Senate of the First Legislature of the State of Arizona, the House of Representatives concurring therein, respectfully represent:

Whereas by section 24 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," the Congress of the United States granted to the State of Arizona sections 2 and 32 of every township in said State, in addition to sections 16 and 36, for the support of the common schools of Arizona; and

Whereas said act of Congress further provides that where sections 2, 16, 32, and 36, or any part thereof, are mineral, or have been sold, reserved, or otherwise appropriated, or reserved by or under the authority of any act of Congress, or are wanting or fractional in quantity, or where settlement thereon with a view to preemption or homestead, or improvement thereof, with a view to desert-land entry, has been made heretofore or hereafter, and before the survey thereof in the field, the provisions of sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, are made applicable; and

Whereas said act of Congress further provides that the grants of sections 2, 16, 32, and 36 to said State within national forests now existing or proclaimed, shall not vest the title to said sections in said State until the part of said national forests embracing any of said sections is restored to the public domain; and

Whereas the operation of the grant in said act of Congress to the State of Arizona is, through local conditions, existing in the State of Arizona, bereft of most of its practical value to the State, and the potential value of said grant to the State indefinitely postponed; and

Whereas it is necessary to the welfare of the State of Arizona and to the proper maintenance of its common-school system that the benefits of said grants to the State be immediately secured:

Therefore your memorialists respectfully pray, That the said grants to the State of Arizona contained in said act of Congress, and as circumscribed by said sections 2275 and 2276, be augmented by further legislation by your bodies authorizing the said State of Arizona to make its lieu selection from any lands of the public domain of the United States whatsoever, including lands reserved for national forests now existing or proclaimed under such terms as may be provided, and that the title thereto, when so selected, immediately vest in the State of Arizona; also to immediately vest title in the State of Arizona to said sections 2, 16, 32, and 36 within the national forests now existing or proclaimed; now, be it further

Resolved, That the presiding officers of each house of the Legislature of the State of Arizona are hereby directed to forward to the President of the United States, the presiding officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the United States Senators, and the Representatives in Congress for Arizona a copy of this memorial.

May 2, 1912, passed the senate by vote of 19 ayes, 0 noes.

M. G. CUNNIFF,
President of the Senate.

May 16, 1912, passed the house by vote of 25 ayes, 9 noes, 1 absent.

SAM B. BRADNER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 5.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Senate of the First Legislature of the State of Arizona, the House of Representatives concurring therein, respectfully represent:

Whereas the homesteaders in Arizona who occupy that portion of the State known as the dry-farming sections have found themselves at great disadvantage in trying to make a living upon their homesteads for the first few years of settlement, unless they absent themselves from such homesteads for a considerable portion of the time and find employment elsewhere; and

Whereas United States Senate bill 3367, entitled "An act to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to homesteads," which passed the Senate of the United States on February 5, 1912, is now before the House of Representatives for the consideration of that body; and

Whereas the above-mentioned act provides for final proof with three years' residence and permits absence from the homestead for six months out of the year; and

Whereas such law would result in great benefit to the homesteaders of the State of Arizona by making the acquiring of homesteads here more practical and thus encouraging the immigration of home builders: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the First Legislature of the State of Arizona respectfully requests the passage of the above-mentioned act, now pending in Congress; now be it further

Resolved, That the presiding officers of each house of the Legislature of the State of Arizona are hereby directed to forward to the President of the United States and the presiding officers of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to the United States Senators and the Representative in Congress for Arizona a copy of this memorial.

May 3, 1912, passed senate by vote of 19 ayes, 0 noes.

M. G. CUNNIFF,
President of the Senate.

May 16, 1912, passed the house by vote of 34 ayes, 1 no.

SAM B. BRADNER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 6.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Senate of the first State Legislature of Arizona, the House of Representatives concurring therein, most respectfully represent:

Whereas on the 22d day of June, 1907, the Reclamation Service, on the part of the United States Government, entered into a certain contract with the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., a corporation having its principal place of business in Phoenix, Ariz., which said contract related to the sale of electric power to be generated in the future by the Roosevelt reclamation project, in the Territory of Arizona, now the State of Arizona, and which said contract sold to said Pacific Gas & Electric Co. all of the electric power generated by said project to be used in the city of Phoenix, Territory of Arizona, now State of Arizona under the following terms contained in article 2 of said contract, to wit:

"ART. 2. The party of the first part (the Government) further agrees while serving to the party of the second part (Pacific Gas & Electric Co.) under the terms of this contract, to refrain from entering into a general retailing of power to customers in the city of Phoenix, Ariz., or from furnishing power to anyone to be sold again or retailed. It is agreed, however, that the party of the first part shall have the right to sell or lease power in the city of Phoenix at any time in blocks of 100 to 500 kilowats and over to anyone to be used in manufacturing industries, waterworks, or pumping plants"; and

Whereas said clause in said contract creates a monopoly and a trust in favor of said Pacific Gas & Electric Co., in said city of Phoenix, relieving it from competition and allowing it to charge consumers in the city of Phoenix charges for electric power controlled and governed only by its desire and conscience; and

Whereas the Twenty-fifth Territorial Legislature of the Territory of Arizona, in session in January and February, 1909, petitioned Congress to call upon the Secretary of the Interior to investigate said contract, to the end that, if found illegal, action be taken to annul same, and the civic organizations of the city of Phoenix, its mayor, and council protested to the Secretary of the Interior against said monopolistic contract, all without avail; and

Whereas a committee, appointed by the house of representatives, is now making a general investigation of the Roosevelt reclamation project, the records of which will be available to determine certain facts as to said contract: Therefore be it

Resolved by the First Legislature of the State of Arizona, That we earnestly and respectfully petition and request the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled, to call upon the Attorney General of the United States to procure said contract and all correspondence and papers relating thereto and to investigate said contract, and if upon investigation it appears that said contract is unjust, illegal, and creative of monopoly, the proper proceedings be brought to obtain abrogation and annulment of the same, at least to the extent of abrogating such portion of said article 2 as grants to said Pacific Gas & Electric Co. an exclusive monopoly; and now be it further

Resolved, That the presiding officers of each house of the Legislature of the State of Arizona are hereby directed to forward to the President of the United States and the presiding officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to the United States Senators and the Representatives in Congress for Arizona a copy of this memorial.

Adopted by the senate by vote of 18 ayes, 1 excused.

M. G. CUNNIFF,
President of the Senate.

May 16, 1912, passed the house by vote of 32 ayes, 1 no, 2 absent.

SAM B. BRADNER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Dadeville, Ala., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Luke's Church, of Charlestown, N. H., and a petition of the Exeter Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary of the State of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide medical and sanitary relief for the natives of Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of Arizona, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled.

Your memorialists, the First Legislature of the State of Arizona, in session convened, respectfully represent:

Whereas by an act of Congress of the United States passed March 3, 1865, certain lands lying along the east side of the Colorado River, in Yuma County, Ariz., now known as the Colorado River Indian Reservation, were set apart for Indian purposes; and

Whereas by Executive orders dated November 22, 1873, November 16, 1874, and May 15, 1876, the boundaries of said Indian reservation were described as follows, to wit:

Beginning at a point where La Paz Arroyo enters the Colorado River, about 4 miles above Ehrenburg, Ariz.; thence easterly, following the course of said arroyo, to a point south of the crest of La Paz Mountain; thence following the crest of said mountain in a northerly direction to the top of Black Mountain; thence in a northwesterly direction over the Colorado River to the top of Monument Peak, in the State of California; thence southwesterly in a straight line to the top of Riverside Mountain, in California; thence in a direct line toward the place of beginning to the west bank of the Colorado River; thence down said west bank to a point opposite the place of beginning; thence to the place of beginning; and

Whereas the description as given in said Executive orders is ambiguous and uncertain, in that there is much dispute as to which mountain peak is meant by La Paz Mountain, as well as the crest of that mountain to be followed in a northerly direction; and

Whereas the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington, D. C., has recently had surveyed the lands embraced within said Indian reservation as per Executive orders as above set forth, and the southeast corner of said reservation has been established on a certain mountain peak purporting to be the particular mountain described in said Executive orders as La Paz Mountain, and a line run from said point to a certain mountain called Black Mountain; and

Whereas the line so run has established the south and east lines of said reservation; and

Whereas the said survey as now established will include within the said reservation a large amount of mineral land, including mines and mining claims that have been owned and worked by citizens of Arizona since 1861; and

Whereas owing to the uncertainty during the past 35 years of the exact location of the boundary lines of said reservation, many prospectors have located, worked, or sold their mining claims to innocent purchasers, who have in turn expended large amounts of money in development work, erecting costly hoisting works, building roads, and otherwise building up this section of the country; and

Whereas the citizens of that community firmly believe that it was the intention of the Congress of the United States, in setting apart the lands embraced within the Colorado River Indian Reservation, to include within its boundaries only such lands as could be used for agricultural purposes, and did not intend to include mineral land; and

Whereas the only land within said reservation which can be used for agricultural purposes, grazing, or timber lands lies in the valley along the eastern side of the Colorado River; and

Whereas that portion of the land now taken in by recent survey, as set forth above, which lies on the mesas or the mountain east of the valley, does not contain one single acre of tillable land, contains no timber nor pasture, hence is of no value whatever, except for the mineral contained in the gravel on the mesas or in the veins of ore in the mountains: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Arizona, That we call upon the Congress of the United States to enact such law as may be necessary to furnish relief to owners of mines and mining claims located and worked prior to the recent survey as above set forth, lying within the boundary lines of the said Colorado River Indian Reservation, to the end that title to said mineral lands be confirmed to their present owners or their assigns; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to our Representatives in Congress, the Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH, the Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, and the Hon. CARL F. HAYDEN, and that they be requested to do all in their power to bring about the passage of an act that will afford the relief as above prayed for.

May 13, 1912, passed the house by vote of 33 ayes, 1 no, 1 absent.

SAM B. BRADNER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

May 17, 1912, passed the senate by vote of majority.

M. G. CUNIFF,
President of the Senate.

We, B. F. Thum, chief clerk of the House of Representatives, and J. W. McCollum, secretary of the Senate of the Legislature, of the State of Arizona now in session, do hereby severally certify to the above and foregoing as a full, true, and correct copy of house joint memorial No. 4, and the whole thereof, as adopted by the legislature of the said State of Arizona.

Witness our hands this 16th day of May, 1912.

B. F. THUM,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.
J. W. MCCULLUM,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of Arizona, praying that the grants of public lands heretofore made by the United States to the State of Arizona be augmented by further legislation authorizing the State of Arizona to make its lieu selection from any lands of the public domain, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. (See p. 7200.)

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of Arizona, praying for the adoption of an amendment to sections 2291 and 2297 of the Revised Statutes providing for final proof with three years' residence on homesteads, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. (See p. 7200.)

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a joint memorial adopted by the Legislature of Arizona, praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the abrogation of certain clauses in a contract entered into between the United States and the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., of Phoenix, Ariz., which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. (See first column of this page.)

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Graham County, Ariz., favoring an appropriation of $1,000,000 for building levees on the Gila River to prevent the further destruction of farms, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bisbee, Ariz., praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. DILLINGHAM presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Lyndonville, Vt., remonstrating against the establishment of a department of public health, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to maintain the present water rates in the District, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a memorial of members of the Connecticut Civil Service Reform Association, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing a five-year tenure of office for civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented an affidavit in support of the bill (S. 6274) for the relief of Edward W. Whitaker, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of Local Lodge No. 21, Order B'rith Abraham, of New Haven, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WATSON presented resolutions adopted by the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States at Wheeling, W. Va., favoring the enactment of legislation permitting the inscription of any insignia or emblems of that order upon monuments, tombstones, etc., in the national cemeteries of the country, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Potomac Chapter, No. 132, American Insurance Union, of Piedmont, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation granting the privilege of inserting advertisements in the official journals of fraternal associations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of Tampa, Fla., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by Board of Trade of Tampa, Fla.

Whereas the continuance of the work of promoting economy and efficiency in the administration of the Federal Government, begun by a staff of experts appointed by the President of the United States under act of Congress, depends in no small measure upon an appropriation of $200,000 asked for by the present Congress; and

Whereas the important economics already effected and others made possible by this expert commission are in direct line with that policy of retrenchment so strongly advocated by both the President and the Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Board of Trade of the city of Tampa, Fla., in session Wednesday, May 22, 1912, urges upon Congress the appropriation of $200,000 required to continue this efficiency commission and directs that this preamble and resolution be communicated to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House and that other important commercial organizations throughout the country be requested to take similar action.

[SEAL.] F. C. BOWYER, President.

Attest:

W. B. POWELL, Secretary.

Mr. BRISTOW presented petitions of sundry citizens of McPherson, Augusta, and Topeka, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Milan and Argonia, in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called old-age pension bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CURTIS presented petitions of sundry citizens of Stafford and Sterling, in the State of Kansas, praying for the establishment of a department of public health, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4693) for the relief of R. W. Branson, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 799) thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN. I present the views of the minority (Rept. No. 770, Pt. II) on the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which I ask may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROOT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 98) fixing the number of presidential electors, and for other purposes, submitted an adverse report (No. 800) thereon, which was agreed to, and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SIMMONS. On behalf of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], who prepared the report, I submit the views of the minority (Rept. No. 765, Pt. II) on the bill (H. R. 21214) to extend the special excise tax now levied with respect to doing business by corporations, to persons, and to provide revenue for the Government by levying a special excise tax with respect to doing business by individuals and copartnerships, which I ask may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received and printed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 18017) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States," reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 802) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14925) to amend "An act to parole United States prisoners, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1901, reported it without amendment.

Mr. OLIVER. The joint commission appointed with reference to the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg has prepared a bill and has requested me to present it. I therefore introduce the bill and ask that it lie on the table.

The bill (S. 6964) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to make certain provisions for the care of the participants in the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, at Gettysburg, Pa., on the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th days of July, 1913, and making appropriation of a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this bill was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table.

URGENCY DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 319) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1912, and for other purposes, I report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 801) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. It is short and involves a very small amount of money.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution which was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment, on page 1, after line 6, to insert:

SENATE.

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, to continue available during the fiscal year 1913, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Senate and House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1912, and for other purposes."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURNHAM:

A bill (S. 6956) granting a pension to John C. Hardy; and

A bill (S. 6957) granting an increase of pension to James F. Wyman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HEYBURN:

A bill (S. 6958) granting an increase of pension to E. Alice Camp; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 6959) providing for the honorable discharge of George W. Tribett (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 6960) granting an increase of pension to Jane Lutz (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 6961) granting a pension to Annie Walker Burch; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE:

A bill (S. 6962) for the relief of the heirs of Zimri A. Carter, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BACON:

A bill (S. 6963) to pay to the heirs of Lieut. Col. John McIntosh, late of McIntosh County, Ga., certain moneys due for his services in the War of the American Revolution; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment relative to one clerk at $2,000 in the Nautical Almanac Office who may also act as or be appointed director of that office, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 24023), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the assistant clerk to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine from $1,440 per annum to $1,800 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 24023), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. STONE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. POMERENE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE IN COLORADO (S. DOC. NO. 722).

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I send to the desk a speech delivered by Congressman EDWARD T. TAYLOR, of Colorado, in the House of Representatives April 26, 1912, on the subject of equal suffrage in Colorado. I ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

LIMITATIONS OF FEDERAL CONTROL OF WATER POWERS (S. DOC. NO. 721).

Mr. ROOT. I ask to have printed as a document an argument on the limitations of Federal control of water powers, made before the National Waterways Commission by Mr. Rome G. Brown, of Minneapolis, Minn. There is a great deal of useful material in it, and I think it will be of very great use to the Senate in its deliberations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was the request of the Senator from New York? I did not catch it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from New York restate his request for the benefit of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. ROOT. The discussion is a presentation of the law relating to Federal control of water powers, and is a very illuminative and instructive discussion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. By whom was it compiled?

Mr. ROOT. By Mr. Rome G. Brown, of Minneapolis.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, is it asked that it be printed as a Senate document?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

RECALL OF JUDGES (S. DOC. NO. 723).

Mr. NELSON. I ask to have printed as a Senate document an article on the recall of judges by John H. Hazelton, a member of the New York bar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

ST. LOUIS SOUTHWESTERN RAILWAY BRIDGES IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill (S. 6479) to authorize the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. to repair, alter, or rebuild certain bridges in the State of Arkansas.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, line 12, after the word "repealed," to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed as legalizing the construction nor as authorizing the reconstruction of the bridge across Saline River as it now exists, but in rebuilding said bridge such changes shall be made therein as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may deem necessary and order in the interest of navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DU PONT. I submit a conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the conference report.

Mr. CURTIS. Is consideration asked for the measure at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is being read, and the question whether it shall be considered will be put after the report is read.

Mr. SMOOT. I would not like to give consent to its consideration at this time. I should like to have it go over and lie on the table.

Mr. CURTIS. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be printed in the RECORD, so that we may understand what it is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the conference report will go over and it will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 13, 15, 16, 21, 22, 29, 30, 32, 38, 41, 58, 61, 63, 64, 65, 75, and 76.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 14, 18, 19, 20, 24, 25, 26, 34, 36, 39, 44, 47, 49, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 60, and 70, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: : Provided, That hereafter in time of peace whenever any officer holding a permanent commission with rank below that of lieutenant colonel shall not have been actually present for at least two of the last preceding six years in that branch of the Army in which he shall hold said commission and with the organization, if any, to which he shall have been assigned by competent authority, such officer shall not be detached nor permitted to remain detached from said branch or from said organization; and all pay and allowances shall be forfeited by any superior officer for any period during which, by his order, or with his permission, or by reason of his failure or neglect to issue or cause to be issued the proper order or instructions at the proper time, any other officer shall be detached or permitted to remain detached in violation of any of the terms of this proviso: Provided further, That nothing in the foregoing proviso shall be held to apply in the case of any officer for such period as shall be actually necessary for him, after having been relieved from detached service, to join that branch in which he shall hold a permanent commission and the organization, if any, to which he shall be assigned by competent authority, nor shall it be held to apply in the case of any officer absent temporarily on courts-martial or military boards, or upon leaves of absence authorized by existing law: And provided further, That hereafter details to the Ordnance Department may continue to be made as authorized by existing law, and, in the discretion of the President, those details, or any of them, now existing to the Philippine Constabulary need not be terminated until the 1st day of January, 1913."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment, after the word "enlist," insert the following: ": And provided further, That nothing in this provision shall be so construed as to forfeit credit for double time already accrued"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following:

"Equipment of Coast Artillery, armories, Organized Militia: There is hereby made available, and the same shall remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1913, the unexpended balances of any appropriations heretofore made for dummy guns and mortars; mounts for dummy guns and mortars; dummy ammunition; loading appliances; range and position finding equipment; aiming and laying devices; subcaliber tubes and mountings therefor; labor and material necessary to install dummy guns and mortars; and to provide appliances and devices for instructional purposes in armory buildings provided by States for Coast Artillery companies of the Organized Militia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and in lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That a commission to consist of Lieut. Gens. Samuel B. M. Young and Arthur MacArthur, retired, and Maj. Gens. George M. Randall, Jesse M. Lee, and Charles F. Humphrey, retired, and two members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, who shall be designated by the President of the Senate, and two members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, who shall be designated by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is hereby created to consider and report to the Senate and House of Representatives on or before the 1st day of January, 1913, upon the location and distribution of military posts which are required within the continental limits of the United States for the proper accommodation, instruction, and training of the Army, but not including Coast Artillery posts and troops. The commission shall make recommendations, giving reasons in detail therefor, as to which of the existing posts shall be retained or abandoned, and of those recommended to be retained which, if any, shall be enlarged, and to what extent. In all of its recommendations the commission shall have due regard for the proper distribution of the different arms of the service as determined by strategic, sanitary, and economical considerations, and by the relations which should be maintained by the Regular Army with the Organized Militia and the public at large, and taking into consideration the number of troops which may be stationed in Hawaii and the Canal Zone. The commission shall meet upon the call of the chairman, who shall be the senior lieutenant general on the commission, at the earliest practicable date, and proceed to the execution of the work of the commission in such manner as the commission may determine. Prior to the rendition of the report hereinbefore required it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to authorize the commencement of no new posts within the continental limits of the United States and to preserve and maintain in the same manner as at the time of the passage of this act all posts now in existence which are liable to enlargement or retention, according to the terms of this act. Actual and necessary expenses of the commission shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively and equally."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That not exceeding $1,000 of the sum herein appropriated, together with the unexpended balance, which is hereby reappropriated, of the appropriation in the Army appropriation act approved March 3, 1911, for the improvement of the Crow Creek or Fort D. A. Russell Target and Maneuver Reservation, Wyo., may be expended by the Secretary of War, in his discretion, in the acquirement by purchase or condemnation proceedings of certain tracts of land required for the maneuvering of troops and other military purposes lying within the limits of the aforesaid reservation"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amount proposed in said amendment insert "five hundred"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 2. That hereafter all enlistments in the Army shall be made for the term of four years, and for all enlistments hereafter accomplished four years shall be counted as an enlistment period in computing continuous-service pay."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Change the numerical designation of section 4 so as to read "Sec. 3," and restore the matter proposed to be stricken out by this amendment, with amendments as follows: After the word "rank," in line 30 of the amendment, strike out the period and the word "so" and insert ": Provided, That when a permanent officer is promoted he shall take the relative rank of the officers in the grade to which he is promoted which he held as indicated in the relative rank of the Army on the Army Register of 1912: Provided further, That so"; and after the word "occurred," in line 37, strike out the period and the word "the" and insert ": Provided further, That on and after the 1st day of January, 1917, any vacancies occurring among officers of the Quartermaster Corps with rank above that of colonel may, in the discretion of the President, be filled by selection from among officers who shall have served by detail in said corps for not less than four years: Provided further, That the"; and after the word "Provided," in line 44, strike out the comma and the word "That" and insert "further, That no details to fill vacancies in the grade of colonel in the Quartermaster Corps shall be made until the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by 3, and thereafter the number of officers in that grade shall not exceed 12; and no details to fill vacancies in the grade of lieutenant colonel in the Quartermaster Corps shall be made until the number of officers of that grade shall have been reduced by 3, and thereafter the number of officers in that grade shall not exceed 18; and"; in line 48, strike out the word "forty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty-eight"; in line 52, after the words "one hundred," insert "and two"; in line 68, after the word "perform," insert ", but such regimental, battalion, and squadron quartermasters and commissaries shall not be required to receipt for any money or property which does not pertain to their respective regiments, battalions, or squadrons, and they shall not be separated from the organizations to which they belong"; in line 75, after the words "major general," insert "during the service as such of the first incumbent of the office, and thereafter the rank of brigadier general"; in line 81, after the word "first," strike out the word "vacancy" and insert "two vacancies"; in line 84, after the word "occur," strike out the words "that vacancy" and insert "those vacancies"; in line 85, after the word "the," strike out the words "vacancy occurs" and insert "vacancies occur"; and at the end of the amendment, after the word "law," in line 90, insert ": Provided further, That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this section the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the major general herein provided for immediately upon the passage of this act, and it shall be the duty of the said major general, under direction of the President and the Secretary of War, to put into effect the provisions of this section not less than 60 days after the passage of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 73: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 73, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed in said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 5. That hereafter, except in time of war or when war is imminent, no officer who shall have served four years as Chief of Staff shall be eligible for further service as Chief of Staff until after he shall have served for at least two years with the line of the Army; neither shall any officer, after the 5th day of March, 1913, be detailed, nor be permitted to serve, as Chief of Staff unless he shall have served at least 10 years as a commissioned officer of the line of the Army in grades below that of brigadier general, and the General Staff Corps shall hereafter consist of 2 general officers, one of whom shall be Chief of Staff, 3 colonels, 4 lieutenant colonels, 8 majors, and 10 captains or first lieutenants, all of whom shall be detailed from the Army at large in the manner and for the periods provided by law, and hereafter details to the General Staff Corps, excepting the two general officers, shall be subject to the provisions of section 27 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States." All officers of the line of the Army now detailed for service in any staff corps, or department, or in the General Staff Corps, shall be relieved from duty in said corps at the expiration of their present periods of detail, or sooner if the President shall so direct, and all officers hereafter detailed for service in the staff corps, departments, and General Staff Corps shall be relieved therefrom at the expiration of four years of such service, or sooner if the President shall so direct, and no officer who shall have served for four years under detail in any staff corps, or department, or the General Staff Corps, shall be eligible for further service therein until after he shall have served at least two years with the branch of the Army in which commissioned, except in time of war or when war is imminent: Provided, That hereafter when any officer shall, under the provisions of section 26 of the act of Congress approved February 2, 1901, be appointed to an office with rank above that of colonel, his appointment to said office and his acceptance of the appointment shall create a vacancy in the arm, staff corps, or staff department, from which he shall be appointed, and said vacancy shall be filled in the manner prescribed by existing law, but he shall retain in said arm, staff corps, or staff department the same relative position that he would have held if he had not been appointed to said office, and he shall return to said relative position upon the expiration of his appointment to said office, unless he shall be reappointed thereto. If under the operation of this proviso the number of officers of any particular grade in any arm, staff corps, or staff department shall at any time exceed the number authorized by law, no vacancy occurring in said grade shall be filled until after the total number of officers therein shall have been reduced to the number authorized by law."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"SEC. 6. That hereafter the service of a cadet who may hereafter be appointed to the United States Military Academy or to the Naval Academy shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Army."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Renumber the two sections at the end of the bill, so as to read "Sec. 7" and "Sec. 8," instead of "Sec. 8" and "Sec. 9."

STATISTICS OF CORPORATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution No. 321, submitted by Mr. HITCHCOCK on the 25th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the Senate a compilation of the returns made by the corporations for internal-revenue purposes for the year 1911, so arranged as to show the following facts:

First. The total number of corporations engaged in the iron and steel industry; the total aggregate amount of their paid up capital stock outstanding; the total aggregate amount of their bonded and other indebtedness; the total aggregate amount of their gross income; the total aggregate amount of their ordinary necessary expenses of maintenance and operation, exclusive of interest; the total aggregate amount of their losses for the year not covered by insurance; the total aggregate amount of their depreciation for the year; the total aggregate amount of the interest paid by them on their indebtedness; the total aggregate amount of taxes paid during the year to the United States and to any State or Territory thereof; the total aggregate amount of foreign taxes paid; the total aggregate amount received by way of dividends upon stock of other corporations, joint-stock companies, and associations subject to Federal tax; the total aggregate amount of their net income.

Second. The same compilation of statistics of corporations engaged in other metal, manufacturing, and mining industries covered by Schedule C of the tariff act of August 5, 1909.

Third. The same compilation of statistics of corporations engaged in the woolen industry.

Fourth. The same compilation of statistics of corporations engaged in the cotton industry.

Fifth. The same compilation of statistics of corporations engaged in the sugar-refining industry, except beet sugar.

Sixth. The same compilation of statistics of corporations engaged in the beet-sugar industry.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, my reason for introducing this resolution is to procure exact information, even though it be from a prejudiced source, which shall show under oath the amount of capital invested in the particular industry asking this Congress to continue the high protective tariff which has been in force for a number of years and the amount of profit that industry has made.

Mr. President, here is rather a remarkable situation. We have an average tariff of something like 35 per cent, as I recall it, for the "protection," so called, of the iron and steel industry of the United States. Upon the Republican theory this tariff is for the purpose of enabling the iron and steel manufacturers of the United States to compete in the United States with the foreign iron and steel manufacturers who might be disposed to sell their products here. Yet the fact is that the iron and steel manufacturers of the United States to-day produce in the leading products of the iron and steel industry more than Great Britain produces, more than Germany produces, more than France produces, and more than all those great countries combined produce. Nevertheless, the representatives of the Republican Party in Congress, notwithstanding the gigantic size of that industry, have taken the position that it still must be coddled and protected and that at this Congress not a single schedule shall be reduced a single per cent.

Mr. President, when the bill passed the House of Representatives and was sent to the Senate I had hopes that there would be some one of the dominant party upon the Committee on Finance who would be willing to report some bill for the modification of this tariff. Instead of doing so, however, the Republican majority has contented itself with reporting against any revision of the iron and steel schedule. They have done this notwithstanding the fact that the American manufacturers now enjoy a practical monopoly of the iron and steel market in the United States, and on top of that the manufacturers can and do send to foreign countries $230,000,000 worth of iron and steel products every year.

In other words, the present tariff is sufficient not only to keep out anything but a small importation of iron and steel products from abroad, but the condition of the industry in the United States is such that our manufacturers were able last year to manufacture and sell $230,000,000 worth of their products in other countries in competition with the world. Any reasonable man might conclude from that that if they could sell those products in other countries in competition with the world they do not need the great protection provided by the present law.

I was a good deal interested in the statement made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] in attempting to take a fair position from the Republican standpoint and in attempting to show to his associates on the Republican side that even on the Republican theory the present tariff is excessive. The Senator from Iowa declared it as his opinion that this protected iron and steel industry is now exacting of the American people $100,000,000 more than it should charge for the products which it makes, and the Senator from Iowa makes that estimate upon the basis largely of his own investigation and also upon the basis of the annual statement of profits, as I understand it, made by the great Steel Trust.

I am glad the Senator from Iowa has been fair enough to make that statement. I believe, however, it is far too moderate. I believe that if the iron and steel business of the United States amounts, as has been stated, to three thousand million dollars a year it is not unreasonable to say that those manufacturers are charging the American people 10 per cent in excess of what they would charge without the tariff or should charge to make a fair profit even from the Republican standpoint; and 10 per cent on three thousand million dollars would be $300,000,000 a year exacted from the American people in excess of the prices which they should charge for their goods.

We know from the figures presented by the Steel Trust that it controls only about 60 per cent of the iron and steel business. We know that the net profits of that corporation for the past 10 years have been $789,000,000, and we know from the admission made by the Senator from Iowa that all the capital invested in that corporation 10 years ago was less than $700,000,000. In other words, during the last 10 years that single corporation, with an investment of less than $700,000,000 has taken nearly $800,000,000 of profits out of the business at the expense of the American people and has, besides its original investment, a surplus to-day of $344,000,000 accumulated out of profits.

Mr. President, I believe it would be within reason to say, and almost susceptible of proof by a careful examination of the profits of all classes of the privileged capital of the United States, that the exactions from the American people at this time of all the protected industries over and above a fair profit exceed a thousand million dollars a year. That is to say, that with the capital invested in these protected industries which are given a practical monopoly of the American market by the laws of the United States those corporations are exacting from the American people at least one thousand million dollars more than they should exact to secure a fair profit on their investments.

Now, what is the effect of these exactions, Mr. President? As we know, the first effect is the multiplying of millionaires in the country. During the last 25 years we have seen an era during which the number of millionaires has increased beyond the experience of the United States and beyond the experience of the whole world. We have seen our business come into a form of imperialism, and we have seen created such a disparity of wealth as the world has never known even in monarchical countries. The effect is not only to centralize the wealth in the hands of a comparatively few, but it is to intensify the struggle for existence among the industrial classes, and not only among the industrial classes, but among those who labor for fixed salaries, among those who have limited incomes, among the workers of the United States. In spite of the figures which were produced here by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] showing the growing wealth of the United States, it is easy to point to the statistics of recent years and show that there has been a constant tendency during the last quarter of a century to intensify the struggle for existence among those who must work to live.

We see this in many ways. We see it in the constant strikes. During the last 25 years in the United States there have been something like 36,756 strikes, 40 per cent of them by men who felt under the necessity to have higher wages. We have seen during that time over 6,000,000 of the workers of the United States participate in strikes. These strikes have been due, as we all know, to the constant increase in the cost of living, the constantly rising tide of necessary expenditures caused by excessive profits of privileged tariff-protected capital.

We have seen during that time another influence of tariff legislation; we have seen a premium put upon the industrial enterprises; we have seen a blight put upon the agricultural growth of the country. During the last 25 years, as we all know, there has been a great increase in the urban population. Every census shows a larger per cent of city population and a smaller per cent of agricultural or country population. Why is it? It is because the agriculture of the country has been taxed for the purpose of building up these industrial centers, and that constant burden upon agriculture and that premium upon city growth have been developed until we have seen the figures grow to astonishing proportions.

Let me put this in a nutshell. In 20 years the increase of population of the United States has been 30 per cent. New York increased 50 per cent, Pennsylvania 51 per cent, Massachusetts 50 per cent, Rhode Island 60 per cent, all of them manufacturing centers. The premium that has been put upon the manufacturing industries of the country, the inducement that was given to people to go into those industrial pursuits resulted in this enormous increase of those industrial States, those States where great industries are located.

How has it been in the agricultural States of the country? It is not so very many years ago that Horace Greeley said to the young men, "Go West and grow up with the country." Let me show you how the West has been growing. During the same period that the United States increased 30 per cent and the manufacturing States of the Union about 50 per cent in population, Iowa—the great agricultural State of Iowa—increased but 16 per cent; my own State, Nebraska, increased 12 per cent; Kansas increased 18 per cent. Those three representative agricultural States were practically stunted, practically blighted in their development because of the burden placed upon their chief occupation, agriculture, for the benefit of the manufacturing industries of the East.

Mr. President, we might not complain if the benefits of that industrial development came to all alike; but we all know that that is not so. We all know that in those industries in the East, privileged by law under the so-called protective tariff, the effect has been to yield enormous dividends to the invested capital, and on top of that, enormous dividends on pretended capital that was not invested. The captains of industry have not stopped at claiming a return upon the money that they invested, but they have resorted to absolute fraud, to a confidence game upon the American people, by watering their stock and by insisting on paying enormous dividends upon stock that cost them not a penny.

So, Mr. President, I have introduced this resolution for the purpose of securing from the President of the United States a statement of what these iron and steel industries claim to be their invested capital and what they admit their profits were last year, as shown by their tax reports. Before the resolution is put to a vote, I shall ask to modify it so as to also include the year 1910. I do this because the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] has called attention to the fact, by the newspaper clipping which he published in the RECORD, that the year 1911 was a far less prosperous year for the iron and steel manufacturers of the country than the year 1910, and, for that reason, was probably not an average showing of the profits of those concerns.

But right here, Mr. President, let me call the attention of my Republican friends to this fact, which is shown by the clipping which the Senator from Pennsylvania has put into the RECORD. It shows the utter folly of the Republican attempt to measure the protective tariff by the difference between the cost of manufacturing in this country and abroad, including also a margin of profit. The last Republican platform declared that the proper principle of protection should be to have a tariff high enough to compensate the American manufacturers for the difference between the cost of manufacture in this country and in other countries and to also guarantee them a reasonable profit. It so happens that the clipping which the Senator from Pennsylvania has put into the RECORD reveals the utter impossibility of fixing the cost in the United States, because it shows such a variation between the cost of manufacturing iron and steel products in various American plants. For instance, his statement shows that the Bethlehem Steel Co. made a profit of $3.40 a ton; it shows that the Cambria Steel Co. during the same year made a profit of $3.50 a ton; that the Lackawanna Steel Co. made a profit of 11 cents a ton; that the United States Steel Co. made a profit of $5.82 a ton; and that the Pennsylvania Steel Co. made a profit of $1.38 a ton. How shall the tariff be adjusted? Shall it be adjusted so as to enable the Lackawanna Steel Co. to make what it calls a fair profit, or shall it be adjusted so as to enable the United States Steel Co. to make a fair profit? They are far apart, and the figures themselves afford a convincing proof that to fix the American tariff for the purpose of guaranteeing to all manufacturers of a certain product a fair profit is practically impossible.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska is assuming that the profits of the United States Steel Corporation are the ordinary manufacturing profits of the steel business. He must bear in mind that the profits of the United States Steel Corporation are the accumulation of a great number of profits, embracing not only several kinds of manufacturing profits, several steps in the way of manufacturing profits, but also the profits of transportation lines and the profits of merchandising, which do not ordinarily come under the head of manufacturing profits. The United States Steel Corporation is a jobber, as well as a manufacturer; and where the ordinary steel manufacturer producing merchant wares sells to the jobbing merchant, the United States Steel Corporation gets down closer to the consumer, and thereby acquires the jobbing profit as well. Some, at least, of the other large corporations mentioned in the list to which the Senator has referred are simply manufacturers. They do not embrace as many manufacturing profits as the United States Steel Corporation; their list of profits does not include any transportation profits, and practically no merchandising profits.

While I am on the floor, Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska what he would consider a fair return upon the actual capital invested for a corporation engaged in a business which involves the various risks that steel manufacturing involves? I would merely like to get his ideas on that proposition.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the powerful Government of the United States under the control of the dominant party proposes to guarantee profits, those guaranteed profits should be no larger than any guaranteed bond or any guaranteed stock, and the Senator from Pennsylvania well knows that such profits would not exceed 5, 6, or 7 per cent. But what I charge upon the companies for whom the Senator speaks is this, that they have been compelled——

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I want the Senator to understand that I speak for no corporation, and I do not want him to place me in the position of being an advocate on the floor of the Senate of any corporation. I am speaking for the working people of the United States, to whom accrues the benefit of the protective tariff, and not as the advocate of any corporation or any set of corporations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will change the statement and say, then, that I charge that the corporations, in whose interest the protective tariff has been framed and for whose benefit it has been maintained, and who by campaign contributions have supported the party which has kept it for them—I charge that those corporations have not only attempted to earn dividends upon the real capital invested, but that they have injected a great amount of fraudulent capital and have been attempting to pay dividends upon that fraudulent capital, which had no existence whatever, but on which they have continued to pay dividends at the expense of the American people by charging exorbitant prices for their goods.

Mr. President, I repudiate the idea that the tariff as maintained has been for the benefit of the laboring classes. I charge that the protected industries pay lower wages to their employees than do the unprotected industries of the United States; I charge that there have been more strikes in the protected industries than there have been in the other industries of the United States; I charge that the protected industries, particularly the iron and steel industry, have been particularly outrageous in the extent to which they have oppressed their employees. The Steel Trust, whose great business is in the State represented by the Senator from Pennsylvania, has been convicted of working 50,000 of its men excessive hours; it has been convicted of working those men 12 hours a day and 7 days a week until the public has been outraged. That great trust has been convicted of having crushed out labor organizations in order that it might grind the individual laborer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says that there have been more strikes in the protected industries in the United States than in others. Have there been any more serious strikes in the United States than in Great Britain, a free-trade country?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Most of the strikes in Great Britain have been in the transportation companies in recent years.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the fact is that in the industries of Great Britain labor is allowed to organize and that the strikes which have been called there have been called by organized labor, while the strikes in this country in the protected industries have, as a rule, been forced by exactions on unorganized employees. I call the Senator's attention to the strike two years ago in the great Bethlehem steel plant, where some 9,000 men were employed. What was the cause of that strike? It was due to the fact that the company was forcing the men to work on Sundays; forcing them to work 12 hours a day; driving them like slaves, and prohibiting them from having organizations for their own protection. In England men in the big industries work 54 hours a week, which is far below the average in America.

Mr. GALLINGER. The testimony taken by the Committee on Finance shows that in the limited number of cases where men have worked 12 hours a day they wanted to work 12 hours a day; and it further shows that, in deference to a popular sentiment, which I think is proper—and I join in it; and I said so to the witnesses—they are, as fast as they can, eliminating that condition.

Now, the Senator says that the strikes in Great Britain have been in matters of transportation. The Senator is familiar with the great coal strike in Great Britain and with the textile strikes in Great Britain, if he has kept well informed on current affairs, as I judge he has. He is not ignorant of those facts.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have said that the larger strikes in recent years in Great Britain have been upon transportation companies. There have been strikes in Great Britain, strikes in Germany, strikes in France, but the fact is that the industrial classes in Great Britain are more content than they formerly were, and the fact is that the immigration which formerly came from Great Britain to the United States in large numbers, because industrial opportunities were greater in this country, has fallen to one-half of what it formerly was; and the only large immigration which we get from Europe at the present time comes, not from Great Britain, not from Germany, not from France, because the industrial classes in those countries are content to stay at home, but it comes from the other less-favored countries of Europe, and is induced very largely by the protected industries in this country, which use that labor when it gets here to the exclusion of American labor.

Mr. GALLINGER. And yet the Senator knows that in Great Britain the laboring man is getting but 50 per cent of the wage paid the laboring man in this country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I know that the laboring man in Great Britain, with a much lower cost of living, as is shown by the fact that he stays at home, is content with his plight, rather than to come to the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. They are immigrating to Canada by the tens and hundreds of thousands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I know that the laboring men in the iron and steel industries of Great Britain work only 54 hours a week, while a large per cent of the men in the iron and steel industries in the United States work from 72 to 84 hours a week.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is not a fair statement. The Senator may say that a small proportion, an infinitesimal proportion, of those men work 12 hours a day; but some of them work only 4 or 5 hours a day. It is all in the testimony.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can give the Senator some testimony.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator knows that in Great Britain there are now 100,000 men on strike.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. At Bethlehem the result as ascertained by the investigation of agents of the United States developed these facts: Out of 9,184 employees, 2,322 worked 12 hours a day for 7 days a week; 2,233 worked 12 hours a day for 6 days a week. Ninety-nine per cent worked over 10 hours a day and 29 per cent worked 7 days a week—practical slavery.

Not only that, but this great industry, maintained at the expense of the American people, which asks for this protection for the benefit, so called and so pretended, of its American labor, employs 60 per cent of its employees from those born in foreign countries. This industry chooses to employ only, or at least chiefly, newly arrived immigrants who are willing to work long hours at low pay.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he is willing to join in a propaganda to prohibit those people from coming to this country?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What people?

Mr. GALLINGER. The people the Senator alludes to—the foreigners to whom the Senator has referred to in that statement as being employed in that industry.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am in favor of an immigration law not much different from what we have at present. But I do say it is a false pretense for the smug and smuck capitalists to come to Congress for protection to labor when they chose the cheapest labor they can introduce in this country.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator seriously think these men can be displaced and Americans be induced to take their places?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. American labor, foreign or naturalized, originally had those places. They were displaced by immigrants whom manufacturers could lure here and then oppress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator know of any American laborers now out of employment who formerly had those employments?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Pennsylvania had its iron mills nearly 100 years ago. For many years they were worked by Americans, and now 60 per cent of the labor is foreign born, and practically all of it is without the self-protection of organization.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator really think that the iron mills of Pennsylvania could now be manned by American laboring men?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will answer that by saying, that so long as they pay 18 cents an hour for labor, it is not likely that American labor, whether native born or naturalized, will accept the positions, and as long as they will not permit the laborers to be organized Americans will not work in those mills.

Now, I want to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that 5,538 of the 9,100 laborers in the Bethlehem mills receive less than 18 cents an hour for their labor.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator knows that that is the minimum wage, and it applies only to the men who come here utterly unskilled.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of the 9,084 employees 5,558 receive less than 18 cents an hour.

Mr. GALLINGER. They were unskilled.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why do they come here and not go back to their own countries if they are laboring under these deplorable conditions? There are steamships running to Italy and other countries from which they came, and if they are so terribly downtrodden—they have been sending home thousands and thousands of dollars every year—why do they not go back?

Mr. STONE. I should like to answer that question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. In answer to the Senator's question, Why do they come? I will say because inducements have been held out to them.

Mr. GALLINGER. By whom?

Mr. STONE. By the iron and steel manufacturers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is there testimony to that effect?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir; there is testimony to that effect.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. There is testimony from the manufacturers themselves. The laboring men go off a ship and direct to some works.

Mr. GALLINGER. Instead of sending their money home by the million of dollars, they could use the money to go home if their condition here were as deplorable as it is depicted.

Mr. OLIVER. Anybody who knows anything about modern steel manufacture in the larger lines knows that a very large proportion of the labor used in that line of manufacture is absolutely unskilled labor, because the whole theory of modern steel manufacture and practice lies in substituting machinery for man, and the man is only the tender of the machine. Any person who will go to one of these great establishments and watch its operations will see that there are very few exceptions to this rule. These unskilled men are not kept continuously at work. They work by spells. In the operation, they work by heats. The heat comes out only once in four hours, and it requires very hard and trying work of the entire force for a comparatively short time. In the intervals they have spells to rest. In the casting department or the open-hearth department it is the same way. The men lay off and rest. It does not amount to 12 hours a day at one machine, and the men who receive these lower rates of wages necessarily form the majority in number of men about the establishment.

Senators in discussing this question ought to be fair. There is no such undue oppression and there is no such slavery as have been charged in the debate upon this subject.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I merely desire to say to the Senator from Missouri that if he has evidence showing that inducements have been offered to these immigrants to come here, it is against the law, and if he will put the evidence in the possession of the district attorney the guilty persons will be prosecuted. The law was much improved in that respect by the measure that was passed for that purpose, against which the Senator from Missouri voted.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. STONE. I have no evidence from the mouth of any employer that any organized effort was made in Europe to bring workmen to this country. They denied that. They might well deny it, for confessing would subject them to prosecution, as indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts, for violating the law.

But I have evidence in the record that is before me now on my desk that thousands of men have come across the sea in ships from southern Europe and landed and went from the port where they landed directly to the establishment and entered into employment.

Mr. GALLINGER. They were in search of employment, and they went where they thought they could get it.

Mr. STONE. I should like to know how these men coming from Europe knew just where to go when they landed in New York.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

Mr. STONE. I did not ask the President pro tempore to answer. I asked Senators here to answer how these people get off the boat, take a train, and go directly to the works unless they know they will there find employment?

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to interrupt any further the Senator's speech, but that has been investigated and the facts are in testimony. They come here by reason of the fact that their relatives and friends, now in employment here, write them that they can here earn more money. But if there is any evidence of any inducement offered by any employer, that employer becomes subject to the law. The purpose of the bill just passed is to strengthen that part of the law. The immigrants come here through their friends and relatives. It is all in the testimony.

Mr. STONE. The Senator says there is no evidence——

Mr. LODGE. I did not say there was no evidence. The Senator from Missouri said there was no evidence, after having said there was.

Mr. STONE. I do not say that. I said that no employer had ever admitted that he had ever violated the law.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator think we must wait until the employer has confessed before we can convict him?

Mr. STONE. No; I do not think so.

Mr. LODGE. If there is any evidence, it is the Senator's duty, as it is that of any other law-abiding citizen, to lay it before the district attorney.

Mr. STONE. There is more than one kind of evidence. You need not have the confession from the lips of the employer who had made a contract or offered some inducement to immigrants in Europe to come here and enter into his employ. I should like to know if the circumstances are not almost beyond contradiction that there are some secret arrangement, when the proof is that six or eight thousand men in the employment of a single manufacturing establishment have come from Europe and gone directly to that establishment and entered into its employ. It is remarkable that they should come without some kind of inducement being offered. There is a circumstantial fact, convincing to my mind, that there was an inducement offered and that they left Europe to come to that very employment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. For a question.

Mr. GALLINGER. If it is just a question, certainly. Does not the Senator from Missouri think these steamship companies who are inducing these people to come here have information as to where they can get employment? The captains of these foreign ships, which the Senator always seems to favor in preference to the American merchant marine——

Mr. STONE. I do not care to go into the question of the merchant marine, and the Senator's statement is an unfair statement as to my position and is an inaccurate statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. While I think my statement was accurate, I will withdraw that part of it. Does not the Senator think that foreign steamships have been inducing these people to come here?

Mr. STONE. I do not know what agencies are employed. I say the fact that six or eight thousand men have come from Europe and gone directly from the landing point——

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at one time.

Mr. STONE. I did not say at one time.

Mr. GALLINGER. If a hundred came to-day, could not they communicate with another hundred as to their chances of employment here, and do they not actually do this?

Mr. STONE. There is no such happy industrial condition in that particular industry as would, it seems to me, induce men to write their relatives to come.

Mr. GALLINGER. But the fact is that they do write asking them to come.

Mr. STONE. It may be there have been letters, but when I find that at that particular establishment these conditions disclosed by this testimony, of the men receiving salaries scarcely enough to live on and working from 10 to 12 hours a day, frequently 76 hours a week, getting barely enough on which to maintain a family, I hesitate to believe there has been a great flood of letters from Bethlehem to Europe inviting those kinsmen to enjoy the prosperity there prevailing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am rather surprised to hear the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania that a very small proportion of these men are required to work those long hours. Let me read what was officially reported after the Government investigation was made:

> During May, 1910, the period covered by this investigation, 50,000, or 29 per cent, of the 173,000 employees of blast furnaces and steel works and rolling mills covered by this report customarily worked 7 days per week, and 20 per cent of them worked 84 hours or more per week, which, in effect, means a 12-hour working day every day in the week, including Sunday. The evil of 7-day work was particularly accentuated by the fact developed in the investigation that the 7-day working week was not confined to the blast-furnace department, where there is a metallurgical necessity for continuous operation, and in which department 88 per cent of the employees worked 7 days a week, but it was also found that to a considerable extent in other departments, where no such metallurgical necessity can be claimed, productive work was carried on on Sunday just as on other days of the week. For example, in some establishments the Bessemer converters, the open-hearth furnaces, and blooming, rail, and structural mills were found operating 7 days a week for commercial reasons only.

It was not confined to the blast furnaces, as the Senator from Pennsylvania said.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do for a question. I should like to go on and complete my remarks.

Mr. OLIVER. I simply want to explain that I did not claim that the seven days' work was confined to blast furnaces. It is just as necessary to a certain extent in the open-hearth processes as in blast furnaces.

I further say, Mr. President, that I do not want to be considered as standing here and defending unnecessary Sunday work, and wherever it is found to be unnecessary, as it is unnecessary in the rolling-mill department and in the Bessemer department, I will be found as heartily condemning it as the Senator from Nebraska.

I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. BORAH. May I interrupt the Senator long enough to quote a paragraph or two from the report of the stockholders of the United States Steel Corporation with reference to this particular subject?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. BORAH. It ought to be a fair statement of the situation. It is quite in accord with the statements which were made by the Bureau of Commerce and Labor in regard to this matter. They say, upon page 3 of their report:

> As a result of the several meetings held by the committee for the study of the article under discussion, as also through conference with Messrs. Cabot and Fitch, it seemed that the main questions calling for consideration were:
> (a) The 7-day week and long turn.
> (b) The 12-hour day.
> (c) The speeding of the workmen.
> (d) The repression of the men.
> Before taking up these questions singly, we believe we but state the facts in saying that no one of these practices was inaugurated by the United States Steel Corporation. Rather were they in vogue, to a greater or less degree, in the various companies which were brought into one when the Steel Corporation was organized.

The result of this report is, however, in full that all these different things exist in this industry. The 7-day week, working sometimes 12 hours a day and sometimes 18 and 24 hours on a shift, the speeding of the workmen, and the repression of the men were the subjects which the stockholders felt necessary to investigate.

Now, I am not interested just at this moment as to the tariff feature of this discussion, but I am interested in the other proposition which has come into this discussion because of the measure which is now pending before the Senate. There is no necessity of trying to conceal the fact that there is a species of industrial peonage which exists in this industry, and the sooner we take hold of it the quicker we will discharge our full obligation to those people.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it is a remarkable fact that the chief complaint in the United States to-day for the overworking and underpaying of employees comes from those industries for whose benefit the American people are paying an enormous tax in increased cost of living, possibly a thousand million dollars a year. The very industry whose hypocritical owners knock at the door of Congress and ask to have taxes levied for the pretended reason that they may pay American wages to American workingmen are the very ones who are working their men 12 hours a day and 7 days a week. They are the ones who are prohibiting labor organizations and who are, as I believe, and as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has stated, stimulating immigration, not from England, because the English laborer will not come to America to work for those wages; not from Germany, because the German laborer has refused in recent years to come here; nor from France, from whose industries we have practically no immigration, but from those countries of Europe that are pointed to as unhappy and unfortunate, as far as their industrial classes are concerned.

It is a strange case of circumstantial evidence against the iron and steel industry. If the fact can not be proven, as the Senator from Missouri has charged, that they have induced and procured this immigration, it is a strange case of circumstantial evidence against them that they are the ones who take advantage of that immigration when it comes here.

In the current number of the North American Review, which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has just been kind enough to hand me, I find a statement discussing Lawrence labor difficulties. We all know that during the present session of Congress a great uproar was produced in this country because of a strike, followed by bloody riots and the practical suspension of the rights of American citizens in the town of Lawrence. It developed in that strike that a very large percentage of the men and women employed in those mills were foreign born. It developed that they were underpaid, earning six, seven, and eight dollars a week.

Now, look at the table published in this article, and I say this is circumstantial evidence against the protected industries. If they are not inducing this immigration, by reason of their connection with the steamship companies, they certainly appear to be the beneficiaries of this immigration.

In the manufacture of agricultural implements and vehicles 59 per cent of the employees are foreign born. In cotton manufactures 68 per cent of the employees are foreign born. In the manufacture of glass 39 per cent are foreign born. In the iron and steel industry 57 per cent are foreign born. In iron-ore mining 52 per cent are foreign born. In the woolen and worsted goods industry 61 per cent are foreign born. That is some circumstantial evidence against these protected industries which are asking to have maintained this exorbitant tariff for the benefit, as they pretend, of the American workingman.

Mr. President, I have already taken up more time than I expected to, and I want to conclude by this statement: The great problem before the American people is not the problem of increasing the wealth of the country. It is the problem of securing a fair distribution of what is annually produced.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is about to conclude his argument, and I think he did not probably hear a statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] with respect to the profits of the steel company. The Senator from Pennsylvania said that the profits of the steel company come from various subsidiary companies, a part of it profits of mines, a part of it the profits of transportation, a part of it profits of manufacture, and a part of it as far down, probably, as to reach the sales to the consumer; and these profits should be added together in reaching the sum total of profits that were charged against the United States Steel Co.

The Bureau of Corporations, in its investigation into the profits of the United States Steel Co., reached its conclusion as to the actual amount of profits that company was realizing not by adding the profits of these various integrations, but by taking the total capital invested by the steel corporation in all its business operations out of which the final result is the manufactured product of steel and iron and estimating the profits of that company upon the total capital that was invested by that company in these various processes from the ore in the mine to the finished product. I do not think the Senator gave the statement of the Bureau of Corporations as to that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should be very glad to have the Senator give it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall now, if the Senator will permit me, give it.

The Bureau of Corporations gives these profits year by year, beginning with the year 1901 and including the year 1910. It first gives them by the year and then gives them by average. For those nine years the profits of the steel corporation estimated in this way—"total investment in tangible property as computed by the bureau" and then "earnings as adjusted by the bureau"—were 14.8 per cent; in 1902 the profits of the steel corporation were ,5.9 per cent; in 1903, 11.7; in 1904, 7.6; in 1905, 12.9; in 1906, 15.1; in 1907, 14.4; in 1908, 7.8; in 1909, 10.5; in 1910, 10.7. Average for the period of time—1901 to 1910—of the profits of the steel company, estimated upon the total investment, 12 per cent.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am glad to have the figures put in by the Senator from North Carolina.

Before I conclude I want to draw attention to an analysis of the figures presented by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. He made some effort to show that there had been, as I recall it, an improvement in the wages paid in the steel industry. It seems to me that his table proves exactly the contrary. He shows that the iron and steel product of the United States for the year 1899 was $804,000,000; the amount of wages paid, $120,000,000. I am leaving off the odd hundred thousand. On that basis the labor working in the iron and steel industry received 15 per cent—that is to say, out of every dollar's worth of iron and steel product labor received 15 cents.

His figures for the year 1907 show that the total product was $1,377,000,000; wages paid, $187,000,000, or 13.6 per cent for labor; in other words, labor received 13.6 cents out of every dollar's worth of product made, as against 15 cents eight years before that time.

Mr. OLIVER. I will ask the Senator from what he is reading.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am reading from the tabulated statement which the Senator from Utah displayed upon the wall at the time he made his speech.

Mr. OLIVER. And only 13 per cent of the entire expense went to labor?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; out of very dollar's worth of goods made labor receives 13.6 per cent at the present time, and 10 years ago labor received 15 cents out of every dollar's worth of product.

Mr. OLIVER. I think there is something wrong in the Senator's statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nothing wrong with either one of the statements, but perhaps it needs explanation, at least to the Senator from Nebraska. The figures given in the table were the figures applying to the finished product, and the labor is not taken into consideration in producing any of the intermediary processes. If the Senator had studied the question in the Statistical Abstract of any great item of manufacture in this country, he would have found that the same rule applies. For instance, the labor in the finished product here does not take into consideration the labor that was put into the manufacture of the ore to pig iron. You can take the Statistical Abstract as to the woolen industry. There are many manufacturers of woolen yarn only and they do not produce a yard of finished product. There are many manufacturers who buy yarns only and then they make the cloth, and the cloth is the finished product. All the labor that was employed in the making of the yarn is taken no account of in the mill that makes the yarn into cloth.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I shall have to object to the Senator going into a new subject. I have quoted the Senator's figures. I think he can hardly question that he said the iron and steel manufactures of the United States in 1899 amounted to $804,000,000, and that in making those manufactures $120,000,000 was paid in wages. As a mathematical proposition, that is 15 per cent. Now, eight years later, in 1907, the product was valued at $1,377,000,000; the wages paid in manufacturing it were $187,000,000; and that, as a mathematical proposition, is 13.6 per cent. So, where the labor in the steel and iron industry formerly received 15 cents out of every dollar's worth of product, it now receives 13.6 cents out of every dollar's worth of product.

Mr. SMOOT. That is absolutely true, as far as the finished product is concerned.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not mistaken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not take the figures from the finished product; I took the Senator's figures from the total iron and steel industry; and his figures in the iron and steel industry embraced the wages paid to all labor in the iron and steel industry.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. His statement was not confined to the finished product.

Mr. SMOOT. I presume I know as well as the Senator what the figures were taken from. I thought the Senator knew they were not taken in the way he states. I say to the Senator the labor that was put into the manufacture of pig iron was not taken into consideration in the figures that were submitted in the diagram that I presented to the Senate. The figures show the prices upon the finished product and not upon any of the intermediary subjects in the manufacture of steel and iron.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator's table said nothing about the finished product; it said the total iron and steel manufactures of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. That means the total of the manufactured product in the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Even on the Senator's present theory, however, it remains true that in the labor paid, as he now says, in making the finished product there has been a decline in those eight years from 15 per cent to 13¾ per cent, and if there has been a decline in that kind of labor it would naturally follow that there had probably been a decline in the other.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. That all depends on what is the cost unit of producing in this country, as to whether a man with modern machinery, with the modern improvements, can produce a ton of steel in this country to-day cheaper than he did at that particular time. It is not a question, Mr. President, as to what was paid the man per day at that particular time; it is a question of the cost of the unit at the different times; and in that regard the statement made by me shows the absolute facts.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am making the statement as it appeared upon the Senator's tabulated statement and as it appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It was the total iron and steel manufactures of the United States and the total amount of wages paid in making those manufactures.

Mr. President, I feel like apologizing for having taken up more time than I expected, but interruptions have rather diverted me from the line I had intended to discuss. I want to conclude by saying again that there is only one real great political problem in the United States that involves the welfare of the people, although it appears in many forms. It is not the problem of creating wealth; it is not the problem of producing wealth in this country year by year.

This country is now producing and always must produce more wealth than any other country. This country is now producing more than any other country has ever produced in history, and it is because this country has superior natural advantages: It has the richest mines in the world; it has the most fertile agricultural fields in the world; it has the most marvelous people in the world, for no other people equal the American people with their native-born American stock and engrafted upon it the admirable stock from Europe. The American people are the most industrious people in the world; they have the most nervous energy; they have the greatest ingenuity. America will always produce. The problem is not one of production in this country; but the great problem in this country with which we are confronted in every political measure which comes up is the problem of the distribution fairly of what is annually produced, and this is where the Republican program breaks down. There is a total failure to fairly distribute the production of the energy of the American people.

I heard a statement made—I think it was by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]—that in the savings banks of this country there was something like four thousand million dollars, representing the savings of the industrial classes. I thought, after all, what a pitiful thing to point to—29,000,000 people engaged in working, and the amount they have saved up, after these generations of work in this country, amounts to four thousand million dollars. Ten million of the 29,000,000 working people have deposits, but the average is only $420 per depositor. At 4 per cent, each depositor would have the munificent income of $17 per year—certainly not much to boast of and not much to depend on.

Mr. President, when I think of the possibilities of wealth production in this country I am reminded of that story of the newly arrived foreigner who was taken to see Niagara Falls. His Irish friend said to him, as he pointed out the natural wonder, "Pat, is not that a wonderful sight?" "Well," said Pat, "I do not know." "Why," his friend said, "is it not wonderful the way that great body of water pours over those rocks and drops down into that abyss?" "Well," said Pat, "what's to hinder it?" [Laughter.] So when I look over this country and see how marvelously it is equipped with natural resources, how wonderfully it is circumstanced in the matter of climate, how it is in a virgin New World beginning where the Old world left off, populated as it is with a wonderful people, having the richest mines and the most fertile fields, with people of the greatest industry, education, and ingenuity—I say, what is to hinder the production of wealth? That is not the problem, but the problem is to see that there is a fair distribution of what is annually produced. When the Congress of the United States is asked to continue tariff taxation for the benefit of certain privileged capital, which has exceeded its rights, when that capital has grown arrogant and fraudulent at the same time, and when the labor that it has employed is the most distressed labor in the United States, then I am disposed to say the time has come to look more to the distribution of the wealth that is annually produced and less to the problem of producing it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should be glad to have any suggestion as to how legislation could affect the distribution of the product of labor. If the Senator has it in mind to explain that or to suggest any method by which legislation can control the distribution of the product of a man's labor, I think it would be welcomed by the Senate and by the country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, I think Mr. Andrew Carnegie, now a Scottish laird, is in possession of some four or five hundred millions of wealth that was produced in this country, if it was produced anywhere, and he got it by reason of a protective tariff, which gave to his industry a monopoly value, which monopoly value enabled him to unload it upon American capitalists at the price he received.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I must have misunderstood the Senator. I did not know that he was confining his proposition to the distribution of money. I thought he was referring to the distribution of labor and the products of labor. Of course you can confiscate a man's money, I suppose, or get it away from him; but my mind was not pointed in that direction, but it went to the question of the distribution of the result of labor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was referring to the fact that this country was producing enormous wealth every year, and that, by virtue of the tariff law, much of that wealth has been centered in the hands of a few people, and the existence of others has been made correspondingly more difficult. The struggle for existence has increased in this country. More and more women are compelled to enter the productive work of this country every year; more and more children are compelled to enter the productive industries of the country every year simply because the struggle for existence in this country has become harder among the industrial classes and the cost of living, by constand increase largely due to the protective tariff, has brought this about.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from Nebraska pardon an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May it not well be that the present bad distribution of wealth, which wealth is a product of labor, of course, has been brought about by the hypocritical pretense underlying the protective tariff system? Is it not true that the pretense underlying this system was to give to the American laboring man a higher wage and better remuneration for his labor? Is it not true that somewhere between the law and the result it happened that Carnegie took a toll of $300,000,000 that never reached the laboring man, the pretended ultimate distributee, at all? Is not that somewhat of an answer to the question put by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]?

To go a bit further, is it not somewhat of an answer that men with great capital and with great political influence in this great alliance that has existed between national politics and big business have hidden behind that tariff shield to effect monopolies, or near monopolies, with the ability to reap just what portion of the product of labor they thought it safe in the face of organized labor to attempt to reap? Is it not true that the pretense has been that the protective tariff was instituted for the benefit of the laboring man? The pretense has been that the tariff would make these great capitalists able to pay more, and also make them willing to do so, whereas the fact is God had to make them willing by special grace, and He never has seen fit to intervene for that purpose.

If the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me, in connection with the great trust evil, which has grown out of this system—not altogether, but for the most part—I will say that I received a letter this morning with a sentence or two in it which strikes me as good, and I want to put in the RECORD a part of it as a proposition for a plank in the platform to be promulgated by the approaching Democratic convention, which, by the way, will declare the policies which shall rule this country for the next four years, because after the two Kilkenny cats who are now representing the Republican Party get through with one another there will not be any material Republican Party left. "There were two cats in Kilkenny who fit and who fit until of cats there weren't any." The Democratic Party is apt to come in by default, because one or the other of the defendants will have left the court with all of his witnesses.

In this connection, if the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me—I seem to be taking up a good deal of his time, but we have until 2 o'clock—I notice that not only the distinguished ex-President of the United States has never come out in favor of a single reduction of a single tariff duty, thereby appealing to the tariff barons for campaign contributions, but that when he had to meet the great trust evil with a proposed remedy he met it with a proposition which seemed to be very welcome to Perkins and to Gary and to all of the men who are at the head of all the trusts in this country, thus likewise appealing to them for campaign contributions, to wit, a policy of "controlling" or "regulating" the trusts, not putting an end to their exploitation, but "regulating" their exploitation through the instrumentality of a presidential or Roosevelt bureau at Washington.

Whether or not these distinguished trust magnates imagined that they could come just about as near regulating the bureau as the bureau could come to regulating them I can not say; but, at any rate, this was their proposal for solving the trust evil, and it was readily seized upon by the ex-President, who has been so much dissatisfied during the last three years and a half because he ascertained that he could not be both ex-President and President at the same time. [Laughter.] As it now seems evident that the "regulars" in the Republican Party are going to be run over by the "insurgents," and this gentleman is to be the nominee of the so-called Republican Party and is to receive the support of the so-called "regulars," it may be pertinent to read what follows as a plank in a Democratic platform directly opposed to the views of the ex-President and directly opposed to the idea that he has as to a proper one, by the promulgation of which he would control trusts.

And as the present President, who will soon be an ex-President, has made a proposition to control trusts by means of Federal incorporation, this plank would also furnish a declaration squarely in the teeth of his proposition. Now, I ask the careful attention of the Senator from Nebraska, because I want his judgment upon this:

> Monopolies are contrary to the genius of free institutions—

That is the first sentence—

> They are not to be tolerated upon any pretext, excuse, or condition whatsoever. The existing corporate trusts in this country must be disintegrated in fact as well as in form.

I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that the present Republican incumbent of the White House wanted to disintegrate them in form, and has succeeded to some extent, but not in fact, and that the ex-President—the other Republican candidate—always said, substantially, that he did not want to disintegrate them at all; but that they were the natural outcroppings of modern industrial conditions and ought to be "regulated" so as not to do "too much harm," and that he divided them into two classes—"good" ones; that is, those that were subservient to the administration and would not fight back if they were fought—you remember Perkins threatened that he would fight back and that made his company at once a good trust—and bad ones, the sort that were inimical to the Roosevelt administration.

But let me continue to read this proposed trust, or, rather, antitrust plank:

> We pledge our party to this accomplishment if elected to office. The high protective tariff has furnished the opportunity, and the grant of unrestricted corporate powers has been the creating cause of modern monopoly and the means whereby it has evaded existing antitrust laws. The existing law must be enforced civilly and criminally, and the tariff must be reduced, and the corporations must be made safe instruments of commerce and of legitimate business. Corporations with unsafe charter powers or without adequate charter restrictions against monopoly and near monopoly must be excluded from interstate commerce by a specific Federal law. Its requirements must be explicit and effective to destroy holding companies, interlocking directors, intercorporate control and watered stock. Its penalties must be adequate and self-sufficient, and its enforcement must not be optional with a Federal Executive or bureau, nor must it be subject to special Executive or bureau dispensation in particular cases.
> We oppose Federal incorporation of license to work monopolistic exploitation of the people as wholly unnecessary and as mere blinds to fasten existing industrial evils on the Nation. Their object is to prevent disintegration, to revolutionize the Government to fit the trusts, instead of reforming the corporations to fit the genius of the Government, to extend and centralize the unlawful existing union of politics and big business, to make each dependent on the other, to make the alliance between the two offensive and defensive, and to make the whole dependent on an oligarchy of presidential favorites and bureaucrats, whose very existence must be fatal to commercial, industrial, and political freedom. Existing evils are due to special privileges of the past and present, to corrupt and incompetent government, and to the chartered libertinage of corporate control. They are not to be corrected by new privileges, by more bureaucracy, by more government, but by punitive and restrictive laws, by the destruction of existing privileges, by reestablishing, confirming, and maintaining the institutions of democracy in their true spirit for the benefit of ourselves and our posterity. Our evils are due to Republican departures in the Federal Government and in the State legislatures from those institutions. Our remedy is to return to them by Democratic watchfulness of corporation grants in the State legislatures and by the virile exercise of the interstate-commerce power conferred upon the Congress of the United States by the Constitution.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to know who the able gentleman is who prepared that paper. I think his name ought to be known.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that I have the gentleman's permission to communicate the fact to the Senate, and I shall, for that reason, not do so; but I regard it as apropos of the question asked by the Senator from Idaho—in fact, as quite an exhaustive answer to him, as well as a suggestion to the Democracy and insurgent Republicans for blazing out a future policy of a rapidly approaching Democratic administration, built upon demonstrated Democratic wisdom and upon equally well-demonstrated Republican incompetency in the field of constructive statesmanship.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I regard it as such an appropriate suggestion that I will let it to go in in that way, and I ask unanimous consent to amend my resolution by inserting, after the word "and," in line 4, the words "ten and also nineteen hundred and," so as to have the resolution read:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to send to the Senate a compilation of the returns made by the corporations for internal-revenue purposes for the year 1910 and also 1911, so arranged as to show the following facts:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was glad to note that our amiable and delightfully witty colleague the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] suggested that certain things would be accomplished by the Democratic Party during the next four years. I am glad the Senator did not extend the tenure beyond that time. If I understand the Senator correctly, the Senator from Missouri is anxious to know what remarkable intellect produced the famous declaration from which the Senator from Mississippi read. Mr. President, I recall with a great deal of vividness the declaration of the Democratic Party on the subject of the tariff in 1892, and I want to read briefly from that platform:

We denounce the McKinley tariff law enacted by the Fifty-first Congress as the culminating atrocity of class legislation; we indorse the efforts made by the Democrats of the present Congress to modify its most oppressive feature in the direction of free raw materials—

Our Democratic friends do not seem to be very well united now on free raw materials. I think there is about as much division in their ranks on that subject as there is between the two Republicans contending for the nomination at Chicago.

Mr. BACON. That is putting it very strongly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have heard it put quite as strongly as that on the Democratic side—and cheaper manufactured goods that enter into general consumption, and we promise its repeal as one of the beneficent results that will follow the action of the people in intrusting power to the Democratic Party.

Mr. President, the American people did intrust power to the Democratic Party upon that platform, but it will require a keener intellect than even the Senator from Mississippi possesses to discover the benefits which followed. I know it is a little unfashionable to allude to what followed that election of 1892 so far as concerns the industrial interests of the American people, but I will not now spend much time in calling attention to the unfortunate results which flowed from that Democratic triumph, achieved upon the platform from which I have just read.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. BACON. We have heard a great deal upon a great many occasions——

Mr. BORAH. I had the recognition of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. BORAH. I did not know the Senator from New Hampshire had the disposal of the time.

Mr. BACON. I am perfectly willing the Senator from Idaho should go ahead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire had not yielded the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall be pleased to yield to the Senator from Georgia or the Senator from Idaho for a question.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask a question. Will the Senator tell us why it is that the act of 1893 was responsible for the panic which followed and that the act of 1907 was not responsible for that of 1907?

Mr. GALLINGER. That question has been asked and answered so often I did not——

Mr. BACON. I do not recall the answer.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator's memory is a little at fault. We all know what caused the panic of 1907. It was not an industrial panic in any sense of the word. If the Senator from Georgia will charge his mind with the condition that existed under the tariff law which was enacted by the Democratic Party after their triumph upon the platform from which I have read, he can not fail to remember that there was infinitely more wretchedness and sorrow in the country then than existed in 1907.

I live in an industrial community. I know precisely what happened when the Democratic Party came into power in 1892, and I know what happened in 1907, and I wish to say to the Senator that there is no similarity between the two cases. But, Mr. President, I simply made the remark I did in answer to the suggestion of my genial friend, the Senator from Mississippi, that the Democratic Party is to have four years more of power. The Democratic Party always carries the country in May and June, but they seldom carry it in November, and probably they will meet with their usual disappointment this year.

I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi, who seldom misses an opportunity to excoriate the ex-President, who is a candidate for the presidential nomination on the Republican ticket, that it is amusing to see how our Democratic friends are trembling literally in their boots for fear he be nominated as the Republican standard bearer. I will do what I can to prevent his nomination, and thus contribute to the peace of mind of our Democratic friends.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will not speak of the squalor and the wretchedness which he always says the existing tariff produces, I will gladly yield.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. On the contrary, I will present a picture that will make you glow with admiration.

I hold in my hand a paper known as the Elizabeth Daily Journal published in Elizabeth County, N. J. It is Republican. What attracted my attention is this glaring advertisement:

BRIGGS LORIMER BRIGGS LORIMER BRIGGS LORIMER

BRIGGS LORIMER BRIGGS LORIMER

AFTER SEVEN YEARS
of
THEODORE ROOSEVELT
New Jersey
Went Republican by 80,000!

AFTER TWO YEARS
of
WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT
New Jersey
Went Democratic by 50,000!
WHY?
Paid for by J. P. Storm, agent.

BRIGGS LORIMER BRIGGS LORIMER

BRIGGS LORIMER BRIGGS LORIMER BRIGGS LORIMER

They ask why. That is the conundrum I leave to the Senator from New Hampshire to solve, and he need not dream that the great Democratic Party is shaking in its boots in fear of the election of a Republican President.

Mr. GALLINGER. That paid advertisement does not trouble me at all. I remember that a great writer once said:

When sorrows come, they come not single spies, but in battalions.

We had political sorrows two years ago, due to Democratic misrepresentations, but they will not be repeated; and I do not think a paid advertisement in a Republican newspaper, if indeed it is a Republican newspaper, is of much value in this argument.

I want to say a few words, and only a few words, in reply to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who was very courteous in yielding to interruptions.

The Senator spoke about the population of the eastern industrial States and the population of the western agricultural States, and found fault because more of the immigrants from Europe come to the Eastern States than to the agricultural States of the West. If the Senator could devise some means by which 50 per cent of those immigrants or more would go to the West and engage in agricultural pursuits, it would be a wise solution of what I regard as a serious industrial situation in this country.

I want to ask the Senator why if there is great profit in manufacturing the people of Nebraska and Kansas and Iowa do not engage in it. There is no law against it. There is no reason why manufacturing should not prosper there as well as in Pennsylvania or Ohio or New England or New York, and I commend to the Senator's attention the suggestion that possibly he will find a solution of the troubles that seem to be disturbing his mind if he will see to it that manufacturing enterprises are established in some of the States of the Middle West.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not a fact that under the trust and the Republican tariff of the last century your industrial enterprises number about 600 plants as compared with something like a thousand before the trust began? How do you expect us on the western prairies, without coal and without iron, to build up manufacturing establishments when you in the East can not maintain them?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not been aware of the fact that we are not maintaining a fair share of industrial enterprises in the East. It may not be in iron and steel, but it is in the manufacture of various other commodities that the Middle West might engage in if it sought to do so. The people of the Middle West are directing their energies in other ways. They have become rich by accumulating land. Our people put their money into savings banks. In the Middle West they put it in broad acres. They are a very rich people. I am not sure that it is not wise policy on their part, and they ought not to complain of us because we direct our energies in other channels.

Mr. HITCHCOCK rose.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very much afraid to yield to the Senator from Nebraska because he has been conferring with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I merely want to ask whether the Senator would object to passing the resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator's resolution would probably have passed before now if it had not been for the tariff discussion he precipitated.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am only asking for information that is in possession of the administration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Probably the resolution will pass in the near future.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It will have to be passed at once or it will have to go to the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Some of our friends say we are going to be here until next October. I am sorry if that is to be the case, but if it is we can pass a good many resolutions between now and then.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it would be interesting to have this information before the tariff debate closes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Idaho at my right [Mr. HEYBURN] says that the tariff debate is not going to close immediately. I wish it might. I should like to close it to-day. But the resolution can wait.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the resolution will go to the calendar. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 18642.

Mr. HITCHCOCK subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed, in connection with the discussion to-day, an advertisement which appeared in the Philadelphia Inquirer and other papers of May 23, of the Bethlehem Steel Co., offering to sell $15,200,000 of 5 per cent bonds, and setting forth, among other things, that during the past five years the company has, out of its earnings, expended $13,608,628 upon the enlargement of its plant, in addition to the payment of interest out of its earnings upon its bonded indebtedness.

In this connection, I wish to say that this company, which has made these enormous earnings, has had a paid-in capital of only $300,000, as shown by the testimony of Mr. Schwab himself. It is the same company which has been compelling its men to work 12 hours a day, 76 hours a week, in a large proportion of cases, and the same company which incurred a large strike by reason of insisting that the men should work on Sunday. I ask that this advertisement be printed in the RECORD as a statement of the company itself as to its financial condition.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator from Nebraska to say that all the capital stock that was paid in in that company was $300,000?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Three hundred thousand dollars is all the capital that the Bethlehem Steel Co. have ever put in.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that statement has been contradicted time and time again. I know that it has been made here upon the floor, but I have not yet seen any authority for it, and Mr. Schwab says it is not true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me read what Mr. Schwab said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska for the printing of the statement referred to by him?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not believe that question can be settled at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska to print in the RECORD the statement which he presents? The Chair hears none.

The statement referred to is as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer May 23, 1912.]

Fifteen million two hundred thousand dollar Bethlehem Steel Co. first lien and refunding mortgage 5 per cent 30-year gold bonds. Principal payable May 1, 1942. Interest payable May 1 and November 1. Principal and interest guaranteed by Bethlehem Steel Corporation by indorsement on each bond. Coupon bonds of $1,000 and $500 denominations with full privileges of registration. Coupon and registered bonds interchangeable. Annual sinking fund of 2½ per cent of the face value of bonds of this issue outstanding with minimum sinking-fund limit of $300,000 per year. All or any part of the issue redeemable at the option of the company at 105 per cent and accrued interest on any interest date upon 12 weeks' notice. Equitable Trust Co. of New York, trustee.

FREE OF TAX IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Attention is directed to a letter of Mr. C. M. Schwab, president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation (copies of which can be obtained from the undersigned), which he summarizes as follows:

Purposes of issue: The proceeds of the $15,200,000 bonds sold to you, in conjunction with Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb & Co., New York, are to be used—

To retire the entire outstanding amount of $6,428,000 Bethlehem Steel Co. 5-year 6 per cent secured gold notes.

To purchase $2,668,000 Bethlehem Steel Co. first extension mortgage 5 per cent bonds, thereby reducing the outstanding amount of that issue to $8,000,000.

To provide additional working capital.

Two million three hundred thousand dollars in bonds remain in the treasury for the general purposes of the company, and the balance of the authorized issue of $50,000,000 bonds is to be reserved under carefully drawn restrictions of the morgtage for refunding the $8,000,000 first extension mortgage 5 per cent bonds, and for construction or acquisition of additional property at not exceeding 90 per cent of its cost, with limitations in issuing bonds for the latter purpose, having reference to net earnings of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation.

Lien of the mortgage: Bonds of this issue will be secured by a mortgage upon the real estate and manufacturing plants of the Bethlehem Steel Co., subject only to its purchase money mortgage ($7,500,000 outstanding), and its first extension mortgage ($8,000,000, as above shown, outstanding, for the retirement of which a sufficient amount of bonds of this issue will be reserved).

These bonds will also be secured by a first mortgage lien upon real estate and manufacturing plants hereafter acquired by the Bethlehem Steel Co., subject only to the after acquired property clauses of the first extension mortgage (so far as applicable), and to any purchase money or other mortgages subject to which such property may be acquired, but against which an equal face amount of bonds of this issue shall be reserved.

Value of assets back of bonds: Upon the issue of $15,200,000 bonds sold, the assets of the Bethlehem Steel Co. over and above its other liabilities, including its prior mortgages above referred to, will be $25,880,758, and the value of other properties represented by stocks to be pledged to secure the guaranty of Bethlehem Steel Corporation will be $6,766,869, making a total of $32,647,627 of assets back of these first lien and refunding mortgage bonds, or more than double the amount sold at this time. To the above values of properties represented by stocks pledged about $28,000,000 should be added to represent the real worth of mining properties of the corporation.

Earnings: The accounts of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and its subsidiary companies have been audited annually from the date of incorporation to the close of the last fiscal year by Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Co., and the statements of earnings which follow are based upon the audited accounts.

On the basis of net earnings of the corporation for 1911, before providing for depreciation or for exploitation and exhaustion of minerals, there is available after the payment of all charges, including amortization on prior issues, $3,826,618 with which to meet the interest charges on these $15,200,000 first lien and refunding mortgage bonds. This is over five times the amount so required and over three times the amount of the entire charges on these bonds, including sinking fund and amortization.

In general: The Bethlehem Steel Corporation is one of the most important and successful of the independent steel companies. Its growth and progress have been consistent and steady since its incorporation. Its annual business in 1905 was $14,554,117; in 1911 it was $30,093,022. During the first quarter of 1912 it booked orders aggregating about $12,250,000. Total orders on hand March 31, 1912, about $21,000,000.

The plants are modern and up to date in all particulars and are maintained in a high state of efficiency and repair, as is evidenced by the expenditure or appropriation of $13,608,628 out of earnings during the last five years for this purpose.

The Bethlehem Steel Corporation is well rounded out and self-contained and occupies an independent position, with ample supplies of ore, coal, and other raw materials, which it either owns or controls.

Application will be made to list this issue on the New York Stock Exchange and, if deemed desirable, on one or more foreign exchanges.

Temporary certificates, exchangeable later for engraved bonds, are now ready for delivery.

The form of bonds, the creation of the mortgage, and all legal proceedings connected therewith are to be approved by our counsel, Messrs. Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett.

Having placed a large majority of this issue here and in Europe, we will receive subscriptions for the unsold balance at 91½ and accrued interest.

The subscription will be opened on Thursday, May 23, 1912, at 10 o'clock a. m. and closed at 3 o'clock p. m. the same day or earlier, at the option of the undersigned. The right is reserved to reject any application and to allot a smaller amount than applied for. Payment in full to be made upon allotment. Subscription blanks may be obtained from the undersigned.

A simultaneous issue will be made by Messrs. Hope & Co., Amsterdam, and by Messrs. Salomon & Co., London.

MAY 21, 1912.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD a paragraph from a letter written by Mr. Schwab on November 5, 1909, upon the subject of the capital stock of this company.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The capital stock of the Bethlehem Steel Co. amounts to $15,000,000 (all owned by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation), divided into 300,000 shares at $50 par. While nominally only $1 per share has been paid in, the surplus of the company is practically sufficient to pay the stock in full, and the company intends to issue stock to represent this surplus.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenues, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Nebraska, Mr. President, called attention to the fact that in the savings banks of the country the deposits are only $400 per capita.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator is mistaken; I said $400 per depositor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Per depositor. That is what I meant by per capita.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not per capita.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; per capita of the depositors. That is correct.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is an income of about $17 a year.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator seemed to be troubled over the fact as it struck him that that was all that those people possess.

Mr. President, in my little State the deposits in the savings banks are a little less than $400 per depositor, but almost one-half of the men, women, and children in New Hampshire have accounts in the savings banks, and almost the entire sum on deposit—about $78,000,000 I believe it is—in savings banks in my State has been put there by the farmers and the men and women who work in our mills. Yet the average deposit is less than $400 per capita, or was the last time I examined the figures.

Mr. President, a little time ago a very intelligent Englishman visited my city. He came with a letter of introduction to me, and I suggested to him that I would like to show him around the town. I took him in my carriage, and we traversed almost every street in the city of Concord. It is not a great manufacturing city, but we have some important industries there. Most of our people are laboring people. When I brought him back to his hotel and assisted him out of the carriage he said to me: "Senator, where do your working people live?" He had been through almost every street in the town; he had seen those beautiful little houses, painted white with green blinds, where our workingmen live; and it was a surprise to him that he did not find any portion of our city where there were evidences of sorrow and suffering and want such as have been pictured here. It does not exist. It does not exist in the city of Lawrence, notwithstanding all the talk that has been made concerning the conditions there. It does not exist in any industrial city or town in New England, notwithstanding the frightful pictures that have been painted of squalor and rags and wretchedness. Our people are prosperous. They put a portion of their surplus money in the savings banks, and in addition to that they have enough to buy little homes in many cases. Why, in that very city of Lawrence a very considerable proportion of the homes are owned by laboring people. The Senator is wrong when he supposes that $400 is all that those people have saved during a lifetime or during a generation.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will give me his attention, I want to say that he seems to think if we take a duty off of an article the American people are going to benefit to the amount of that duty. We tried it when we took the duty off of hides. What a beautiful picture was painted here of the beneficial effect on the consumer of taking off that duty! I did not believe that it would reduce the price of either leather or boots and shoes to the American people, and I said so then, but there were pictures painted here of the benefits that would accrue to the working people of this country if we removed that duty. We were going to have cheaper hides, and, as a consequence, cheaper leather, cheaper boots, and cheaper shoes.

The duty was removed, and the Senator from Nebraska knows that the price of leather and of boots and shoes almost immediately increased, and they are at a higher price to-day than they were when we took the duty off of hides.

Now, I should like the Senator from Nebraska to give me a list—I will not insist upon his giving it to me now; he can take his time to make the investigation—of the articles that have been very largely decreased in price by the removal of the duties.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield, and to whom?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield first to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I want to ask the Senator if the price of boots and shoes and leather increased in value, who absorbed that profit? Did any of it go to the workingman? Were his wages increased?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the very thing I am complaining of. I am complaining of the fact that our Democratic friends and others insisted that the laboring man would get the benefit, and he did not get it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Was not all the reduction absorbed by the manufacturer?

Mr. GALLINGER. I doubt that very much, indeed, because I will say to the Senator that they are making shoes in my State by the hundreds of thousands on which the manufacturer gets a profit of only about 2 cents a pair.

Mr. STONE. How do lower duties increase the price of the manufactured article?

Mr. GALLINGER. I am stating a fact. I am not going to try to interpret what I have said.

Mr. STONE. If the duty is reduced, and if the price of the manufactured article is thereby advanced, the price of the workingman's wages might also be advanced.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is more troubled about matters of that kind than I am. The workingman is not troubled in my part of the country about wages. He is pretty well satisfied. The profit, if there is any, goes more largely to the jobber and the retailer than to the manufacturer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to ask for an instance where the removal of the duty had reduced the price.

Mr. GALLINGER. There may be one instance, but I asked for a list of such articles.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A man can not give a list when on his feet without previous warning very easily.

Mr. GALLINGER. I gave the Senator from Nebraska time to look it up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In partial reply to the Senator's question I will give one instance known to everybody, and that was the effect of the removal of the duty on quinine. I suppose the Senator is familiar with that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am somewhat familiar with it, but it may be that there were other reasons entering into that particular case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator remember that quinine was over $4 and that there was a cry raised that every manufacturer of quinine in the United States would have to go out of business if we put quinine upon the free list and that the consumers, the sick people, would not be benefited a particle? We did put quinine on the free list, and it went down to less than a dollar, and the manufacturers, although they threatened to go out of business, remained in business and are doing very well here.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that may have been due to other causes. I remember that aluminum cost the American people—I have forgotten how much, but several dollars a pound—and I also remember that aluminum, which has remained at the same rate of duty as was imposed years ago, has been reduced in price to less than one-tenth of what it was then. So the tariff has not had anything to do with that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the object of putting a protective duty upon an article? Is it not to raise its price?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How can the manufacturer be protected, save by raising the price?

Mr. GALLINGER. He can be protected by keeping the foreign manufacturer out of our market, and thus keeping his plant in operation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How can the foreign manufacturer be kept out of our market, save by making the price of the article, when imported into the United States, higher than it otherwise would have been?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not agree to that. I——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator mean to say that the object of putting a protective tariff upon an article imported into the United States is not to make it more difficult for the American consumer to purchase that article?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not the object at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that the only way whereby that difficulty is made is by raising its price to the American consumer?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not the object at all. The object of putting the duty on is to keep the foreign article—to some extent, at least—out of our markets——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that.

Mr. GALLINGER. And enable the American manufacturer to employ labor and to keep our money at home.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But how does putting the protective duty upon the article keep the foreign manufacturer out of our market, except by making it necessary for him to sell the article at a higher price if he wants to get into our market?

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator remember what happened to borax?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not remember that particular verse of the chapter right now, but I should like to have the Senator answer the question I have propounded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will answer it. Borax was taken from the free list and a duty, as I remember it, of 2 cents per pound was put on it. Since then the price has come down 100 per cent, the consumer formerly paying 9 cents per pound for it, while now it is 4½ cents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator has just said that the object is to keep the foreign manufacturing competitor, to a certain extent, out of competition in the home market with American manufacturers.

Mr. GALLINGER. And have competition among our own manufacturers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; with our own manufacturers. Now, my question is, How can the duty operate to accomplish that result save by making the price of the foreign article when imported into the United States higher to the American consumer?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will answer that by two illustrations that are very familiar to the Senator. Does the Senator remember what we paid for steel rails when we did not make any steel rails in this country?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes. I do not remember the exact figures, but it is lower now than when we first put a duty on steel rails.

Mr. GALLINGER. From $100 to $170 a ton was the price when we depended on England for them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from New Hampshire contend that the reduction in the price of steel rails not only in America, but in Great Britain and in France and in Germany and all over the world was owing to the fact that we placed a duty on them in the American market?

Mr. GALLINGER. I absolutely do contend that. We put a duty on steel rails, and the monopoly in England was broken, the price went down, we commenced their manufacture, and now they are being sold for $28 a ton in place of from $100 to $170 a ton. The same thing happened in relation to tin plate; the same thing happened in relation to nails when we were not manufacturing any of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In each case the price of the article has gone down, not only in the American market, but abroad, and in almost every case the price has gone down further abroad than it has gone down in America.

Mr. GALLINGER. They had to put it down abroad, to compete with us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The price decreased here and stopped at the tariff standard. We put the price down to compete with not one foreigner, but a thousand foreigners.

Mr. GALLINGER. They had to put it down abroad because if they wanted to get into our markets at all they had to reduce their price.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and if we were to prevent them from getting into our market, we had to reduce prices. But to come back to our mutton, how is it possible for the object of a protective tariff, which is to protect the American producer from the foreign producer, to be accomplished at all save by raising the price of the article when imported, and therefore rendering it more difficult for the foreign producer to send it here by rendering it more difficult, because it is at a higher price for the American consumer to purchase it?

Mr. GALLINGER. If we strike down our own industries and give foreign nations the control of our markets, foreign nations can put any price on their product they want, which is the very thing they did when they had control of certain articles of manufacture.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator from New Hampshire admit that wherever a duty is put upon an article and it does not have the immediate result, at any rate, whatever the result may be 50 years from now, to raise its price the object of putting the duty on it has failed? In other words, if protectionism has failed to raise prices of the American-produced article has not protectionism failed of its purpose?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all, Mr. President. The prime object, the elementary object, is to keep work in our own factories, to keep capital actively employed at home, and give our manufacturers the privilege of manufacturing for our own people.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, assuming that that is the case, assuming that the object of putting the duty on is to enable the American manufacturer to produce the article with American capital and with American labor, how can putting the duty on enable him to do it save by raising the price of the article produced by the foreigner and sought to be imported?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am going to be entirely frank with the Senator from Mississippi. I do not say there are not instances where that follows, but I do say that by keeping the work at home and our money invested at home there will be competition among our own manufacturers. There is competition in almost every line of industrial activity in this country, and the price is not increased, but, on the contrary, in a great many instances it is very largely decreased.

Mr. President, a gentleman called my attention to a watch the other day. He said it cost 65 cents, and it was a good timekeeper. He said there was 46 per cent duty on it. I do not know whether that is the duty on watches. I guess it is higher than that. Now, does the Senator from Mississippi insist that that duty on watches has increased the price of a 65-cent watch and that if we took off the duty it would lower the price?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not personally acquainted with the watch which the Senator had shown to him, and if the Senator would show it to me I would not know what it cost to produce it, or how many watches of the same sort are manufactured abroad; but I do know that if a duty of 46 per cent were placed on that watch with the idea in the minds of the protectionists of preventing the foreigner from entering into competition with the maker of that watch in America, and if it did not increase the price to the extent of preventing that competition and did not to some extent thereby increase the price of the foreign article and even of the domestic production to the American consumer, then the object sought to be obtained by the protectionists who levied that duty was defeated by something else; some other factor. Certainly the lowness of its price could not be due to the fact of the highness of the tax.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not agree with the Senator at all. I was not educated to the extent the Senator has been; I did not have his opportunities; but in the matter of economics we were educated in different schools, and I do not agree with the Senator in his contention. The fact is that the duty on watches enables us to run that great Elgin factory in the State which my distinguished friend [Mr. CULLOM] so ably represents. The duty on watches enables the Waltham factory in Massachusetts to be able to employ several thousands of men—I have forgotten how many, but a very large number—and to give them good wages and to give them steady employment. There is the keenest competition between the Elgin factory, the Waltham factory, and other watch factories in this country. They are making watches at the lowest possible price, in open competition. But if the duty should be removed and Switzerland should invade our market, the Senator knows that it would be a very serious blow to the watch factories of our country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He used the word "invade." I always like to hear that word. It always sound like——

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can change it to suit himself. It is an invasion, and nothing else.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It sounds like an injurious flood of valuable things at a cheap price. How would the Swiss manufacturer of watches invade the American market unless he put in it a watch of the same quality at a cheaper price?

Mr. GALLINGER. Which he could afford to do with his cheaper labor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Suppose he could. Now, then, if that be true, and the only way in which he could invade the American market would be by putting a watch in it of the same quality at a cheaper price, then, is not the very instance which the Senator has given, is not the very fear that he has expressed, a direct contradiction of his statement a moment ago that raising the duty did not raise the price?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all. If the Swiss manufacturers are permitted to flood this market—I will say "flood" in place of "invade," if it suits the Senator better, because that is what they would do—with the product of their factories, and the American factories went out of business as a result, then the Swiss manufacturer could put any price on his product he pleased.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, does the Senator from New Hampshire contend that any particular Swiss manufacturer or all the Swiss manufacturers put together possess a monopoly of watchmaking in the world?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator intend the Senate and the country to believe that because these people could "invade" America and sell watches, therefore competition between themselves and other foreigners in any selling of watches, and competition between them and American manufacturers likewise, would cease to operate to fix a price?

Mr. GALLINGER. I mean to say, Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, the Senator knows that the so-called foreigner is not one man.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; that is the trouble. I wish he was.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But you always talk about him as if he was just one fellow with one product and had the monopoly of it, and all he had to do was to fix a certain price.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all. I was unfortunate in my language if I conveyed that idea. I understand that there are other countries that make watches, and I understand that when we remove the bars those countries will put their prices low enough to put our manufacturers out of business, because ours is the best market in the world, and then they will increase their prices. There is no question about that in my mind at all. And here let me say, about this matter of a protective rate; that there is a good deal of misconception in the minds of many men. There are Senators who have proposed to make a horizontal reduction of 25 per cent on our tariff duties.

They seriously have proposed that. I have heard it during this session. Now, 40 per cent may be the line of safety so far as our manufactures are concerned; that rate may keep out the foreign manufactures sufficiently to keep our own people employed; it may not be prohibitory, but it keeps enough of the foreign manufactures out to keep our own mills running and our people employed. But 38 per cent, or even 39 per cent, may be absolutely destructive to our industries. When we get below the protective point, it is not a question of percentages. Five per cent reduction may be as destructive to our industries as absolute free trade. As I said, there is a good deal of misconception on that point on the part of Senators who gravely discuss this question of the tariff. But, Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise simply to mention to the Senator from New Hampshire that he undoubtedly made a mistake with regard to the duty on watches.

Mr. GALLINGER. I took it from the statement of another party, and neglected to verify it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The statement he read may be found in some of these comparative tables. The truth is that the duty on watches such as he described under the present law would be 70 cents for the watch, without any ad valorem duty. Therefore, if it is worth 50 cents abroad, of course the duty would be 120 or 130 per cent.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator. It is much higher than I suggested. I took it from the statement made to me by another party. But, Mr. President, the American people are not as badly off as our Democratic friends picture them to be. A correspondent of mine, writing from Detroit, Mich., a man now over 78 years of age, a few days ago called my attention to the fact that he remembers the time when a farmer's wife brought into town 20 dozen of eggs to exchange for 8 yards of calico for a dress pattern, while now a silk dress pattern can be got for that number of eggs, while a dozen and a half of them would buy the calico. He adds that it is not necessary for farmers' wives to wear calico any more. The same gentleman says that "We don't know when we are well off. There is danger of our having a Democratic victory in November and the experience of a Democratic administration for the next four years. The youngsters need the lesson, and were it not for the misery and injury to the workers I would be content. I was a mechanic for 30 years. Men in my trade received then at the highest $2 per day. Now they get $4, and the men who sweep and clean our streets get the $2." That is good protection doctrine, and scores of similar illustrations could be cited if necessary.

In the Payne-Aldrich tariff law the tariff was reduced on gloves, meats, shoes, hides, a great majority of the chemicals, certain high-priced cotton goods, and greatly reduced in many of the steel schedules, in many cases as much as 50 per cent. Has anybody heard of a reduction in price to the consumer of any one of these articles since the passage of that law? If the duty had been sufficiently reduced to allow foreign manufacturers to gain control of the American market, and in that way destroy American industries, then, in place of a reduction, there would have been a large increase in price, for the reason that the foreigner could then make his own price without fear of American competition.

Now, Mr. President, that the RECORD may be right, I want to read as briefly as may be from the testimony that was given before the Committee on Finance in reference to a phase that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] discussed at great length, namely, the employment of labor in the steel mills of the country. I will not weary the Senate, I hope, by calling attention to certain testimony that was given.

It will be said, Mr. President, as it has been said, that it is "interested" testimony, but I am bound to believe that the gentlemen coming before the committee, some of whom were invited and some of whom volunteered, are honorable men, and that they were not stating a deliberate falsehood for the purpose of misleading the committee when the facts could be ascertained later on. I know there have been men before the Committee on Finance from my own State whose word is as good as their bond, who would not for their lives make a misstatement as to conditions or as to facts. Sitting as a member of that committee, I felt that I could believe the men who testified before us. While they might be mistaken, possibly, as to some matters they presented, on the whole they were honorable men, men of integrity and uprightness, who came there to state the exact truth.

Mr. President, Mr. Schwab gave some testimony in regard to this matter of 12-hour labor, and he presented it as being a condition that exists the world over; that in continuous metallurgical work men have been required to labor 12 hours a day. I interrogated Mr. Schwab on that point, because I do not believe in men working in steel mills 12 hours a day. I believe it ought to be stopped. Mr. Schwab gave the assurance to the committee that the matter was being taken up very seriously, and that the purpose was to get rid of it as far as it was possible to do so, and I have knowledge that that is being done.

Another gentleman who appeared before the committee was a Mr. John A. Topping, who is connected with the Republic Iron & Steel Co. He gave interesting testimony. By turning to page 1334 of the hearings Mr. Topping is found to have said:

> The 12-hour system was established—
>
> Mr. Topping further said, and it is an interesting fact—
> The 12-hour system was established absolutely by the unions, and it is not an institution of the trusts. It is not an institution of manufacturers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. The 12-hour system was established by the unions to get rid of the 14-hour system and the 16-hour system.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; they could have gotten rid of the 12-hour system at the same time, I suppose, if they had wanted to do so.

Mr. BORAH. It was more difficult to make progress in the matter, judging by the experience to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator knows that this matter was submitted to the men who labor in that industry 12 hours a day, and they almost unanimously said they preferred that it remain as it is. I assume that the Senator knows that.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator does not. I would be glad to know where the information comes from.

Mr. GALLINGER. It comes from the men who were denominated a few days ago "so-called witnesses" by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. BORAH. I am not reflecting upon the witnesses, but I did not know that any such information was before the committee of the Senate. I know that no such information came before the committee whose particular duty it was to investigate this particular matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I will find it.

Mr. BORAH. I do know this——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will give the Senator my authority on that point. It was Mr. Schwab, who was a very interesting and, apparently, a very frank witness. I do not think Mr. Schwab intentionally made a single misrepresentation to our committee. He said:

I can only say that the steel interests a year ago met in New York with a view of changing this condition of affairs by putting on a sixth extra workman, and by making such changes as would give a workman one day a week off. The experiment is now being tried at one of the Steel Corporation's works in Pittsburgh, which we are following with great interest. We proposed it to our workmen, and almost unanimously they desired that the condition continue as it is at present.

Mr. BORAH. It will have no particular value, I presume, nor be very relevant for me to say of my own initiative that I do not think the statement is borne out by the facts. There is certainly evidence that can be gathered without limit to the effect that that is not the desire of the workmen. In addition to that, only a little application of common sense would suggest that no man desires to work 12 hours a day under the conditions under which those men work if they can be permitted to work 8 hours and for the same compensation.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will call the Senator's attention to the conditions in a moment. Here is the testimony of Mr. Topping. Perhaps his testimony can be impeached, but I will call the Senator's attention to what he said on that point. Here it is:

I well remember that we tried to put into effect a three-turn shift in our sheet mills and tin mills some years ago, before it was finally adopted. The unions that were then in control objected to that plan, because it meant the introduction of more apprentices—

That is something the unions always object to which, I think, is all wrong, because I believe there ought to be apprentices in all these industries—because it meant the introduction of more apprentices, more new factors in the union, and they perhaps could not control labor as well with that condition if apprenticeship increased as they could with the restricted number that they had under control.

Mr. Topping continues:

So the 12-hour system has been with us a great many years. We admit that we have it, but the men who work 12 hours do not work continuously. They work intermittently. They work 12 hours in preference to working a less number of hours, because if you reduced the hours of labor it would mean reduced pay per day.

In this point in the hearings, Senator HEYBURN said:

That is an interesting proposition, and I wish you would particularize that somewhat, because the impression has gone out that where witnesses have testified to men or boys working 12 hours it meant 12 continuous hours. I wish you would emphasize that a little and apply it to the different classes of 12-hour labor.

Mr. TOPPING. There are no employees that I know of in the steel business that work continuously 12 hours.

The CHAIRMAN. Out of the 12 hours, how many hours do they probably work? Mr. Schwab said some of them only work an hour out of the 12.

Mr. TOPPING. I think it would be very conservative to say that many who work 12 hours do not work continuously over 6.

* * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. You can state in a general way, I suppose, what it shows.

Mr. TOPPING. I have stated that in a general way, Senator. I think, taking the blast-furnace man, he would not average six hours. Take the open-hearth man. He would average rather more than that, because during the period of casts is longer than in making a melt in a blast furnace, so that between periods men sit down and smoke, and if you do not watch them some of them take a drink. We watch that, however.

Senator CULLOM. How does the impression go out that such a man works 12 hours when he actually only works 6?

Mr. TOPPING. Because the men are on duty 12 hours, although subject to an interval of time between hours of work for the materials charged into the blast furnace to be smelted before they can be tapped. For instance, take the man who has charge of the work of charging the furnace—that is, putting the raw materials in the top of the furnace. After he has filled up that furnace for each group of men they sit down and wait until the furnace melts down its charge and it is tapped by the tappers below and taken away. As soon as that operation is complete the chargers come back, alternating, charge it again, and the melters below are waiting for the minerals to melt. So while one crew works the other waits, and vice versa.

Senator CULLOM. The man is really on duty all the time?

Mr. TOPPING. He is on duty 12 hours, but he has to work only about half the time.

Senator HEYBURN. How long does it take to tap the furnace?

Mr. TOPPING. It depends somewhat upon the character of the materials you are working and the condition of your furnace. I think there is an interval there of about two hours.

Senator MCCUMBER. His duties consist of six hours of labor and six hours of smoking?

Mr. TOPPING. Whatever he cares to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Reading the newspapers, I suppose, and discussing political questions?

Mr. TOPPING. Yes; reading a "Hunky" paper, as we call the Hungarian papers.

Mr. President, I know nothing about this matter at all beyond what these men have testified, but I have no doubt——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OLIVER in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the picture which is drawn there is a delightful one, for it seems that it is all at the instigation and insistence of the laboring men and that they are engaged practically a part of the time in smoking and reading newspapers, and, I presume, discussing political matters, and so forth. It would be interesting to know what the laboring men said before the committee upon this subject. I have never been able to find a representative of them or the men individually who indorse those propositions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator any protests signed by them against it?

Mr. BORAH. How is that?

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator any protests signed by the laboring men against it? I want the Senator to understand that personally I am against it, and I want it changed.

Mr. BORAH. Well, every man with any feeling of humanity should be against it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that depends. As I said the other day, there was a period in my life when I worked 16 hours a day, and the man who would have compelled me or the government that would have compelled me to have worked a less number of hours would have been the worst possible enemy I could have had on earth.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from New Hampshire was not working in those places and under those circumstances and in those environments which are characteristic of the places where these men must work.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was working continuously, which is not true of these men.

Mr. BORAH. The continuous work of the Senator in the place where he did work was better for him than for these men to be sitting idly at the places where they sit.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, that can not be proven.

Mr. BORAH. Yes, it can be proven; and it is proven every day of the year; it is proven by the condition in which these men are left in middle manhood; it is proven by the condition that they are in when they are thrown off after 10 or 15 years of their life, unable to earn a livelihood, broken down physically, broken down mentally, and destroyed morally.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not very profitable for the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from New Hampshire to discuss that question further, because I agree with the Senator that this system ought to be changed, and I have the assurance, as the committee had the assurance, that the manufacturers are engaged in changing it at the present time, and have already made considerable progress in that direction. I have no doubt that it will be changed, but there are very grave considerations involved in this question, and the Senator knows that it is not an easy matter overnight to change a situation of this kind, where a continuous metallurgical condition exists, and to say, "You shall not work more than eight hours a day," and stop there and let the industry go to destruction.

Mr. President, I wanted to put into the RECORD this testimony. I have no interest whatever in the question. There was a time in the dim and distant past when we had an iron industry in the State of New Hampshire, but that passed away long before I saw the light of day. We have no interest in it whatever, except in a general way. While New England has little interest in it, I want to say that I do not particularly relish the denunciation of these concerns which are operating on precisely the same principles that similar industries are being operated in every other country of the world with which they have to compete. The Senator knows that in every European country this continuous metallurgical work is carried on, and that men work 12 hours a day; at least that is my information.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho has never done anything in regard to this matter other than to present the cold facts as they have been gathered by the Department of Commerce and Labor and as they have been gathered by the committee having the matter under investigation, and the presentation of the facts is the conclusive condemnation of the work. Further than that I have not gone. The Senator from Idaho has not presented here an arraignment stronger than the arraignment that is presented by the stockholders of the United States Steel Co.; it is here upon my desk, and I presume other Senators have it. This committee recognizes that it is an indefensible condition, and seem to recognize that as a mere matter of humanity and for the purpose of preserving American citizenship, upon which the Republic must rest, some change must be had in this situation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, the directors of the Steel Corporation were not at all unanimous in that view.

Mr. BORAH. You will always find in a large group of men some men who will calculate dollars and cents rather than humanity.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true undoubtedly, and I fear it is too often true, not only in the operations of the so-called Steel Trust, but in other operations with which the Senator himself is familiar. I know that one of the directors of that company living in New England sent out thousands of letters asking that this condition should be changed and that, largely in response to what that gentleman said, the process of change is now being carried forward.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; and that, Mr .President, of itself justifies all that the Senator from Idaho has ever said, because, if it had not been a matter which appealed to the humanity of that man with extraordinary force, he would not have sent out those letters.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly not.

Mr. BORAH. It was a condition which could not be defended even by a man whose financial interests were involved.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with that.

Mr. BORAH. It being true that it is of such a condition and such a nature as to appeal to the heart and mind of such a man, it ought doubly to appeal to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. The only trouble with the Senator from Idaho is that his humanity, I fear, has run away with his discretion.

Mr. BORAH. If my discretion is going to be run away with at all, Mr. President, I want it to be run away with by humanity.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a very proper suggestion. The Senator from Idaho in other legislation has always called attention to this condition existing in the works of the so-called Steel Trust as a reason why we should legislate for the purpose of controlling the hours of labor of the workmen in the country, as a whole. I do not think the evil is quite serious enough to warrant that.

The Senator from Idaho cites what the department has found. Why, Mr. President, it is a well-known fact that the department sends out a man or a woman—one or the other—and usually a $1,200 clerk, to make these investigations, and they are likely to find something.

A condition exists at a particular moment that, perhaps, does not exist the next hour. They have got to find something. There is not a special agent of any department of this Government who is sent out to investigate anything who, if he came back without having found something, would not be—in his mind, at least—in danger of losing his job. They think they have got to find something to justify their employment, and they indulge in wild exaggerations sometimes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the evidence of the Department of Commerce and Labor breaks down, I will call the stockholders of the corporation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. They support it in full. There is not to be found anywhere a more remarkable indictment of an industrial condition than comes from those men themselves.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, I think the Senator perhaps has somewhat misjudged exactly what the stockholders meant to say; but, however that may be, it is in the record and it will speak for itself.

Mr. President, I am through. I had not intended to occupy a moment of the time of the Senate in discussing the tariff or anything relating to it. I used to do that when I was younger than I now am, and I thought I would leave it to the others at this session of Congress; but what I said was largely drawn out by certain statements made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] which I felt ought to be answered. I do not think it wise for any man in public life to indulge in general denunciation of the manufacturers of this country. They are doing a great work. There are wrongs, undoubtedly, connected with their enterprises, as there are wrongs connected with everything in life; and I think it may be well for us to give pause and ask ourselves the serious question whether we are not somewhat overworking this subject in the matter of what are supposed to be, or may be, wrongs perpetrated upon the workmen engaged in those great industries.

We can only get reform by agitation. I am glad the Senator from Idaho is an agitator upon this subjct. I think the Senator goes to an extreme length sometimes; but, after all, it is friction that develops thought; it is agitation that brings about reforms; and I will join most heartily with the Senator from Idaho in any propaganda to reform certain conditions in the steel industry of which he complains; but I am not willing to do it overnight.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator again seems to limit my indictment to the steel industry alone. I have only referred to the steel industry to-day because of the fact that it was the particular subject under discussion, and because of the further fact that the reports upon it are more complete. I have no doubt that the steel industry has an immense amount of company; so much so that I have no idea in the world that it feels at all lonesome in this business, and, when the facts are presented, it will be found that whatever has been said in reference to this industry only describes a condition rather than the singling out of a single industry.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, the Senator enlarges his indictment and applies it to manufacturers in general, I assume. The Senator nods his acquiescence. Well, Mr. President, I think the Senator is just as much mistaken in that matter as he ever was mistaken in anything in his life. It certainly does not apply to the manufacturing concerns of which I have knowledge; it does not apply to hundreds of manufacturing enterprises in the New England and other Northern States. On the contrary, the welfare of the men is being looked into with the greatest possible care. I have in mind a great manufacturing industry in my own State which employs 13,000 men and women, where the comfort of the employees is a matter of earnest solicitude on the part of the employers. Everything possible is being done for the comfort and happiness of the working people, and where they are giving fair wages to their employees. There is no friction there unless the Industrial Workers of the World, or other agitators, try to produce it.

Mr. BORAH. A great many industries in the Senator's State employ men only 8 hours a day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BORAH. The only object I have in the world in agitating the question is to compel the other manufacturing industries of the country to follow those men who are leading the way and trying to do the humane thing. But the Senator will agree with me that unless it becomes practically a universal proposition one or two industries here and there can not stand out against the competition which results from this kind of continuous employment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I differ from the Senator—and I am going to conclude with this sentence—I differ with the Senator from Idaho in the view that it is an unmixed evil for men to work more than 8 hours a day; and I take sharp issue with the Senator when, in a bill that he is going to pass through the Senate in the near future, he not only compels the contractor for the Government, but the subcontractor and the subsubcontractor to see to it that their men do not work more than 8 hours a day; and if they work a single minute over that time the contractor is to be held to accountability and suffer fines and penalties as the result of what the subcontractor, whom, perhaps, he has never seen, has done. I do not agree with the Senator on that proposition; but the Senator had votes enough to carry that on a record vote, and, of course, those of us who do not agree to it have to yield as gracefully as we can.

Mr. President, I do hope that as this debate progresses Senators will try to persuade themselves that the men who are engaged in manufacturing in this country, as a rule, are honorable, high-minded, well-meaning men; and I feel very sure that the Senator from Idaho will not be able, industrious as he is and acute as he is, to find justification for the indictment against the other manufacturing enterprises of this country which he seems to frame when he says that the Steel Trust is not by any means the only offender, but that it will be found to be a very common practice. That is all, Mr. President, I care to say.

FORT OGLETHORPE, GA.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, about two months since I reported from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill of a local nature, consideration of which has been delayed somewhat because of the pendency of another matter connected with it. That other matter is now out of the way, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, it being House bill 17029.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 17029) authorizing the Secretary of War to convert the regimental Army post at Fort Oglethorpe into a brigade post.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read. I do not remember what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. STONE obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] desired to be present when this bill was considered; in fact, he told me on several occasions that, if he were not here, he wanted to be notified before the bill was taken up for consideration. It is for that reason that I objected to the bill. The junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SANDERS] now informs me that the Senator from Wyoming has withdrawn his objection to the passage of the bill, and that being the case I will not object to its consideration at this time.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should not have made the request I did if I had not been advised that the Senator from Wyoming had withdrawn his opposition to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I was recognized, I believe, but I will yield for the consideration of this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has just entered the Chamber. If the Senator from Idaho has no objection to the present consideration of the bill, I will not object; but I did not want it to be considered in his absence.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask the status of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is being read for the information of the Senate, subject to objection.

Mr. HEYBURN. I shall be glad to hear the bill read before passing upon it.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to convert the regimental Army post at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., into a brigade post.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may locate and construct buildings necessary for the use and accommodation of the troops of the brigade at any point in the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, whether the same be contiguous to Fort Oglethorpe or not, said buildings to be used for the accommodation of part of the brigade to be located at Fort Oglethorpe: Provided, That for the fiscal year 1914 and thereafter the Secretary of War shall submit detailed estimates of any buildings and improvements to be made at said post to Congress for its approval before proceeding further to the construction thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not desire to object to the bill because there is not enough on the face of it to indicate whether or not it is objectionable. I presume the committee having charge of it has given it consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been favorably reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that the Committee on Military Affairs have considered the bill and unanimously recommended its passage.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not objecting to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Missouri, I should like to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for, which is House bill 18642.

[Mr. STONE addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that my proposed substitute shall be taken from the table, and that I may be permitted to perfect it before I offer it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No action has been taken upon the substitute. The Senator can modify it in such manner as he sees fit.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think I can best do that from my place upon the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will note the modification of the proposed substitute which the Senator from Iowa desires made.

Mr. CUMMINS. In line 22, page 3—I will send from time to time to the Secretary's desk the changes that I ask——

Mr. BAILEY. Make them in your own way.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to mention them as I propose them. In line 22, on page 3, immediately after the word "spiegeleisen," insert the words "ferrosilicon, containing no more than 15 per cent of silicon."

This was a mere omission. As everybody knows, ferrosilicon containing less than 15 per cent of silicon is simply one grade of pig iron.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, is the Senator from Iowa offering that amendment to the House bill or to his own substitute?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am perfecting my own proposed amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. CUMMINS. In line 7, page 19, paragraph 49, I desire to insert after the word "ferrosilicon," the words "containing more than 15 per centum"; also to strike out the word "fifteen," which now occurs in line 7, on page 19, and substitute "twenty." The effect of this change is to include ferrosilicon containing more than 15 per cent of silicon as one of the ferro-alloys and to raise the duty upon the entire paragraph by 5 per cent, making it 20 per cent instead of 15 per cent.

I desire to insert after the word "tools" and the semicolon, in line 17, page 11, the following:

Crucible or tool steel, in whatever stage of manufacture, not otherwise provided for.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] in his address a few days ago sharply criticized my proposed amendment because I attached a duty of $1.60 per ton to steel ingots, and he called the attention of the Senate to the fact that there was a kind of steel which might be imported in ingots of very much greater value than the ordinary ingot.

The Senator from Pennsylvania seemed to think that I had made a grave mistake in forgetting or in not knowing of these higher grades of steel or so-called steel. I did not make, Mr. President, any mistake about it, although it may be that the phraseology which I used to express the idea might be made somewhat clearer. The steel mentioned by the Senator from Pennsylvania is not steel at all. A metal composed of 18 per cent of tungsten with a slight percentage of titanium and vanadium is not steel and is not recognized as steel scientifically anywhere, although it is often termed steel in common conversation. Such a metal is an alloy used as a substitute for steel, and I supposed that I had provided for it fully in paragraph 28, which contains this description:

Alloys used as substitutes for steel in the manufacture of tools.

I have no doubt this description will cover the particular metal the Senator from Pennsylvania had in view; but I do not want to leave my amendment susceptible to any misconstruction whatever, and therefore I have proposed the addition which I now send to the desk.

Having made the change just suggested in paragraph 28, it becomes necessary to make a change in paragraph 4, which I do by adding after the word "forms," in line 2, page 4, the words "not exceeding in value 1 cent per pound."

I desire to change paragraph 54. The paragraph as I originally proposed it reads as follows:

54. Monazite sand and thorite, 3 cents per pound; thorium, oxide of and salts of, gas mantles treated with chemicals or metallic oxides, and gas-mantle scraps consisting in chief value of metallic oxides, 30 per cent ad valorem.

After very considerable reflection I have reached the conclusion that the only commodity properly dutiable in this paragraph is the gas mantle; and inasmuch as the thorium out of which the gas mantle is largely made comes from monazite sand, and inasmuch as we do not produce any monazite sand in this country, although there is some, but apparently not accessible enough to warrant gathering together, I have concluded that monazite sand and thorite should be put upon the free list, as well as mantle scrap, and I propose, therefore, to change the paragraph to read as follows:

Gas mantles treated with chemicals or metallic oxides, 30 per cent ad valorem. Monazite sand and thorite, oxide and salts of thorium, and gas-mantle scrap consisting in chief value of metallic oxides shall be admitted free of duty.

This will leave more ample protection to the manufacturer of gas mantles and leave his raw material to enter the country free.

I change paragraph 53 by adding to it:

Tungsten-bearing ores shall pay a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem.

I believed, Mr. President, that that was the true conception of the law when I offered my amendment, and I believe so still; but I have been presented with a decision of the General Board of Appraisers that seems to create some doubt of the application of that general section of the act of 1909 to tungsten ores, and therefore I make it certain by this change, for I intend that tungsten ores shall bear a duty of 10 per cent.

I add a paragraph to the proposed amendment, as follows:

Molders' and metal workers' patterns, patterns for machinery, and all similar patterns, of which metal is the component part of chief value, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The value of these patterns consists wholly, or practically wholly, in labor bestowed upon them. They are the models from which castings are taken; they require a very large expenditure of work and skill; and therefore I believe they should bear the duty I have suggested.

I strike out, in lines 4 and 5, on page 21, the word "thirty-five" and substitute "twenty-five." The amendment as originally drafted proposed a duty of 35 per cent upon automobiles and parts of automobiles. I have reached the conclusion that there is no possible justification for a duty of more than 25 per cent on automobiles. The bill passed by the House contains a duty of 35 per cent, I believe, which is altogether too high.

I do not intend just at this moment to enter upon a discussion of the automobile paragraph; but I may say that the United States manufactures two-thirds of all the automobiles manufactured in the world. It exports more automobiles than are manufactured in any other country on earth except France. We export more automobiles than England makes altogether, more automobiles than Germany makes altogether, or than Italy makes. We make in this country about 175,000 automobiles per year, and we exported last year $20,000,000 worth of automobiles. Germany made about 15,000 automobiles, England between 10,000 and 15,000, and France about 50,000. France exported, I think, something like 3,000 cars, and we exported, as I have said, $20,000,000 worth of automobiles.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Will the Senator please state what the duty on automobiles is under the existing law?

Mr. CUMMINS. The duty at present is 45 per cent ad valorem. The House bill reduced that, as I remember, to 35 per cent. I do not look upon automobiles as a luxury. They have come into such general use, they are needed and desired by men of such moderate income, that it seems to me in the highest degree wrong to keep the duty above 25 per cent. We exported, as I have said, $20,000,000 worth of automobiles last year, and we imported about $2,000,000 worth. Automobiles are a little like fancy patterns in silks and high-grade cotton; one's desire is governed somewhat by his taste or his liking for a particular kind of car. At any rate, no one can defend from the protective standpoint a duty of more than 25 per cent upon this particular commodity; and I have accordingly changed the proposal which I originally made.

Thus modified, Mr. President, I offer the amendment by way of a substitute for House bill 18642; and inasmuch as I intend to say a few words upon the general subject in reply to the very learned arguments made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and inasmuch as but one of those Senators is present, and I am sure that the others would feel that they were deprived of one of the opportunities of their lives if I proceeded in their absence, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Bacon	Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Bailey	Dillingham	Myers	Smoot
Borah	du Pont	Nelson	Stephenson
Bourne	Fletcher	O'Gorman	Sutherland
Bradley	Foster	Oliver	Swanson
Bristow	Gallinger	Overman	Tillman
Bryan	Gore	Page	Townsend
Burnham	Gronna	Paynter	Warren
Burton	Heyburn	Percy	Watson
Catron	Hitchcock	Perkins	Wetmore
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Williams
Chilton	Jones	Rayner	Works
Clark, Wyo.	Lea	Richardson
Clarke, Ark.	Lippitt	Root
Cullom	Lodge	Sanders

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate on important business.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona] has been called from the Chamber on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, with the indulgence of the Senate, I intend now to reply as briefly as I can, with due regard to the importance of the subject, to the speeches made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

I think I ought to say at the very outset that if there be no further discussion of the amendment I have proposed after I have finished, I intend to ask a vote upon it to-night. It is only fair, I think, to make that statement, in order that Senators may arrange their time accordingly.

I reiterate a statement that I have very frequently made. I view this subject from the standpoint of a protectionist, and I subject every duty which I have proposed in my amendment to the protective test. I have no desire to enlarge the importations of competitive products. I have the keenest desire to help perfect a system that will at once enable American producers to supply our markets, but prohibit American producers from monopolizing our markets under arrangements which enable them to exact unfair, unjust, unreasonable profits from those who buy and consume.

This leads me for a moment to consider a question which has been propounded more than once during this debate, especially by the senior Senator from Idaho, with regard to the classification which one makes when he speaks of producers and consumers.

It is said in a somewhat triumphant way that inasmuch as we are practically all producers and all consumers, there can not be any such classification or division of the people. To me it is a superficial suggestion. The steel industry of the United States is the producer of the commodities embraced within the schedule now under consideration, and all the rest of the people are either directly or indirectly consumers of those commodities. There is always a producing class of a particular article or commodity, and there is always a consuming class of that article or commodity, and therefore when I say it is our duty to give some heed to the needs, wants, and equities of the consuming class, I am not uttering a vain generality. I am dividing the people of the country accurately when I use that phrase, and I therefore reiterate that it is our duty to protect them as well as to protect the producer; and whenever, as I remarked the other day, the duty upon a particular article is raised so high that the price, following after, reaches the point of the duty and its effect is not to correspondingly increase the price of the things that the consumers of that particular article produce and sell, the protective tariff becomes absolutely indefensible. It is in the hope that we can maintain this just equilibrium and be able to vindicate the policy by the result which I have just indicated, that I have so persistently appealed to the Senate and to the country for a readjustment of these duties so that it will not be within the power of any producer to raise his price to a point that will exclude the remainder of the people from participation in the advantages and the benefits of that increase in price.

I remarked the other day, and I repeat it now, that my first proposition with respect to the metal schedule is that pig iron can be produced as cheaply in the United States, taken as a whole, as it can be produced in the countries with which we must compete.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator leaves that particular phase of the matter, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator know what percentage of the population of the United States is engaged either as employers owning, or as laborers working in, the various factories that make steel and metal? About what percentage would they form of the total population of the United States?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know, Mr. President; but, of course, the percentage is very small.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator think it would run over 1½ per cent?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it would run 1 per cent of the entire population of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I mean by that, of course, including the families dependent upon the laborers.

Mr. CUMMINS. Assuming that we have substantially 100,000,000 population, it may be said that the steel industry would draw within its scope three or four million people, which would be more than 1 per cent, but I would not undertake to name a proportion——

Mr. SMOOT. At least 5 per cent.

Mr. CUMMINS. With enough accuracy to warrant comment upon it. At any rate, it is a very small proportion of the whole people. But it is the most important industry in the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The most important protected manufacturing industry.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is quite true. It is because it is the most important industry, because it employs more capital and more men and has more power than any other manufacturing enterprise in this country, that I am so earnest and so persistent with respect to a proper readjustment of the duties covering the commodities embraced within this schedule.

I said the other day, and I may as well comment upon that now, in view of the developments that have occurred since I made my statement, that in my judgment the iron and steel products covered by this schedule could be sold in this country and to the people abroad for $100,000,000 less than they are sold for now, and that those who produce the articles would still reap a fair and reasonable profit upon the capital invested, continuing to pay the wages that are now prevailing and continuing to do all the work that is now being done, so that no man who lives in America would lose a single day's labor by reason of the reduction in price.

When the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] presented his resolution for further information, followed as it was by the introduction of the article or the news statement in the Wall Street Journal, I took occasion to refer to the report of the United States Steel Corporation for the year 1911. I now intend to refer to its report for 1910 and compare it with 1911. Generally it can be said that 1911 was not a good year in this country for the manufacturer. It was bad as compared with some prior years. The volume of output was diminished, and it is quite probable that the prices in some respects at which these articles were sold were less. But it is instructive to look at the results of the work of the United States Steel Corporation during the year before.

One might think that I had some feeling against that corporation. It is not so. I want very clearly to distinguish between the duty of Congress so to adjust its laws that men can not take advantage of each other in the struggle of life and the obligation of men to refrain from taking advantage of each other.

The United States Steel Corporation is engaged in business, and it is idle to expect that it will sell its products for any less than it can get in the warfare in which it is engaged; and therefore when I refer to the history of this corporation it is not as some paper has said with regard to my remarks, an exhibition of malice. If I were to attempt to characterize my own feeling about it, I should say that it was an exhibition, rather, of great admiration for the capacity of these men, coupled with very great regret that our laws are so weak and so ineffective as to permit the results which are recorded in this report.

We will never be able to correct the mistakes that have occurred. It is marvelous to me that the Congress of the United States could sit here all these years that have gone and allow to remain unchanged laws under which such an organization as the United States Steel Corporation could have been brought together. It is strange to me that we are proposing to adjourn this session without amending our laws so as to make it impossible that this instance shall ever have a successor; that in all our talk here about getting away, in the hurry and desire to leave Washington, we seem to be blind to and forgetful of the fact that aside from the tariff and aside from the Lorimer case and aside from the appropriation bills and aside from the Panama Canal bill, there is an imperious necessity for a supplement to the antitrust laws, so that in the future, at least, the American people can and will be protected against the power that was created when this corporation was organized.

But turning to the report that I mentioned, this company ought to be complimented for one thing, at least. It makes an annual report, not secretly, to the Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but it makes it so that all men can read it, and there is no difficulty whatsoever in knowing what the United States Steel Corporation has been doing during the 10 or 11 years of its existence.

We find that for the year 1910 it reports:

> The total earnings of all [its] properties after deducting all expenses incident to operations, including those for ordinary repairs and maintenance (approximately $41,000,000), employees' compensation under bonus plan, provisional allowance for corporation excise tax, and also interest on bonds and fixed charges of the subsidiary companies, amounted to $141,054,754.51.

Mr. SMOOT. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. CUMMINS. From page 5. The table then deducts from that the following items:

> Less charges and allowances for the following purposes, viz, sinking funds on bonds of subsidiary companies, $2,176,041.81.

No one will claim, of course, that in ascertaining the profit of the corporation there can be deducted a sinking fund for the purpose of retiring capitalization. When this company proceeds, as it has been proceeding, it will after a few years out of its profits have retired all of its outstanding indebtedness, and therefore all its earnings will be applicable to the payment of dividends upon its stock.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator recognizes the fact, however, that the working capital provided for the subsidiary companies is not included in the capital stock of the company.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know how the $25,000,000, which was originally collected as working capital, is distributed, but that does not make any difference. This company was organized and issued certain bonds. Its subsidiary companies had theretofore issued certain bonds, and they constitute, together with this stock, the capital of the company; and it is the policy of the company—and it is a wise enough policy, too—to take out of its profits every year a sum to pay off its bonds, or create a sinking fund for that purpose.

I am not criticizing the fact that it is doing so. I am only analyzing its table to show what the real results are. The next item is—

Depreciation and extraordinary replacement funds, $22,140,555.53.

An extraordinary replacement fund, as those words are used by this corporation, really means a fund for additions to its property. It is quite right that there should be a sum deducted for depreciation, but there should be no sum deducted for an extraordinary replacement fund; and the remainder of this report shows that about $8,000,000 was used the year before out of this fund for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator wants to be accurate in the matter. As I understand the extraordinary replacement fund it is this: When machines are thrown out and others purchased to take their place that is a replacement fund and not an addition to the plant. Am I not correct in that?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understand it, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think that is the application made of it here, and if that were the application it would be altogether wrong. The proper way in which to keep its books, if that were done, would be to charge up to capital the value of the new machinery in excess of the value of the old machinery that was displaced. But that is not done by this company, and it is not what this extraordinary replacement fund means.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I do not know anything about what this replacement fund means, but it seems to me, if the Senator is correct in his statement, it is for additions, and the term "replacement" is a misnomer. It can hardly be a replacement, but it is an addition, it seems to me.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is quite true. If it simply used the word "replacement" that would be quite understandable. It must have had some purpose in using the words "extraordinary replacement"; and if the Senator from Utah will go further along in the report he will see what that means. I do not wish to take up time in discussing it. The report shows what it means exactly. It means that property that it does not want to use any longer is thrown away and new property is put in its place.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understand it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly; and that is a capital account. It is not an expense account. That is what I am suggesting. I will not discuss it now with the Senator from Utah. He knows just as well as I do that when worthless property or property that is no longer desirable for use is taken out and thrown away the value of the new property in excess of the value of the old property, when new, ought to be charged to the capital account or construction account, and not to expenses.

Mr. SMOOT. I dispute that. I know that if a mill of any kind uses a piece of machinery until it is worn out and it is replaced, that should not be added to the capital stock of the concern. If it did, the capital stock would increase immensely. I do not think that the $22,000,000 found in the statement, taking into consideration the immense amount of machinery that the company has, is an extraordinary amount for repairs or replacement of machinery worn out. Now, I do not——

Mr. CUMMINS. There has been $41,000,000 taken out for repairs before this item is reached.

Mr. SMOOT. The life of a mill of this kind and many other mills is not to exceed 10 years. Companies must take a part of the profit each year to provide for replacements.

I am not going to discuss the question as to whether this is too much or too little. I thought the Senator wanted to get at the real purpose of a replacement fund. I do not believe that a replacement fund should be charged to the expense account.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. Allow me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Allow me to answer the Senator from Utah a moment. There is every year charged to the depreciation fund a certain percentage of the value of the entire property. That depreciation fund, if properly apportioned, pays for the property when it is worn out. The Senator from Utah knows how it is done. If I do not know very much about the tariff, I do know a good deal about construction accounts, for I have been all my life in a professional way engaged in dealing with them; and I know what is proper to be charged to a construction account or capital account, and what is proper to be charged to a maintenance, repair, or expense account. This is the rule which is adopted by every intelligent and honest corporation with which I am familiar, and it is the rule adopted by this corporation in everything save the extraordinary replacement. It gives warning to the public and suggests just what it is when it terms it an extraordinary replacement account.

If a railroad has a locomotive engine and it wears out and it buys an engine twice as large to take its place, what does it do? If it has kept no depreciation account, it charges the original value of the engine displaced to expense and the added value of the new engine to capital. If it has a wooden bridge and finds it necessary to replace it with a steel bridge, it charges the cost of the original bridge to expense of maintenance and the added value of the steel bridge to capital.

That is precisely what the United States Steel Corporation does, and very properly does. But then it comes to a class of replacements that do not come within that rule, and it calls them extraordinary replacements. That is, if I correctly understand the report, when it finds that it can make a little more money out of a larger plant, a larger converter, a larger mill, it scraps or sells the old mill, the old converter, and it then charges up to extraordinary replacement the expense of building new and larger converters or other mills.

I have no objection to the company doing this, but I do have very great objection when we are trying to ascertain what profit the company is making to have such expenditures charged up to the expenses of the corporation instead of to the capital of the corporation. I proceed.

There is deducted also the payment for the interest upon the 50-year 5 per cent gold bonds. That is right; $13,803,476.64; also the interest upon the 60-year 5 per cent gold bonds of $9,563,383.89. It then seeks to deduct from its net earnings $5,881,089.47 for the creation of a sinking fund upon its own bonds. These bonds, just recited, it desires to retire some time; they will be due some time; and therefore it creates from year to year a fund which when these bonds mature will pay them. It is creating a fund out of the profits which it from year to year earns for that purpose, and not only does it charge up the sinking fund itself, but it charged $1,831,089.47 for interest upon bonds that are in the sinking fund. It then charges $25,219,677 for the dividends on the preferred stock and $25,415,125 for dividends upon the common stock, and after all these sums are deducted from the net earnings there remains a sum of $36,772,382.82.

Mr. GORE. That is velvet.

Mr. CUMMINS. My friend from Oklahoma says that is velvet. That is a part of the velvet, but it is a small part. Now, let us see just what this account would be if it were properly reckoned. If we deduct or eliminate the item for the sinking fund of the subsidiary companies and eliminate $8,000,000 of the $22,000,000 of the extraordinary replacement—and that is a very small estimate—and also eliminate the $5,000,000 and more for the sinking fund of its own bonds, with their interest, and eliminate the dividends upon its stock, just what would happen? We would have a net earning by this company for the year 1910, after paying everything for operation, maintenance, repair, and all the great wages of which we have heard so much, and after paying all the interest upon its bonds, but paying nothing upon its stock, of $103,464,315.47.

That is what this company did in 1910. The bonds of this company represented substantially all its honest capital. There never ought to have been any such amount of preferred stock and there should have been no common stock whatever. Whatever the American people pay as dividends upon the preferred and common stock is just so much that we can charge up to our own negligence. I do not charge it half so much to the avarice or the wrong of those who organized the United States Steel Corporation as I do to the American Congress. Think of it! If honest capital only had been recognized in that organization and it had gone on and done as well as it has done for the year 1910, after paying 7 per cent interest on half of it, 5 per cent interest on the other half, it would have made $100,000,000 in excess of interest upon its capital.

Let us see how that would affect the price of its product. Of the finished products of iron and steel during the year 1910 it sold 10,733,995 tons. If it made $100,000,000 more upon the 10,000,000 tons that it needed to have made in order to compensate its real capital fairly and honestly, it could have sold these 10,000,000 tons on an average of $10 per ton less than it did sell the 10,000,000 tons for.

I do not pretend that this is mathematically accurate, because there is in the product a small amount of spelter, a small amount of sulphite of iron, and a large number of barrels of cement, but the conclusion is accurate enough to enforce the idea that I have in view. But suppose that we allow the preferred stock to represent honest value and take the dividends upon it from the profit I have already named, we still have $78,244,638 of profit, after making all the payments I have suggested, leaving nothing unrewarded save the common stock; and there is no man in America who will assert that the common stock of this great company represented anything whatsoever except the genius of the men who organized it and the weakness of the law under which it was organized.

If we so diminish the profit, it still remains true that the United States Steel Corporation could, in 1910, have sold its entire product for substantially $7 a ton less than the price it received and had good wages for its men, good maintenance for its works, a good reward for its capital, and good promise for the future.

Now, what do my friends on this side of the Chamber say about that? What are you going to say to the American people in the face of a showing of that sort All that you do say is that is true that the United States Steel Corporation is unjustly and excessively protected, but it has a great many poor, feeble associates that must be protected, even though it needs no help. In a measure that is true. I have heard it said elsewhere, but I am not one of those who believe, that the United States Steel Corporation has no advantage over its competitors. I think it has a very considerable advantage. I think that as conditions now are it produces for less, taken as a whole, than any of its rivals, although there are some things which it produces which it can not produce as cheaply as some of its competitors. But will the Senator from Utah say to the Senate or to the country that the United States Steel Corporation can, upon an average, turn out its product for $7 per ton less than can its competitors?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I certainly would not make any such statement, because it would be absolutely untrue. The Senator has been figuring upon the basis that there was just as much made on a ton of steel rails as there would be upon a ton of highly finished product, because he has taken the total product of all classes of steel made by the United States Steel Corporation.

Further, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in all branches of business they have successful years and lean years. The year 1910 was a very successful year for the United States Steel Corporation, while for the year 1911, figuring exactly upon the same basis as the Senator has figured, the amount of net income was $32,106,888.04 less than it was for the year 1910. With 10,000,000 tons per annum produced, that means in itself $3.20 less profit per ton made in the year 1911 than was made in the year 1910.

I say to the Senator that, of course, I would not claim the United States Steel Corporation could make goods for $7 a ton less than its competitors; that is out of the question. I would also say that the comparison by the ton is not a fair comparison upon which to base a reduction on any one item. I know the Senator will agree with me there.

Mr. President, I could perhaps point out some highly finished product made by the United States Steel Corporation where a reduction of $3 or $4 or $5 a ton would not ruin it, whereas as to great quantities, many tons, if a reduction were made, it would take off all the profit.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, my admiration of the skill of the Senator from Utah increases every time he addresses himself to this subject or to any other subject.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I should be glad—I will put it in that form—if Senators would give me information on this point: What has been the effect on prices since the Steel Trust was formed? Have commodities which they manufacture and produce become cheaper or have they become dearer since the Steel Trust was formed? In the case of the Harvester Trust we farmers know by experience what the result of that has been. For our binders, our mowers, and all other agricultural machinery, notwithstanding the combination, notwithstanding the reduction in the cost of production and in the cost of marketing the product, we have had to pay a bigger price than we paid before the Harvester Trust was formed. Has that been the case with the Steel Trust? I should like to hear something on that point.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, answering the Senator from Minnesota first——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator goes to that——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator goes to that, and in keeping with it, I will say I agree with the Senator that the United States Steel Corporation has some advantage over most other companies; but is not that advantage rather exaggerated, in view of the fact that during the last three or four years the so-called independent companies have been getting a larger and larger and and the Steel Corporation has been getting a smaller and smaller percentage of the total trade? They are in competition, as I understand, to some extent.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will answer the Senator from Mississippi in turn. Replying to the Senator from Minnesota, I may say that the United States Steel Corporation was the combination of several existing trusts. I think that the prices on the whole are higher than they were in 1901; certainly the prices have been higher during the last 10 years than they were during the 10 years before. It is impossible, I think, to close one's eyes to the fact that when in 1901 the United States Steel Corporation came together, it absorbed several existing combinations, which, in and of themselves, had dominated the industry in which they were engaged. For instance, the American Steel & Wire Co., with which my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] is very familiar, became a part of the United States Steel Corporation. I do not believe that the price of wire was raised immediately after—possibly not at all—the United States Steel Corporation was organized, but the American Steel & Wire Co., which was substantially a monopoly, was organized in 1898 or 1899—I think in 1898—and the prices of some forms of wire which it manufactured almost doubled immediately after its organization, and the United States Steel Co., I suppose, has maintained those prices, although I am not sure about that.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I want to add, in that connection, from my own experience and certain knowledge, that since they got control of the barbed-wire business, the barbed wire has deteriorated, especially what we call their black or painted wire. That, as well as the galvanized wire, has become of an inferior quality. It is not to be compared in durability with the wire we had 20 years ago. It will not stand heat or cold as did the wire we had in the old times.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I think I can give some information in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. I think that to-day the price of steel products is probably lower than it was in 1901, but it is not so low as it was in 1899. I do not think after the organization of the Steel Corporation there was any material advance in prices over the prices which had generally prevailed in the year or two preceding; but the Steel Corporation has aimed to maintain—and I should like the Senator from Iowa to listen to this, because I think he will probably know something about it—what might be termed a moderate or what they term a moderate level of prices, an average level. But what the Senator from Iowa says about the events of the two or three years immediately preceding is correct. There had been combinations formed which did advance the prices. Nobody will maintain, Mr. President, that the organization of the Steel Corporation or the combination or consolidation of individual plants into great concerns is done either for the purpose of reducing prices or has the effect of reducing prices, nor, as I believe, will they contend that it is for the good of the public.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. If that be true, what is the justification, either on moral, ethical, or legal grounds, for the creation of a trust?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not trying to justify it. That is just exactly what I am saying, that it would be far better for the country, as I said the other day, if the business were in the hands of individuals and if each individual managed his own plant and ran his own factory.

Now, I want to say a word with regard to deterioration in barbed wire and in fencing wire. I think the deterioration to which the Senator alludes dates further back than the organization of the Steel Corporation. It began some years before the organization of the American Steel & Wire Co., but was brought about by the efforts of the manufacturers to reduce the quantity of zinc which they placed upon the wire, and consequently they wiped the wire too close, and the coating is not heavy enough to give it that protection against the weather that it otherwise would have. I do not think that is necessarily chargeable to the combination. It was begun by individual manufacturers.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, answering the inquiry of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], I suggest that, while the United States Steel Corporation has the power to reduce prices and, I think, very seriously injure its competitors, it has been a benevolent despot, and I think it has been in the minds of those who have managed it that it would be wise if the independents were permitted to grow, so as to maintain at least the appearance of a competition and rivalry that would shield the Steel Corporation from the charge of monopoly or unfair treatment of those engaged in the same business.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him there?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator is aware of the fact, I presume, that it is the gospel of one of the candidates for the Presidency to change the antitrust law and put all corporations under a commission, which is to regulate them and fix prices and prevent discriminations, as in the case of railroads. I should be glad to hear the Senator's views on that question.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I would be glad to respond to the Senator from Minnesota if I dared to do so. The reason I do not dare to do so is because it would take so much of the time that I desire to devote to the discussion of the tariff that the Senate would become impatient. I may say, however, that I am a believer in competition. I believe that the country can be restored to fair and substantial competition. My views upon that subject are rather accurately and somewhat comprehensively set out in a bill that I have introduced and which is now before the Committee on Interstate Commerce. If that committee shall be as diligent as I hope it will be, we may be able to secure a report; and I will defer my remarks upon that subject until the report comes in. [Laughter.]

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was not quite accurate—possibly, however, I may have misunderstood him—if in his last suggestion he referred to 1911. If he did, he was in error, according to my figures. If I were to recast the account of the United States Steel Corporation for 1911 in the same way that I have pointed it out for 1910, the result would be this: That, including dividends of 7 per cent upon the preferred stock, the net earnings were $44,831,585.65, and excluding dividends on stock, the net earnings were $70,051,262.65. The tons produced were 9,476,248. If we exclude all dividends, there could have been a reduction of $7 per ton upon the average without injuring the capital of the company. If we include the $25,000,000 of dividends, there could have been a reduction of more than $4 per ton without impairing in any way the profit upon the honest capital.

I instance, Mr. President, these results not for the purpose of bringing them forward as guides for the establishment of tariff duties, but to answer the oft-repeated statement that if we reduce these duties so that the present producers of iron and steel are compelled to sell their product at a less price than they now sell, somebody will go out of business—either the Steel Corporation or the independents. There are abundant profits remaining after these prices are reduced; they are beyond the amount that I suggested the other day when I said that we could save $100,000,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him whether or not, in his judgment, it would decrease the volume of the business of the Steel Trust to adopt the suggestions in his proposed amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it would increase the volume of business of the Steel Trust.

Mr. HEYBURN. I asked if it would decrease the volume of their business?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it would have any effect upon that particular matter. I think the Steel Trust can exterminate its rivals if it desires to do it. I think it can do it under the present duty, and I think it could do it under any reduced duty.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator thinks it would do it under a reduced duty?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not believe so.

Mr. HEYBURN. What would be accomplished, then, by an adjustment of the duty on the articles that are controlled by the Steet Trust?

Mr. CUMMINS. I would hope that the Steel Trust, fearing that it might meet a formidable competitor from abroad, would itself reduce the price of the articles and that its competitors in this country would also reduce their price; and in that way the people would receive or could receive some benefit from the reduction in duties.

Mr. HEYBURN. Do you think they would reduce the cost to the purchaser or the consumer and still maintain the volume of business?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do. I think the tendency would be to increase the volume of their business, rather than to decrease it.

Mr. HEYBURN. But the profit would be less.

Mr. CUMMINS. It might be less, but it would be ample.

Mr. HEYBURN. If they increased the volume that might compensate for lessened profits.

Mr. CUMMINS. I thought the Senator was asking whether the volume would be increased as compared with the business done by independent companies.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I mean in the abstract.

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe there would be an increase of business, as there nearly always is an increase in the volume of business when prices are reduced, simply because people are better able to buy under reduced prices than they are with the abnormal or unreasonably high prices.

I repeat what I said when interrupted by the Senator from Idaho, that I am not using this as a measure of the duties. I have other information, which to me is very much more conclusive and satisfactory and which I submitted to the Senate upon a former occasion, with regard to the duties necessary to protect this industry.

I am using these reports simply to show that the fear which it was sought to create here, that if we reduce the duties the United States Steel Corporation might exist, but that the independents or smaller companies would have to go out of business, is without foundation. I think I have shown beyond any reasonable controversy that the prices in this country might be reduced far beyond the reduction which I have proposed in the duties and that still the independent or smaller companies would earn enough on their capital to encourage them in still further expanding their business.

Mr. HEYBURN. One more question, if the Senator will permit.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Would the Steel Trust in consideration of their reduced profits reduce wages?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think so. The wages in this country are not determined by the profits of a particular industry. The United States Steel Corporation pays no higher wages on the whole than are paid by a rival corporation with much less profit. I am not now inquiring whether the corporation is to be blamed for not dividing its profits with its employees. That is not the way business is carried on in this country, but I say the wages of a particular enterprise or manufacturing concern are not fixed with reference to the profits of that particular concern. The wages are determined by the general standard of life in our country, and so long as the United States Steel Corporation or any other corporation engaged in that business can make a fair profit out of its production wages will not be reduced, of course. It would be charging them with inhumanity, as well as charging them with want of intelligence, to believe that wages would be reduced under those circumstances.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have here to-day heard them charged with inhumanity.

Mr. CUMMINS. You have not heard the Senator from Iowa charging them in tariff debate with inhumanity.

Mr. OLIVER. Before the Senator from Iowa departs from the consideration of this matter I should like to have him apply his reasoning to the case of the Lackawanna Steel Co., for instance, which last year showed an average profit, without paying any dividends, of 11 cents a ton on its entire product.

Mr. CUMMINS. It would be utterly impossible for me to apply it to the business of the Lackawanna Steel Co. I have never seen any report of that company. I have never analyzed its work. I do not know anything about the sagacity or skill of its managers. There is no business in the world that has not its derelicts; there is no business that does not leave behind it certain wrecks and failures. It is the history of business life in the United States, I think, that 90 per cent of the men engaged in independent business have some time during the course of their business lives failed. At least I remember that it is a very large percentage. We can not guarantee by any tariff law the capacity to carry on a great business in competition with other people.

Mr. OLIVER. I will say that the plant of the Lackawanna Co. is the most modern. It has been built in the last 10 years, and completed in the last one or two years. It is located in the city of Buffalo, on the lake, and it has every possible advantage of manufacture. I have never heard its management criticized. But somehow or other it made only 11 cents a ton last year.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. In view of the press of business to-morrow, which I need not enumerate, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. HEYBURN. I hope the Senate will not meet at that hour.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not a debatable motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. I can express my dissent from the proposition. If I can not do it now, I will do it later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PAGE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. BACON. Let us have a division.

There were, on a division—ayes 28, noes 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is carried.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest that the Chair put the question again. Hands were held up on the other side of the Chamber after the decision was announced.

Mr. GALLINGER. I object.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the statement of the Chair with respect to the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They were not ordered. Only two or three supported the demand. The motion is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. The regular order.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have now submitted all that I desire to submit with respect to the collateral matter of profits as shown by the report of the United States Steel Corporation, and if a proposition is subject to proof at all, I think I have established that there can be a very material reduction in the prices of these products without injuring the prosperity or taking away the reasonable reward of those engaged in the business.

I now come to the reply which I intend to make to the arguments submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I restate my proposition: That pig iron, which is the basic material of all these products, can be produced more cheaply or as cheaply in the United States as in any other country of the world. I do not in that statement include China. There are sporadic productions in China which may fall under the cost of productions in the United States. If the Senate believes that pig iron can be produced as cheaply in this country as in any other country, then it has only to determine the cost of converting pig iron entering into the various commodities to which a duty is to be attached; and I want to explain to the Senate the basis of the measure which I have submitted as a substitute for the Democratic bill.

I have assumed that pig iron in the hands of various manufacturers in this country has cost them no more than pig iron in the hands of their rivals in other countries. I am willing to say to my brother Republicans that thereafter I will assume that labor in our country costs twice as much as labor in competitive countries. I do not believe it is true, for I believe that in many of our operations, although we pay higher wages, the labor cost is not greater than it is abroad. The reason of that is that we do business upon a larger scale than any other country in the world. We make things therefore more cheaply than any other country in the world so far as concerns the employment of machinery.

Let me restate what I said about the automobiles. There is not a country in the world that makes as many automobiles as one single concern in the United States. I pause. I did not state that accurately. There is one concern in the United States which will make next year more automobiles than all the manufacturers of any other country on the earth. That company can employ machinery to an extent unknown elsewhere. It can make operations through machinery which are utterly impossible to its rivals across the sea.

Just so with many forms of iron and steel. Our enterprises are so much larger than they are abroad that they employ machinery to so much greater advantage than can their competitors that our labor cost, though the wages are higher, is in many instances lower than the labor cost abroad.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. Gladly.

Mr. NELSON. I interrupt the Senator from Iowa for the purpose of inquiring whether it would not be agreeable to him to have the Senate adjourn at this time, and he can resume his remarks in the morning.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not feel like deciding that matter. I have said to all the Senators who have asked me about it that I rather expected to close to-night and that a vote would be taken upon my amendment. But I did not anticipate then that so much of the time would be occupied by interruptions. It will require an hour at least for me to conclude what I have to say upon the subject. I might compress it within three-quarters of an hour, but that is not quite likely. Therefore the Senate may do as it thinks wise, and I will be entirely content.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. It is desirable that there should be an executive session for a very few minutes. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] was fatigued and went home, and he asked me when he left if I would make the motion. If it suits the Senator from Iowa, I will make that motion.

Mr. CUMMINS. Under the present conditions I do not feel that I ought to control the matter, although it is very courteous and kind on the part of Senators to suggest that I may do so. As I have said, whatever the Senate desires to do in that respect will be agreeable to me.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no desire to ask a continuance of the session if the Senator from Iowa feels disinclined to proceed further to-night, but I am exceedingly anxious to see progress made. I think it is the general sentiment that we should get to a vote on the substitute before we adjourn this evening, and I think with a little patience we might do that and have the executive session too. Unless the Senator from Iowa feels the fatigue of speech and would prefer to discontinue, I would myself be very glad to see that much progress made to-night.

Mr. CUMMINS. I never felt better in my life. I was about to say never so fresh, but that might be misunderstood. Therefore, whatever the Senate does, it must do without any regard to me.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator can stand the fatigue of speaking, surely we can remain, and I hope the Senate will hear him through and then vote on his substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I am compelled to restate an argument every half hour or 15 minutes, it will greatly prolong my remarks. I am compelled to say again that my amendment is based upon, first, the proposition that pig iron can be produced as cheaply in the United States as anywhere in the world; second, upon the proposition that labor costs twice as much in the United States as in any rival country. I am willing to allow every duty that will be found in my amendment to be tested by that standard.

I would like to know if there is a Senator here who believes that we ought to make a tariff bill upon the hypothesis that labor costs more than twice as much here as abroad; that is, in the iron and steel industry. If there is, then I intend to satisfy even him, for while assuming that labor costs twice as much here as abroad I have added in every case an additional sum so that even the most captious of the protectionists would not be able to quarrel with or question my results.

Now, I intend to ask your consideration to the table presented a few days ago by the Senator from Utah, the conclusion of which is that the labor cost which enters into a ton of pig iron is $4.50. That is true only in the sense that the entire value of pig iron or the material which enters into pig iron may be labor. There is a sense in which that can be sustained. I remarked upon that the other day, and I do not intend to repeat it. But I ask you to turn with me to the table supplied to us by the Bureau of Corporations. We have here a table, on page 16 of part 2, of the report that comprises 106,268,728 tons of iron ore mined during the period from 1902 to 1906. The average labor cost per ton of all these tons of ore comprised in the table is 45 cents. We have here information from the Marquette Range, the Menominee Range, the Gogebic Range, the Vermilion Range, and the Mesabi Range, and the labor cost is 45 cents; other mining cost is 37 cents; the royalty is 25 cents; making a total at the mine on a ton of ore of $1.07. The railroad freight upon each ton of ore is 67 cents. That has been reduced, but that is what it was when this table was made. The Lake freight was 74 cents, making a cost at the lower lake ports of $2.48. There is added 16 cents a ton for general charges, making a total of $2.64 a ton at the lower lake ports.

Mr. SMOOT. That is for the ore?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is for the ore alone. Now, if the Senate will remember that carefully, I come forward to the next table, and one upon which I commented at very great length before, namely, a table showing the cost of producing pig iron.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Allow me to finish this thought, and then I will gladly yield.

In that table the cost of the metallic mixture for a ton of the highest priced pig iron is stated by the Commissioner of Corporations to be $7.30. I accept that. Now, let us see what that includes. It includes the labor paid in the mines; it includes the other mining expense; it includes the royalty; it includes the rail freight; it includes the lake freight; it includes the freight from the lake port to the furnace; and it includes the general charges. Therefore the statement made in the table of $4.50 for the labor cost in a ton of pig iron is misleading, or if it is not misleading, it is not at all in conflict with the proof that I submitted formerly that the metallic mixture for a ton of pig iron cost $7.30.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. But, if the Senator will allow me now, so that I may understand just what his argument is based upon, I should like to ask him if there is an item in the labor cost of $4.50 that is reported by myself that is not absolutely correct. The figures given by me are the actual figures that it cost the manufacturers, and they pay that amount out in actual dollars to labor for securing the conversion of ore into pig iron.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not know whether the figures presented by the Senator from Utah are accurate or not. I do not intend to question them, and therefore I have not investigated them. My intent is to show that they are immaterial to the conclusion which I formerly attempted to enforce upon the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The only object I had in presenting them was to show that the actual labor cost from the time of beginning to dig the ore until it is in pig iron is $4.50 a ton, and if there is a difference of labor in this country of 50 per cent, then as far as the labor itself is concerned the foreigner would have an advantage of $2.25 a ton. In all the statements which I have made to the Senate I have not stated that that was the exact amount that should be imposed as a duty upon pig iron.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not finish a sentence which I began a short while ago when some one interrupted me. The Senator from Utah is not only indefatigable in investigation and very skillful in making inquiries, but he has the faculty of diverting one's attention from the real point and absorbing him in some curious and interesting excursion in another direction. I realize his power in that respect. I think he made some impression the other day upon the Senate when he announced that the labor cost of a ton of pig iron was $4.50, and the conclusion he sought to draw from it was that there ought to be at least $2.25 per ton duty upon pig iron in order to prevent importation. But now——

Mr. SMOOT. Everything else being equal.

Mr. CUMMINS. But everything else, Mr. President, is not equal, and therein lies the whole fallacy of his argument. The Senator from Utah in his address the other day did not show everything else to be equal. He did not enter into the cost of the material. He did not inquire into the many actual outlays of the men at the furnace in order to secure enough ore and enough coke and other material to manufacture a ton of pig iron. I am not blaming him for it, because he wants to defeat my bill. I am afraid that he is much fonder of the Democratic bill than he is of mine. If I have been correctly advised, he or some of his associates, anyhow, intend in a negative way to defeat my amendment by allowing the Democratic bill to pass.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. However, I will not quarrel with him about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator went altogether too far in intimating that I had withheld certain information as to what the other articles that go into the production of pig iron and steel rails cost in a foreign country.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I did not suggest anything of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can take the report as submitted by Mr. Charles M. Pepper, and he gives it as the information that he collected while abroad, and show that England herself claims that she is in a better position to produce pig iron than America ever will be. I suppose the Senator has read that report. It shows in detail why they have an advantage over the American manufacturer. I presented that statement to the Senate, and I believe that it is just as worthy of consideration as any other statement reported by Mr. Pepper.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah has illustrated in what he has just said my charge against him. He has now drawn the Senate entirely away from the cost of producing pig iron in this country to the cost of producing it abroad. I had not come within an ocean's width, so far as this argument at this moment is concerned, of reaching the cost of making pig iron abroad. I call him back and I call the Senate back to the subject I was discussing, namely, the cost of pig iron in the United States.

The Senator from Utah produced a table, in which it appeared that the labor element in a ton of pig iron cost $4.50. I did not accuse him of withholding any information. I did say that he did not pursue the argument to its legitimate end. I can not blame him for not making an argument against his side of the controversy, but I am supplying the omission which is found in his observations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that I agree with him entirely as to what it costs to produce pig iron in this country. I take the Herbert Knox Smith report and accept that report. The only difference between the Senator and myself is as to the amount of labor it takes to produce a ton of pig iron. I do not take anybody's report outside of the man who pays the money, and it costs in labor $4.50 to take ore from the ground and put it into pig iron. That is the statement I made, and I do not hesitate to make it now, and I do not hesitate to say that it can be proven by the books of the manufacturers of this country.

Now, the Senator says that the labor is 77 cents. That is true from the metallic mixture to pig iron, if you do not take into consideration any labor that goes into the handling of the coke, or the limestone, or the other operating expenses, such as steam, and items of that sort, every one of them requiring men's labor. Then 77 cents, as shown on that diagram, is true; but I say again that to take the ore from the ground and put the ore into a ton of pig iron, the labor of transforming it into that ton of pig iron is $4.50. I can not make it any plainer than that.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah can have every opportunity that I can afford him to make it just as plain as is possible. I repeat that I do not know whether his table is correct or not. I have not investigated that particular phase of the subject, and I make no assertion here that is not the result of some fair study upon my part. I reiterate that it is utterly immaterial, so far as the present controversy is concerned, whether there is $4.50 of labor in a ton of pig iron or not. What we are trying to do, if I understand our platform, is to attach a duty that will measure the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad.

Now, if the labor costs more here and the material costs less, it might be still true that, although there was $4.50 of labor in a ton of pig iron here and only $3 of labor in a ton of pig iron abroad, nevertheless our ton of pig iron costs us less than it costs our competitor in England or Germany or France. Therefore I have brought this table to your attention again simply to dismiss it. It makes no difference whether it is true or false. I want to dislodge it from its place in the senatorial mind and come back to a statement which my friend from Utah admits is true, namely, that in this country for the highest-priced pig iron, the best pig iron that is made in the world, the metallic mixture costs the man who puts it in the blast furnace $7.30. That includes the wages of the mine, the profits of the mine; it includes the wages of the railway men, the profits of the railway company; it includes the transportation upon the Great Lakes and the profits on transportation. Therefore, it would be almost illogical for us to concern ourselves about protecting this labor which has already been paid by the American standard and which altogether combines in it the sum of $7.30.

Now, what I have said of the metallic mixture is true of coke. The labor of mining the coal, transporting the coal, turning it into coke, and getting the coke to the blast furnace are all in the item of $3.89; and so with the limestone. So that we are left with the result, as admitted by the Senator from Utah, of Bessemer pig iron at a cost of $13.26 with the additional cost, which means depreciation and general office expenses, of 75 cents, making a total of $14.01; and that includes, as I demonstrated in my former discussion, $1.79 for profit of intermediate companies, that ought not to be taken into account in determining the cost of pig iron. I therefore repeat, upon the showing formerly made, that if we proceed to lay duties upon iron and steel, upon the hypothesis that pig iron costs in this country more than it costs abroad, we will do violence to the truth; we will repudiate the work of men whom we commissioned to make the investigation on our behalf or on behalf of all the people of the country, and we will perpetuate a burden which has already grown so grievous that the voters of the United States take every opportunity which they have of expressing their dissent from our action or inaction in that respect.

I will not go further with regard to pig iron. If I have proven that pig iron can be produced as cheaply in this country as abroad, I will take up the next item.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if he will yield for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I think it is a very great imposition on those of us who are constant in our attendance on the Senate day after day and month after month that we should be required to go through these extraordinary hours. Many of us have been on duty since 10 o'clock this morning, and it is an imposition upon Senators, in the absence of any great emergency, that we should be required to remain here longer. Some of us stay here all the time, and I do hope that the Senate will allow the Senator from Iowa to suspend and resume his argument in the morning.

It is a very easy matter, Mr. President, if a Senator does not stay in the Chamber, for him to accommodate himself to such hours as are now forced upon us, but there are some Senators who are constant in their attendance, and they ought not to be subjected to such hardship in the absence of any necessity for it.

Some of us serve upon committees that require daily work. If there are not regular committees in session, there are subcommittees. I know the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] will bear me out in the statement, because I serve with him on a number of subcommittees. There is scarcely a morning that we do not have this extra work to perform, and it leaves us no time whatever for our office work. It was half past 2 o'clock to-day before I even saw the inside of my office, and we have got to meet here to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

I therefore ask, if I may be permitted to do so, that we now—I do not desire to make a motion, because it should properly come from the other side of the Chamber—that we now suspend our labors, which have been protracted to-day. We have been here six hours and a half, to say nothing of the other work we have to do.

I want to say for myself that I do not shirk any labor. I have, since the Senate met in December, never lost a day from this Chamber; I have not only been here every day, but I have been here all the time every day; and I am not shirking any labor when I make this suggestion. I am simply saying that it is more than we ought to be required to do when there is no great emergency for it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think most Senators here are expecting a vote to be taken upon the substitute of the Senator from Iowa to-night. So I trust we shall stay here until the Senator has finished his speech, and that we may then take a vote.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, of course I have not made any motion to adjourn; but I want to say that if Senators insist that we shall remain in session at unusual times and unusual hours I shall also insist, so far as I can do so, that Senators shall all attend. It is an ungracious thing to be calling for a quorum frequently—and I do not intend to ask for a call now—but starting to-morrow morning, if we have got to come here at an unusual hour and remain after the usual hour, I shall ask that all Senators bear their part of the burden.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there are an unusual number of Senators here now.

Mr. BACON. That does not speak very much for the number usually present, then.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as I said a while ago, I do not intend to ask the Senate to adjourn in order to accommodate me. I appreciate the willingness of Senators to do so; but I do ask them one thing, and that is that my remarks shall not be interspersed every few minutes with a discussion with regard to adjournment. If I am to go on until I finish, I shall try to do so; but it is hardly fair to have constant recurrence to the matter of adjournment.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, before the Senator resumes, I should like to ask him a question. He expressed himself half an hour ago as thinking that he might finish in three-quarters of an hour. Almost half an hour has been taken up by interruptions, and I should like to have his opinion as to how much longer he will take.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I can not answer that question. I intend to present my amendment as fairly and fully as I can, and the length of time I will consume depends wholly upon the colloquies that may arise with my brother Senators concerning various phases of the subject. I think, though, that by 8 o'clock, anyhow, I shall be able to finish, even with the interruptions which may occur.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand the Senator from Iowa is chairman of a subcommittee of a committee of the Senate which has a hearing set for 8 o'clock to-night.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true.

Mr. BRISTOW. There are to be other Senators there at that hearing, and it seems to me, under the circumstances, we ought to adjourn.

Mr. CUMMINS. It occurred to me that if I——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SIMMONS. Did I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that he had another engagement?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee which meets at 8 o'clock this evening. I did not, however, have that in mind.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Iowa himself desires that we adjourn, I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the motion is not debatable.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator himself desires an adjournment, I will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] has moved that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] desires that there shall be a short executive session held. Will the Senator object to having a brief executive session and then adjourning?

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BRISTOW. I withdraw the motion to adjourn, and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 28, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 27, 1912.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY ARM.

Capt. John L. Hines, Nineteenth Infantry, to be major from May 23, 1912, vice Maj. Stephen M. Hackney, Sixth Infantry, retired from active service May 22, 1912.

First Lieut. A. Owen Seaman, Fifteenth Infantry, to be captain from May 23, 1912, vice Capt. John L. Hines, Nineteenth Infantry, promoted.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

Second Lieut. Roy R. Lyon, Coast Artillery Corps, to be first lieutenant from May 23, 1912, vice First Lieut. William C. Whitaker, detached from his proper command.

CHAPLAIN.

Chaplain Simon M. Lutz, Eighth Infantry, to be chaplain with the rank of captain from May 1, 1912, after seven years' service in the grade of first lieutenant, in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress approved April 21, 1904.

APPOINTMENTS BY TRANSFER IN THE ARMY.

Second Lieut. Lewis V. Greer, Fourth Cavalry, to be second lieutenant of Infantry, with rank from June 13, 1911.

Second Lieut. John F. Wall, Eighteenth Infantry, to be second lieutenant of Cavalry, with rank from June 13, 1911.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 27, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we realize that we have not lived to the highest ideals in the past. We have done many things which we ought not to have done and left undone many things which we ought to have done. But a new day is before us. Thou knowest our weakness, the foibles of human nature. We pray for Thy forgiveness, that we may spend no time in vain regrets, but with new zeal, energy, and courage we may press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God, in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Sunday, May 26, 1912, was read and approved.

CREEK INDIAN LANDS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 16661) relating to the Creek Indian lands in Alabama.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 759).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16661) to relinquish, release, remise, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all the lands held under claim or color of title by individuals or private ownership or municipal ownership situated in the State of Alabama which were reserved, retained, or set apart to or for the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians under or by virtue of the treaty entered into between the United States of America and the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians on March 24, 1832, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the United States of America hereby forever relinquishes, releases, and quitclaims all right, title, and interest in and to all the lands now held under claim or color of title by individual or private ownership or municipal ownership and situated in the State of Alabama which were reserved, retained, or set apart to or for the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians or any member or members thereof, under and by virtue of the treaties entered into between the United States of America and the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians on the 9th day of August, 1814, and at Washington on the 24th day of March, 1832, by which all the lands of said Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians east of the Mississippi River were ceded to the United States of America, as well as all lands so situated in the State of Alabama which may have been sold by the United States of America or under the authority of the same for the benefit of or in behalf of any Creek Indian or Indians, whether the conditions or reservations of sales were complied with or not, and whether or not patents were issued therefor by the United States; and in cases where patents have not been issued under the treaties aforesaid, the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall cause to be made upon the records of their respective offices proper notations referring to this act and closing the cases: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect or dispose of any right, claim, or title, if any, which any Indian of said Creek Tribe, or his or her heir or heirs, may have in or to any of said land.

"The true intent of this act is hereby declared to be to concede and abandon all right, title, and interest of the United States to those persons, estates, firms, or corporations who would be the true and lawful owners of said lands under the laws of Alabama, including the laws of prescription, in the absence of said interest, title, and estate of the said United States."

Amend the title by adding at the conclusion thereof the following: "and under and by virtue of the treaty between the United States of America and the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians of the 9th day of August, 1814."

And the Senate agree to the same.

SCOTT FERRIS,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
F. W. MONDELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

CHARLES CURTIS,
P. J. MCCUMBER,
W. J. STONE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 16661) to relinquish, release, remise, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all the lands held under claim or color of title by individuals or private ownership or municipal ownership situated in the State of Alabama which were reserved, retained, or set apart to or for the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians under or by virtue of the treaty entered into between the United States of America and the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians on March 24, 1832, submit the following report or written statement in explanation of the effect of the act agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying report:

The bill as agreed upon is substantially a redraft of the bill adopted by the House. While the form is somewhat changed, the substance of the House bill is retained. The only substantial changes made are, first, the addition of the treaty between the United States and the Creek Tribe of August 9, 1814, and, second, a proviso declaring that this act shall not be construed to convey or dispose of the right that any member of the Creek Nation may have to the lands described in the bill.

This proviso, of course, adds nothing to the bill, since, as originally passed by the House and as now agreed on in conference, it is nothing more than a quitclaim on the part of the United States. This, of course, could not have the effect of disposing of the title of any third person.

The committee thought it necessary to include the treaty of August 9, 1814, as well as that of March 24, 1832, because in this treaty certain described lands in the State of Alabama were ceded by the Creek Nation to the United States; but in said treaty there were certain reservations to certain chiefs or warriors who had been friendly to the United States and had taken an active part in subduing the Indians. This reservation provided that upon voluntary abandonment of such reservations by such chiefs or warriors the right of possession and occupancy should devolve to the United States. As this treaty of 1814 is older by a good many years than the treaty of 1832, which was the treaty of cession of all the lands, and as it is the evident purpose of the Government not to assert any right itself to reservations made so many years ago for and on behalf of the Indians, and in order to fully settle the title to such reservations in the State of Alabama, so far as the Government is concerned, it was thought best to include this treaty of August 9, 1814, in the bill.

The incorporation of this treaty in the body of the bill necessitated, of course, a change to this extent in its title.

SCOTT FERRIS,
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
F. W. MONDELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. CLAYTON. Before I proceed, I ask that the bill H. R. 16661 as it passed the House be read, so that the House will see that the bill which has been agreed upon by the conference committee is almost in language exactly as it originally passed the House. Certainly it is the same in substance, with no material change except the treaty of 1814 has been added.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (H. R. 16661) to relinquish, release, remise, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all the lands held under claim or color of title by individuals or private ownership or municipal ownership situated in the State of Alabama which were reserved, retained, or set apart to or for the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians under or by virtue of the treaty entered into between the United States of America and the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians on March 24, 1832.

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States of America hereby forever relinquish, release, remise, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest in and to all the lands now held under claim or color of title by individuals or private ownership or municipal ownership and situated in the State of Alabama which were reserved, retained, or set apart to or for the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians, or any member or members thereof, under or by virtue of the treaty entered into between the United States of America and the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians at Washington on the 24th day of March, 1832, by which all the lands of the said Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians lying east of the Mississippi River were ceded to the United States of America, as well as all lands so situated in the State of Alabama which may have been sold by the United States of America or under authority of the same for the benefit of or on behalf of any Creek Indian or Indians, whether the conditions of such reservation or sales were complied with or not, and whether or not patents were issued therefor by the United States of America.

The purpose and intent of this act is to estop the United States of America from now or hereafter asserting any claim whatever to the lands now held under claim or color of title by individuals or private ownership or municipal ownership and situated in the State of Alabama which were reserved or set apart under the said treaty to or for the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians, or any member or members thereof, in any manner or upon any condition whatever, as well as all lands so situated in the State of Alabama which may have been sold by the United States of America or under authority of the same for the benefit or on behalf of any Creek Indian or Indians, whether patents were issued therefor or not.

The true intent of this act is hereby declared to be to concede and abandon all right, title, and interest of the United States to those persons, estates, firms, or corporations who would be the true and lawful owners of said lands under the laws of Alabama, including the laws of prescription, in the absence of said interest, title, and estate of the said United States.

That as to all of the lands reserved for the Creek Indians under said treaty of March 24, 1832, which have not been patented, the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall cause to be made upon the records of their respective offices proper notations referring to this act and closing the cases.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill, H. R. 16661, was originally prepared by me, after conference with my colleagues, Messrs. DENT, BLACKMON, and HEFLIN, representing the districts in Alabama where lie most if not all of the lands which are involved in the original Creek Indian treaty.

This bill passed the House substantially in the form in which it is now presented by the conference report and substantially as just read.

When the bill went to the Senate it was not understood over there, and never was understood by the Senate until my colleague Mr. DENT went into conference with the Senate conferees, and finally persuaded the Senate conferees to adopt the House view of this matter.

After we passed this bill through the House, the Senate passed and sent over here the bill which sought to provide for the issuance of patents to the landowners down there, taking the view that that was a complete remedy and was all that would be necessary to afford relief to the landowners in Alabama. Of course, that was no remedy at all. It was worse than no remedy. It opened up troublesome questions and put the matter in far worse shape than if no legislation at all were had.

But after the Senate were acquainted with the correct view of the matter, which was fully developed in the hearings had before the House Committee on the Public Lands, in which hearings my colleagues, Messrs. HEFLIN, BLACKMON, DENT, and myself participated, the Senate has come to the House view, and has adopted in most particulars the language and substance of the House bill, and have added the treaty of 1814, which I think is well to be added. That treaty of 1814 does not seem to affect any lands in the districts of the Representatives who participated in the hearings of the House, but it does perhaps affect some of the lands in another district in Alabama, and we have no objection to making the bill cover the treaty of 1814. Of course, the title should be amended to conform to this one amendment.

This bill, H. R. 16661, was amended in the Senate on March 16 by striking from it all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu of the bill stricken out the following:

That the United States hereby relinquishes all of its right, title, and interest in and to the lands set apart or allotted to the Indians under the Choctaw treaty of September 27, 1830, and the Creek treaty of March 24, 1832, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to issue patents, without awaiting applications therefor, to those shown by the records of that department to be entitled thereto: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to affect any right of the original Indian owners of said land or their heirs.

The insuperable objection to this Senate substitute or amendment is that the records and original papers in many cases involving different parts of these lands, have been either destroyed by fire, or otherwise lost, during the stretch of years constituting three-quarters of a century or more; and under this Senate amendment no relief would be afforded to the owners of these lands. My colleagues, Messrs. DENT, HEFLIN, and BLACKMON, made this clear in the hearings before the Committee on Public Lands on January 10 and 16, 1912. So I affirm, Mr. Speaker, without the fear of successful contradiction, that the Senate amendment would afford no relief to the landowners, but would keep alive the existing uncertainty or cloud upon their title, and would undoubtedly permit the Government to maintain suits for many parts of these lands. The bill as it passed the House and as agreed upon by the conferees quitclaims all right and title of the United States to all these lands.

Of course, as I explained to the House when this bill originally passed here, the United States has no title to any of these lands except the technical title, founded upon the fact that patents had not issued years ago when they should have been issued.

Another change that was made in the House bill was this: The House bill contained, on page 2, line 15, the statement that the United States is estopped. That was precautionary and was a reiteration, in effect, of what was said in another part of the bill. The House conferees yielded to what is, I think, a fastidious notion, and struck out those, it may be, unnecessary words. I am gratified to be able to state that the bill as originally suggested, drawn, and advocated, to afford relief to the people in Alabama in accordance with the plan suggested by my colleague and myself, has finally met with the intelligent consideration and approval of the Senate. [Applause.] I therefore move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CLAYTON. With great pleasure.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the gentleman to say that the bill reported from the conference is substantially the same as the original House bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. But that the principal change is a reenactment of the treaty of 1814.

Mr. CLAYTON. That was one of the changes.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood that was the principal change.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think that may be said to be correct.

Mr. PAYNE. What is the treaty of 1814, and what is the reason for reenacting it now?

Mr. CLAYTON. My colleague, Mr. DENT, desires to answer that question.

Mr. DENT. We do not reenact the treaty of 1814; we simply include the land described in the treaty of 1814 as well as the land described in the treaty of 1832, because both treaties were made between the Government of the United States and the Creek Tribe of Indians and relate to the same subject matter. The treaty of 1832, which included all the lands east of the Mississippi River, might have been sufficient; but, as a matter of precaution, we also described the lands in the former treaty.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood the gentleman from Alabama to say that the other amendment is principally a choice of language between the House bill and the Senate.

Mr. DENT. That is all.

Mr. CLAYTON. The Senate in the main used substantially the House language. The Senate entirely receded from its position. The little bill or amendment which the Senate proposed when this bill went over there was entirely abandoned, because that bill or amendment was futile in its nature and afforded no relief. I am glad to say that the Senate, in its superior wisdom and exalted patriotism, rose to the occasion and adopted in substance the House bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that the same spirit of exalted wisdom, and so forth——

Mr. CLAYTON. Patriotism, if you please, and not "and so forth." The Senate is never actuated by "and so forth," but by patriotism. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. And the gentleman thinks that the other amendment does not change the original bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. It does not. At least, Mr. Speaker, the Members of the House from Alabama are glad to get the relief afforded by this bill, and we think it is a relief that the House originally said that the people in Alabama were entitled to.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course I know that the gentlemen from Alabama would take care of their constituents. What I was looking after was the interest of the United States a little bit.

Mr. CLAYTON. The United States has not suffered.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I am not particularly familiar with the bill or the conference report. I see the conference report is signed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and also by the three Senate conferees. If I understand the case, this conference report when agreed to will release not a real claim that the United States has——

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CANNON. But what is supposed by some to be a claim of a legal title that in fact the United States does not own and does not interfere in any way between individuals that have the title by setting up any such claim of title; that is, the parties litigate and settle between themselves. In this legislation the United States says, in effect:

We quitclaim any real or conceivable interest that the United States has in those lands.

Mr. CLAYTON. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that if I had studied over the case a month how to express it in a sententious way, fully and clearly, I could not improve upon the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I gathered from what the gentleman said——

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman compliments me, and I am glad my utterances have been so well understood.

Mr. CANNON. I also understand that the gentleman spoke of reenacting these treaties, which were modified by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT]. Now, there is nothing in this bill, aliunde the matters just referred to, but a quitclaim on the part of the United States to these lands, and nothing that would entail any obligation whatever upon the United States, and nothing upon which to base a claim on the part of any Indian tribes or any individual or anybody else.

Mr. CLAYTON. There is no such claim on the part of the United States nor anybody else, nor can there be growing out of the old treaties or the legislation. It is simply to clear up the title in these lands that these people in Alabama have held, for the most part undisturbed in occupation and cultivation, for 75 years. There is no pretense but that they are the bona fide owners. There are happy homes on many of these lands, and some of our towns and villages are situated on some of these lands. It was never dreamed that anybody would assert any claim to them until about a year or so ago, when some action was brought by a district attorney down there which I do not think met with the approval of the land department.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman's statement is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. CLAYTON. Under the leave to print I insert in the RECORD the following report made by my colleague [Mr. DENT] on this bill when it was originally before the House:

[House Report No. 357, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

TITLE TO CREEK INDIAN LANDS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report to accompany House bill 16661:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16661) to relinquish and quitclaim the title and interest of the United States in and to lands formerly owned by the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians in Alabama, having met and carefully considered the same, together with the facts furnished by the office of the Commissioner of Public Lands and that of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, as well as other testimony given at hearings had by the committee, respectfully recommend that the said bill do pass with the following amendment, to wit.

At the end of line 26, page 2, add the following paragraphs:

"The true intent of this act is hereby declared to be to concede and abandon all right, title, and interest of the United States to those persons, estates, firms, or corporations who would be the true and lawful owners of said lands under the laws of Alabama, including the laws of prescription, in the absence of said interest, title, and estate of the said United States.

"That as to all of the lands reserved for the Creek Indians under said treaty of March 24, 1832, which have not been patented, the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall cause to be made upon the records of their respective offices proper notations referring to this act and closing the cases."

By a treaty entered into between the Government of the United States and the Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians on March 24, 1832, (7 Stat. L., 366) the said Creek Tribe of Indians ceded to the United States all of their land east of the Mississippi River. A further treaty entered into between the Government of the United States and the said Creek Nation or Tribe of Indians on the 7th day of August, 1856 (11 Stat. L., 699), confirmed the cession of these lands. There were certain reservations in the original treaty on behalf of the chiefs of tribes, the heads of families, and orphan children. Articles II, III, IV, and VI refer to these reservations, and are as follows:

"ART. II. The United States engage to survey the said land as soon as the same can be conveniently done, after the ratification of this treaty, and when the same is surveyed to allow 90 principal chiefs of the Creek Tribe to select one section each, and every other head of a Creek family to select one-half section each, which tracts shall be reserved from sale for their use for the term of five years, unless sooner disposed of by them. A census of these persons shall be taken under the direction of the President and the selections shall be made so as to include the improvements of each person within his selection, if the same can be so made; and if not, then all the persons belonging to the same town, entitled to selections, and who can not make the same so as to include their improvements, shall take them in one body in a proper form. And 20 sections shall be selected, under the direction of the President, for the orphan children of the Creeks and divided and retained or sold for their benefit as the President may direct: Provided, however, That no selections or locations under this treaty shall be so made as to include the agency reserve.

"ART. III. These tracts may be conveyed by the persons selecting the same to any other persons for a fair consideration, in such manner as the President may direct. The contract shall be certified by some person appointed by the President for that purpose, but shall not be valid till the President approves the same. A title shall be given by the United States on completion of the payment.

"ART. IV. At the end of five years all the Creeks entitled to these selections, and desirous of remaining, shall receive patents therefor in fee simple from the United States.

"ART. VI. Twenty-nine sections in addition to the foregoing may be located, and patents for the same shall then issue to those persons, being Creeks, to whom the same may be assigned by the Creek Tribe."

These reservations were to be disposed of by the chiefs and heads of families within a period of five years from March 24, 1832, by private sale, subject to the approval of the President of the United States. The sections reserved for the orphan children were to be retained or disposed of for their benefit under the direction of the President. There were further provisions to the effect that at the end of the five years all the Creeks entitled to select these reservations and desiring to remain in Alabama should receive patents therefor from the United States. It further appears that by the act approved March 3, 1837, the President was authorized to sell all of the reservations remaining unsold on the 4th day of April, 1837, at public auction in the Creek country and to cause patents to be issued. This sale was made.

In the opinion of the Department of Justice, it is held that whatever may have been the title of the Indians prior to the expiration of the five-year period fixed by the treaty of March 24, 1832, all claim, right, title, and interest of the Indians were, after that, divested out of them.

Representatives of the Land and Indian Offices who appeared before the committee state that there were about 990 cases involved in which purchases had been made in good faith and the money paid but patents were for some reason not issued. They further stated that out of the total number of cases the record disclosed only 14 which did not appear to have a perfect contract right under the law, and that, even in those cases, a further investigation would probably disclose that the original purchaser had bought in good faith. These lands, for the most part, were bought more than 70 years ago; and the present claimants have been in bona fide, open, and notorious possession, paying taxes thereon, during a long period of time—either by themselves or through those under whom they claim.

During all these years these lands have not been treated as a part of the public domain. They have not been subject to homestead entry. All of these people who own and occupy these lands have believed that they had a perfect right to them; and none of them had any thought to the contrary until just prior to a recent action of ejectment which was brought by the Government against the holder of one of these tracts. The Government of the United States has no equitable right or title to these lands. At most, it has merely a technical legal title owing to the fact that patents, which ought to have heretofore issued, have not been issued. And it is proper to say in this connection that even this merely technical title has not been attempted to be asserted by the Government during the lapse of about three-quarters of a century.

In view of the fact that the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians have not any title whatever left in them, your committee is of the opinion that the Government should quitclaim whatever title remains in it.

In other words, the committee is of the opinion that, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, there should be a complete relinquishment of its title.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 24565).

The SPEAKER. Before the Chair puts this motion he thinks it is proper to all concerned to make a short statement about the condition of affairs. This is District day, and the chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], is anxious to go on with the business of the District, and of course the District business ought to be attended to and must be attended to; but there is a general agreement among Members on both sides of the House to press matters before Congress at this particular juncture so as to get rid of the four appropriation bills—the naval appropriation bill, the Military Academy, the sundry civil, and the general deficiency bills.

By recognizing the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] to make this motion, it is understood on the part of the Speaker and everybody concerned, that as quickly as we can get these appropriation bills out of the way, the District of Columbia Committee shall have its full day, and as far as the Chair is concerned, he is inclined to say if it takes more than one day that committee shall have time enough to get the necessary District business concluded.

This statement is made for the benefit of the Members of the House and for the benefit of the District Committee and for the benefit of the newspapers in the city of Washington, so that there will be no misunderstanding about it, and that everybody may know that there is no disposition to sidetrack District business.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, suppose the present appropriation bill be completed to-morrow or Thursday or Friday, and there be no other appropriation bill ready, what then would happen under the rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that if it did not happen to be Calendar Wednesday the House would give unanimous consent that the District Committee might have its day.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that there is an appropriation bill now on the calendar, the Military Academy appropriation bill, which is ready to be taken up.

Mr. CANNON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] that he ask unanimous consent that when this bill is concluded a day should be then given to the Committee on the District of Columbia, not to interfere with conference reports or appropriation bills, or any day that might come, except Calendar Wednesday. Then the agreement would be made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] felt constrained a few days ago to object to such a request made on behalf of the Committee on Pensions, I shall at this time be obliged to object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there will not be any difficulty about it.

Mr. CANNON. Then, let us exclude pension day also.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We might be tied up with a number of other matters.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am interested in District business, and I propose to ask unanimous consent that on the completion of this bill the Committee on the District of Columbia shall have a day, not to interfere, first, with pensions; second, with appropriation bills or conference reports and, of course, Calendar Wednesday or unanimous-consent day, if that is desired.

Mr. FOSTER. If these are all included does the gentleman think there will be anything left?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, for the reasons stated a moment ago, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 24565).

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to abandon and dispose of the naval reservations at San Juan and Culebra, P. R.; Port Royal, S. C.; New London, Conn.; and Sacketts Harbor, N. Y., and to transfer such property, machinery, and other material as may be of use in the Naval Establishment to other navy yards and stations; and he is further authorized and directed to dispose of the real estate in the manner most advantageous to the United States Government, and shall report to Congress the disposition of said material and real estate at its next regular session: Provided, That the real estate comprising the naval reservations at San Juan and Culebra, P. R., shall be transferred to the civil government of Porto Rico.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend lines 20 and 21, page 37, by striking out the words "Port Royal, S. C."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Carolina that his amendment is not in order until the point of order has been disposed of.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, if there is no statement to be made in regard to it, then I make the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is subject to a point of order. It clearly comes within the rule. It is a matter of economy, getting rid of what we suppose to be unnecessary and expensive yards. This is to cut down the expense of maintenance. I think it is clearly not subject to a point of order.

I have some other things to say with reference to the amendment, when the point of order is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa please state the grounds of his point of order?

Mr. GOOD. It is new legislation. It might be said to be in the interest of economy if the Government in this bill authorized the sale of all of its battleships, but it would be new legislation.

Mr. PADGETT. But new legislation is in order now.

Mr. GOOD. The Holman rule can not be stretched into any such construction as that. This is authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to dispose of a great deal of land—a great many different sites.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, under the rule legislation is now in order on appropriation bills, if the direct effect of it is to economize and reduce expenses. The Committee on Naval Affairs has jurisdiction of the matters proposed to be legislated upon, and I want to state that the department has recommended this action, but has modified it with reference to a part of it, which, when we reach the question of the amendment, I shall take up.

Mr. HIGGINS. Will the gentleman state how far this modification goes?

Mr. PADGETT. I have a letter here from Acting Secretary of the Navy Winthrop, stating that Port Royal, S. C., be made a detention and training camp——

Mr. HIGGINS. Is that the only particular in which the department has changed its recommendations?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the only one they have communicated to me. I will state, however, to the gentleman that I understand that the gentleman has a suggestion he wants to make in connection with New London.

Mr. HIGGINS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. PADGETT. Which perhaps will address itself to my favorable consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] makes the point of order against the paragraph on the ground that it is new legislation. Under section 2 of Rule XXI, one provision is that a provision in a bill reported by a committee shall be germane and also shall in its effect retrench expenditures. The Chair is of opinion, according to the plain meaning of the paragraph which in its effect directs the abandonment and disposal of certain naval reservations, would be a retrenchment of expenditure, and therefore comes within section 2 of Rule XXI. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have my amendment reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, lines 20 and 21, page 37, by striking out the words "Port Royal, S. C."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the committee will accept the amendment, because it is evident that the item is included in this bill through a misunderstanding as to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy. It is true that several years ago the Secretary recommended that Port Royal, together with other naval stations, be abandoned, and in the absence of congressional authority the department proceeded to "starve out" the station. I am informed that all the machinery and property which might be of service to other naval establishments has already been transferred and nothing but the real estate is left. Since this recommendation was made by the Secretary, in fact, during the past year, the Secretary of the Navy decided to utilize this building for the purpose of establishing disciplinary barracks. For this purpose the buildings were put in shape at some expense, and several hundred men are now confined there. To sell this property under these circumstances would mean that it would be sold at a sacrifice and the Government be put to the expense of erecting new buildings for the same purpose at some other place. I believe that the Secretary has to-day written the chairman of the committee asking him to amend the bill as I have suggested, and, in the interest of economy, I ask that his suggestion be accepted and my amendment adopted.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, some time ago the department recommended the discontinuance and disposition of these places together with others, and the committee included these places, but I am in receipt of a letter from Mr. Winthrop as Acting Secretary of the Navy stating that recently the department has established a disciplinary barracks there or a training school for minor offenses, a kind of reformatory institution, so instead of sending sailors to prison they go to a reformatory or training school there and thereby it saves them the odium of a prison sentence. I think it is a good matter and I ask to insert this letter in the RECORD and that the amendment offered by the gentleman be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting a letter in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 25, 1912.

Hon. L. P. PADGETT,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In August of last year the department established a disciplinary barracks at Port Royal, S. C., for the detention and training of enlisted men, both in the Navy and Marine Corps, found guilty of minor military offenses. It had for some time considered that it was not right to punish by prison sentence men guilty of certain offenses which were due to thoughtlessness, ignorance, or lack of training rather than to any vicious instinct. It is the intention of the department to return to the Navy such of the detentioners at Port Royal as demonstrate their fitness for service in the Navy. In other words, Port Royal is intended to be a corrective institution rather than a prison.

The number of detentioners in the barracks on May 18 was 267, but a far larger number, of course, have been sent there since the establishment of the barracks in August last. Thus far the plan has proved a success, and I consider it desirable to continue this station as a disciplinary barracks. I therefore request that the words "Port Royal, S. C.," be stricken from the naval bill where they appear on page 37, lines 20 and 21.

Sincerely, yours,
BEEKMAN WINTHROP,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the words "New London, Conn.," where they appear on page 37, line 21.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 37, line 21, strike out the words "New London, Conn."

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, one of the questions raised by my amendment to strike out "New London, Conn.," from this paragraph is distinctly a moral one. Does this Congress propose to break faith with the State of Connecticut and repudiate a solemn pledge made after careful consideration by scientific men and recorded in the laws of this country, in the statutes of Connecticut, and in the land records of that State?

The acquisition of this beautiful tract of land, with its extensive water front, for naval purposes did not cost the Federal Government one cent. The issue raised by my amendment is not one of economy, but one of keeping faith with the State of Connecticut. This country, in consideration of the gift of this magnificent property to it, agreed by legislative act to establish and maintain it for naval purposes. It was presented to the Federal Government for that purpose, and upon that condition it has been held.

The State of Connecticut has never been a raider of the Federal Treasury. It has never clamored for Federal appropriations, and from the earliest days it has contributed vastly more to the upbuilding of this Union than it has taken from it. Now, in this bill, without any regard to the facts, without any regard for the conditions, without any regard for the needs of the Navy, it is proposed to break faith with the State of Connecticut and attempt to sell and dispose of something which this country can not give any title to.

This recommendation comes from the Naval Committee, and I venture the prediction that few, if any, members of that committee have ever seen this station. It is included in this bill at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Navy, who, in recommending it, does not assign a single good reason for such action and goes contrary to what the most experienced naval authorities in this country have held and do hold.

It is quite as important, if not more so, to the people of Brooklyn and New York City as it is to my people. Before it was established the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York petitioned Congress, asking for it, and adopted strong resolutions urging it as a military necessity and as part of the defenses of New York, and that is urged now by every naval man who is worthy to command a ship or has any practical knowledge of naval tactics.

The history of the location of this station goes back to before 1862. At the direction of Congress in the early sixties the Secretary of the Navy appointed a naval board, composed of the most intelligent naval officers then in the service, to examine Narragansett Bay, the harbor of New London, and League Island, and to report back to Congress which would best serve the public interest. Commanders Stringham, Gardner, and Van Brundt and Chief Engineer Sanger composed this board, and to the report which they made was appended the following resolution:

Resolved, That the harbor of New London possesses greater advantages for a navy yard and naval depot than any other location examined by this board.

In 1864 Congress directed the Naval Committee of the House to visit the proposed site at New London to make a thorough investigation and report back to the House. They made a personal examination, and their report concluded in the following language:

The site near New London, presenting such great natural and economical advantages, has been tendered as a free gift to the Government. The committee recommend its acceptance, and for the purpose of locating thereat a navy yard and depot such as is contemplated by the naval authorities they recommend the passage of the accompanying bill for a public act.

Congress in 1867, convinced of the wisdom of locating a station at this point, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to receive and accept a deed of gift when offered by the State of Connecticut of a tract of land with not less than 1 mile of shore front on the Thames River, near New London, Conn., to be held by the United States for naval purposes.

The State of Connecticut appropriated $15,000 for the purchase of this tract of land, and in addition the city of New London was authorized to appropriate any sum of money not to exceed $75,000 for the purchase of land to be deeded to the Federal Government for naval purposes, and the city of New London joined with the State in the gift. I will print as an appendix to my remarks a certified copy of the deed, which conveyed this land to the National Government upon a distinct condition and for a definite purpose, and it was accepted by the Government upon that condition.

This conveyance was made on the 11th day of April, 1868, and this Government entered into possession and has been in possession ever since, holding it, as agreed, for naval purposes.

The legal proposition involved requires no discussion. Not only the land thus conveyed but the improvements, now a part of the realty which the Government made, will also revert to the original owners. Only $253,852.47 has been spent on this station, both in the equipment and its repair, during the past 44 years, and this money has been well spent. The buildings are reported by the Secretary of the Navy as being in good condition. A dock over 800 feet long faces a channel over 600 feet wide. The water is of sufficient depth to float the largest ships of the American Navy, and upon the authority of one of our most distinguished admirals, now deceased, I can state to this House that he said that there would not be the slightest difficulty in taking a ship of the type and tonnage of the Connecticut up to that station, docking her, and turning her around.

In 1872, or shortly after the Government was presented with this property for naval purposes, the Secretary of the Navy in his report said:

I have heretofore spoken of the claims of the New London station on the liberality of Congress. Some of these are to be found in a good harbor, easy of access from all directions and conveniently situated between two great commercial cities, an industrious and an ingenious people, whose labor is skillful and cheap, and a site for the station already acquired through the liberality of the State, to the improvement of which the Government seems to be virtually pledged. It is already a station of convenience to the service and with moderate expenditure its use could be largely increased.

The last naval appropriation bill carried a provision similar in terms, but it was stricken out in the House upon my motion and I then explained, as I am attempting to do now, the conditions which surround this station. And the Secretary of the Navy has had his attention called to the forfeiture in the deed.

Ample reasons exist for the continuance of this station other than the solemn moral and legal obligations which this Government assumed when it was established. As a result of the findings of the Belknap Board a coaling station was established there. That station is now fully equipped and the present Secretary of the Navy officially reported on February 20, 1911, that it was in good condition.

Secretary von Meyer's predecessors in office have in their annual reports all referred to this station as a necessary and essential part of our Naval Establishment. I will review what they have said quoting from their annual reports to Congress. Their judgment and opinion is not to be treated lightly and is founded upon an appreciation of the true conditions.

Secretary Long in 1899:

The expenses of the bureau at this station during the last fiscal year have been small, chiefly for coal, water, and ash lighters. New London being located near and inside of the outer defenses of the city of New York is a very important strategic point and affords a valuable harbor for torpedo boats and other small ships. It is also an important site for the storage of coal for war purposes. In accordance with the recommendation of the coal board, of which Rear Admiral Charles E. Belknap was president, buildings for the storage of 25,000 tons are now in process of construction.

Again, in 1900, Secretary Long said:

During the past year a modern coal-storage house constructed of granite and steel has been completed at this station. It is located conveniently for the transportation of coal to and from the pier built some years ago. Modern steam-power coal-conveying apparatus of the Brown type has been installed, the pier being strengthened as necessary for the purpose. During the past summer the Texas and several other smaller vessels coaled at this station and reported favorably on the facilities for so doing. It is contemplated to add coal pockets to this station, in order to enable torpedo boats to be coaled with great rapidity. Its location inside of the outer defenses of the port of New York renders this coal depot of much importance in time of war.

Again, in 1901, Secretary Long said:

This depot has been much used by small vessels during the past year. To make it more efficient, coal pockets or bunkers of moderate capacity have been constructed on the pier for the purpose of supplying torpedo boats and small craft rapidly. Incidentally, it also prevents the necessity of raising steam on the power plant every time one of these small vessels requires coal. The appliances for storing coal at this depot were the first built and are capable of improvement, which is contemplated in the near future.

In 1902 Secretary Moody said:

The coal depot at this station has been of much service to the fleet during the past summer; for the month of August the average number of ships receiving coal was more than one a day. The new coal pockets have been found very useful for coaling torpedo boats and small craft. Some improvements in the appliances of this depot, the necessity for which has been demonstrated by experience, are contemplated in the future. The capacity of the depot, without storing coal deep enough to endanger its safety from spontaneous combustion, is about 7,000 tons. Its importance is due to the fact that it is located just inside the outer defenses of New York City.

Secretary Moody in 1903 reports:

The coal depot at this station has done efficient service during the past year. No changes or extensive repairs have been made.

Secretary Morton, for the year 1904, reports:

An extension to the plant at this depot has been commenced under the supervision of the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

In 1905 Secretary Bonaparte reports:

Capacity, 11,300 tons. Water storage for ships' use, 100,000 gallons, in tanks.

This language of Secretary Bonaparte is followed in succeeding reports until the present Secretary of the Navy recommends its abolishment and proposes to sell that which the Government can not sell, for it does not possess it except for a stated purpose.

All naval experts, as well as Secretaries of the Navy, reported in favor of this station until Secretary Newberry, whose tenure of office in that position was very short, divided the subject of purchase, transportation and storage of coal, which had all been handled by the Bureau of Equipment since the Civil War, among five bureaus.

Now to follow the history of this station a little further, and this during the term of the present Secretary of the Navy, who now advocates and urges repudiation and recommends that this Government break its solemn pledge. Eighteen thousand dollars was spent at this station for Marine barracks within a few years. The buildings that were already on the property and had been for years were repaired, and in addition a Marine training school was established. The coaling station was, however, continued and is now in good working form.

It was generally considered by those the best able to judge that it afforded an ideal location for a Marine training school. There is an abundance of fresh water available on this property. The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad bisects it. It is easily accessible to all eastern centers of population; but even after the expenditure of this money for the Marines, their satisfaction with the surroundings, and with no reason assigned, they were shipped elsewhere and this school was abandoned. Two or three men now hold the fort at this naval station. But $21,626.12 has been spent on this property in 44 years for repairs, and the Secretary now reports the buildings in good condition. It has been abandoned for naval purposes, so far as the Secretary of the Navy can do so without legislative action. This was done soon after Congress refused to pass legislation to abandon it. The present cost of maintenance of this station is a mere bagatelle as compared with the expense which the Secretary of the Navy proposes in dismantling it. And why dismantle it at all?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman what would be the saving if this station were abolished.

Mr. HIGGINS. My dear sir, the saving would be a mere bagatelle. In fact, it would increase the cost to the Government. I do not think that this provision comes within the Holman rule. No money would be saved by its abolishment. There are two or three men who are holding the fort there now, but I am not speaking for those two or three men. The Secretary of the Navy is trying and has tried to do away with that station, but why I do not know. It is being starved out now as much as it can be. I have heard some reasons given as to why, which I would not care to express upon the floor of the House at this time. I would not urge the continuance of this station if ample scientific authority did not recommend its continuance. There ought to be some definite business policy adhered to for a sufficient length of time for us to demonstrate its wisdom. These sporadic recommendations do not and will not accomplish the purpose sought.

The eastern defenses of New York lie off New London Harbor. There is no coaling station west until you get to Brooklyn. There is no coaling station east until you get to Narragansett. In the event of war any fleet protecting New York from the east would rendezvous at New London Harbor, which can float the navies of the world. These eastern forts are now supplied from New London. This station lies within sight of the harbor and but 2 miles from it. It does not require scientific knowledge to appreciate the strategic value of this station. It has been said that strategy was only common sense, and that is all that I ask should be applied to this proposition. We ought to profit somewhat by our experiences during the Spanish War. The Belknap Board appreciated the value of this station to the Navy. Their reasons and arguments have never been controverted. They can not be successfully. The action proposed is not only unjust but unreasonable and unsound as a military proposition.

Connecticut stands ready, as she always has, to bear her part of the burdens of the national defense. Her gift of this tract of land is only one of many acts which have demonstrated her patriotism and unselfishness. She seeks at all times to cooperate with the Federal Government and not to defy it; but this proposed action is so unwarranted by any test that you may choose to apply, is so founded upon injustice, that its adoption will work a graver injury than the mere abolishment of what misguided and uninformed persons choose to call a useless naval station.

If this is proposed under the guise of economy, great disappointment is in store for the advocates of the proposition. If it is deemed as not being essential to our military establishment, I say to you that if war does come, and may God forbid it, that in the hurry of urgent and vital necessity a coaling station will be improvised at or near this point, and the very lack of it at a critical time will expose Long Island Sound to invasion with consequences that I do not want to contemplate. [Applause.]

The Secretary of the Navy, in a report under date of February 20, 1911, as to the condition of this station, reported as follows:

New London.

The deed by which the Government holds title to this station is as follows:

Whereas by an act of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut entitled "An act in addition to and in alteration of an act entitled 'An act concerning land,'" approved July 27, 1867, it is provided as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States, by act approved March 2, 1867, has authorized and directed the Secretary of the Navy "to receive and accept a deed of gift here offered by the State of Connecticut of a tract of land on the Thames River, near New London, Conn., with a water front of not less than one mile, to be held by the United States for naval purposes; and

Whereas this State is desirous of cooperating with the Federal Government in its purpose to locate a navy yard, naval depot, or naval establishment upon said Thames River: Therefore be it

Enacted by the senate and house of representatives in general assembly convened;

SECTION 1. That his excellency, the governor, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint the commissioners to select and designate the tract of land so to be conveyed, and to request the Secretary of the Navy to appoint some officer to act with said commissioners in behalf of the United States in the selection of said tract.

SEC. 2. The city of New London is authorized to acquire title to said land, by purchase or otherwise, in trust, and for the purpose of conveying the same to the United States.

SEC. 3. And in case the city can not agree with the party in interest relative to the purchase of said interest, the city may proceed in all respects as provided in sections 50, 51, 52, and 53 of the act entitled "An act for the cession of jurisdiction over certain lands to the United States."

SEC. 4. And when said city has obtained title to the land designated as aforesaid the mayor of said city shall inform the comptroller of this State, and said comptroller, upon being satisfied thereof, shall sign an order upon the treasurer of this State, payable to the city of New London, for the sum of $15,000, to aid in the purchase of said land, and said treasurer shall pay said order to the mayor of said city or its legally authorized agent or attorney.

SEC. 5. And the said commissioners appointed by the governor shall join with said city as agents of the State in the conveyance of the said land to the United States and the cession of jurisdiction thereto for naval purposes.

SEC. 6. The city of New London, at a meeting called for the purpose, may appropriate any sum of money, not exceeding $75,000, for the purchase of land designated as aforesaid.

SEC. 7. Section 48 of the act to which this is an alteration and addition is hereby repealed.

SEC. 8. And the appropriation of the State in aid of the land aforesaid made hereby shall be in lieu of all appropriations heretofore proposed to be made.

Approved July 27, 1867.

And whereas the governor of said State by authority of said act appointed Charles R. Ingersoll, of New Haven; Lorenzo Blackstone, of Norwich; and Ephriam Williams, of Stonington, in said State of Connecticut, to select and designate the tract of land to be conveyed to the United States as therein contemplated; and

Whereas said commissioners in cooperation with Commander J. P. McKinstry, an officer of the United States Navy appointed thereto in behalf of the United States by the Secretary of the Navy, have selected and designated for the purposes in said act declared a tract of land on the Thames River near New London, in the towns of Groton and Ledyard in said State of Connecticut, a particular description of which is hereinafter set forth; and

Whereas the city of New London has acquired to said tract of land so selected and designated as aforesaid, as authorized and by virtue of said act. Therefore for the purpose of conveying to the United States the title to said land, so acquired as aforesaid, and ceding to the United States the jurisdiction of the State of Connecticut over the same as provided in said act

Know all men by these presents:

That the State of Connecticut, acting hereby by Charles R. Ingersoll, Lorenzo Blackstone, and Ephriam Williams, commissioners appointed hereto as aforesaid, and the mayor, aldermen, common council, and freemen of the city of New London, acting herein by Hon. Frederic L. Allen, mayor of said city of New London, their duly authorized agent for the purpose, in consideration of the premises and of $1 and other valuable considerations received by them to their full satisfaction of the United States of America do give, grant, bargain, and sell and confirm unto the said United States of America the following tract of land (described) in the towns of Groton and Ledyard, in said State of Connecticut, bounded westerly on the Thames River and contained within the lines hereinafter mentioned and particularly delineated on a map of said tract of land made by David A. Daboll, surveyor, dated the —— day of November, A. D. 1867, and to accompany this deed; that is to say,

Beginning at a mere stone marked —0— on the east shore of the Thames River on land of Jonathan Colver, being 150 feet northerly of the Pentway, so called, which point is marked "A" on the said map; thence N. 89¾° E. crossing the river road, so called, 650 feet to a mere stone marked —0— in said Colver's orchard and continues the same course 41¾ feet to a point in said orchard (the aforesaid line called AB); thence N. 13° W. on land of said Colver about 1,570 feet to a point on Fort Rock, so called, which point is 41¾ feet east of a stone marked —0— (call said last line BC); thence N. 3° E. about 1,548 feet partly on land of said Colver and partly on land lately owned by Courtland Chapman to a point 41¾ feet east of a mere stone marked —0— on land lately owned by said Chapman (call said last line CD); thence N. 3¾° E. about 2,160 feet partly on land lately owned by said Chapman and partly on land lately owned by Solomon Perkins to a point on said Perkins's land 41¾ feet easterly of a mere stone marked —0— (call said last line DE); thence N. 84° W. 41¾ feet to said mere stone, and continue the same course about 680 feet, crossing said river road to a mere stone marked —0— on the shore of the Thames River (this point is marked F on said map); thence southerly bounding by and with said Thames River about 351 rods to the place of beginning, to be held by the said United States for naval purposes as contemplated by said act of Congress of the United States relative thereto, approved March 2, 1867, and the act of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut hereinbefore mentioned, reserving the right to remove all the buildings from said described tract before the 1st day of July, A. D. 1868.

To have and to hold the aforesaid premises with all the appurtenances thereof unto the said United States and their assigns for naval purposes, according to the provisions of said act of Congress and the act of the General Assembly of said State of Connecticut hereinbefore mentioned.

And the said mayor, aldermen, and common council and freemen of said city of New London do covenant with the United States and their assigns that they have full power and authority to grant and convey said premises as aforesaid, and they do for themselves, their successors, and assigns, covenant with the said United States and their assigns to warrant and defend the same to the said United States and their assigns against any person and persons claiming by, from, or under them and from all incumbrances done or suffered by them.

And the said State of Connecticut does here cede to the United States of America all jurisdiction over said land hereby conveyed within the limits hereinafter set forth and described, only reserving to the said State of Connecticut the right to serve and execute all civil criminal process therein .

In witness whereof the said grantors have hereunto set their hands by their agents duly authorized thereto as aforesaid and have caused their respective seals to be affixed on this 11th day of April, 1868.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HIGGINS] asks unanimous consent for three minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. PADGETT. I think I can dispose of the matter for the gentleman if he will simply extend his remarks.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request for additional time and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I think I can expedite the matter. I want to say that some time ago the department made a recommendation to abolish various yards, among them the ones included in this paragraph, but since that time the department has appointed a board composed of Navy officers and Army officers to take up and consider the whole scheme and project of a reorganization of the navy yards of the country, including the larger ones and the smaller ones. Then they sent me the letter which I put in the RECORD with reference to the changes they have made at Port Royal and the new work they have established there.

And it is also called to our attention that we have not yet established finally our policy, so far as the Caribbean Sea is concerned and the San Juan and Culebra yards there. If we release that land it goes back to the civil government, and in view of these recent changes and developments I am going to enlarge the motion, and move to amend by striking the whole paragraph out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee to strike out the entire paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HIGGINS. Did I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to say that a board had been created now by the Secretary of the Navy proposing to make some recommendations as to these yards?

Mr. PADGETT. With reference to all of the yards—the whole yard system of the country. It has been operating, I think, for some time.

Mr. HIGGINS. If we can get some scientific system, based upon facts, in the department as constituted now, with reference to these navy yards, naval stations, and coaling stations, I think it would be very wholesome and work to the lasting benefit of the Navy, and I had an amendment to do that very thing, which I had expected to offer, but in view of the statement of the chairman of the Naval Committee I will not offer it now.

Mr. PADGETT. That is being worked out now in the way I have stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. COLLIER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On May 20, 1912:

H. R. 12013. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Corsicana, Tex., certain land for alley purposes;

H. R. 13774. An act providing for the sale of the old post-office property at Providence, R. I., by public auction;

H. R. 22301. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Uvalde, Tex., a certain strip of land;

H. R. 22731. An act to extend the time for the construction of a dam across the Pend Oreille River, Wash.; and

H. R. 23407. An act authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Levisa Fork of the Big Sandy River.

On May 22, 1912:

H. R. 22343. An act to require supervising inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, to submit their annual reports at the end of each fiscal year.

On May 27, 1912:

H. R. 14052. An act authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to issue certain reports relating to cotton;

H. R. 19238. An act to amend section 90 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, and for other purposes;

H. R. 21590. An act to authorize levee and drainage district No. 25, of Dunklin County, Mo., to construct and maintain a levee across a branch or cut-off of St. Francis River, and to construct and maintain a levee across the mouth of the Varney River, in the State of Missouri;

H. R. 18335. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 18337. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 18954. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 18955. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery: For tolls and ferriages; care, transportation, and burial of the dead; purchase of books and stationery, binding of medical records, unbound books, and pamphlets; hygienic and sanitary investigation and illustration; sanitary and hygienic instruction; purchase and repairs of wagons, automobile ambulances, and harness; purchase of feed for horses and cows; trees, plants, garden tools, and seeds; incidental articles for the Naval Medical School and naval dispensary, Washington; rent of rooms for naval dispensary, Washington, D. C., not to exceed $1,200; naval medical supply depots, sick quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks; washing for medical department at Naval Medical School and naval dispensary, Washington; naval medical supply depots, sick quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks, dispensaries at navy yards and naval stations, and ships; and for minor repairs on buildings and grounds of the United States Naval Medical School and naval medical supply depots; for the care, maintenance, and treatment of the insane of the Navy and Marine Corps on the Pacific coast, and all other necessary contingent expenses; in all, $82,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. On page 39, lines 5, 6, and 7, I see a provision for "rent of rooms for naval dispensary, not to exceed $1,200." Is that something new?

Mr. PADGETT. It is new in this respect. In the growth of business and in the accumulation of documents, and so forth, the authorities have certified to the Navy Department that the weight of the load stored away in the building up here—in the Naval Annex, the Mills Building—has become so heavy that it is endangering the building. Consequently, the Secretary is compelled to move some of the force out of that building, and in order to do so he must rent another one in which to accumulate and take care of the supplies. Here is a letter to me, dated April 12, in which he says:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a report received from the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Department Building, calling attention to the fact that some of the rooms in the Navy Department Annex (Mills Building) are dangerously overloaded. Immediately upon the receipt of this report, instructions were given to remove the overload as far as possible by rearrangement of furniture and the transfer of inactive files of papers to the navy yard, Washington, D. C. The Bureau of Medicine and Surgery has reported that when it moved into the Mills Building, less than two years ago, only active files were taken there, and that none of the papers in rooms 701 and 703 can be spared. In order to remove the overload in these two rooms the bureau has suggested that the three rooms in the Mills Building now assigned to the naval dispensary be assigned to the bureau and quarters found elsewhere for the naval dispensary. It will be necessary to rent quarters for the naval dispensary, and inasmuch as the act of March 3, 1877, prohibits the renting of any building or the part of a building in the District of Columbia until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms, it is recommended there be restored to the appropriation "contingent, medicine and surgery, 1913," the provision formerly carried in the appropriation "for rent of rooms for naval dispensary, Washington, D. C.," to be inserted—

And so forth.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, the explanation is entirely clear and satisfactory, and I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That a Medical Reserve Corps, to be a constituent part of the Medical Department of the Navy, is hereby established under the same provisions, in all respects (except as may be necessary to adapt the said provisions to the Navy), as those providing a Medical Reserve Corps for the Army, and as set forth in the act to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the United States Army, approved April 23, 1908.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order until the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not this new legislation?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it is new legislation. It is subject to a point of order if it should be made. But I want to say that it does not involve any expense. A similar institution is provided for in the Army. This is proposed in order to enable the department——

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is it?

Mr. PADGETT. It is a Medical Reserve Corps, similar to that provided for in the Army. Dr. Stokes, the Surgeon General of the Navy, states that it is desirable that we should have a reserve organization of physicians and surgeons throughout the country, to have them identified with the Navy as they are with the Army. There is no appropriation, no salary, no expense involved; simply a connection, so that if war should break out or an emergency should arise, and Congress should authorize it, the Medical Department of the Navy could be in immediate communication with these men and bring them to the aid and support of the Navy.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; I yield the floor to the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I wanted to make a brief statement.

Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman says has no doubt been told to him, but ultimately it will involve increased appropriations. The Army had contract surgeons, and still has a few, but there have been gradually substituted for them medical reserve officers, who have gone into the Army, and little by little, with increasing celerity, too, the contract surgeons have been taken out of the service and regularly commissioned Army surgeons have been substituted for them.

Now, the additional cost that will come from that will be due to this fact, largely: In the first place, they get a rapid promotion at fixed intervals and more pay than the contract surgeon gets, and, in the second place, after having had a certain number of years' service, they will go on the retired list, which a contract surgeon did not do. Any gentleman will see upon a moment's reflection that that will increase the expenses of the service.

Mr. PADGETT. But this does not put them on the active list or on the retired list.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Neither was that done in the Army, but they take the places of the contract surgeons, and they have retiring privileges.

Mr. PADGETT. This provision does not carry any appropriation and it does not identify them in a strictly official sense with the organization of the Navy.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am not contending that it may not be wise. I am only contending that the statement of the gentleman that it will not involve any additional expense is not accurate.

Mr. PADGETT. I say it will not involve any additional expense unless Congress hereafter by legislation authorizes their payment or authorizes their enlistment in some way.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Have you contract surgeons in the Navy now?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. SLAYDEN. You have no contract surgeons?

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It may be a wise thing, Mr. Chairman. I am not prepared to say that it is not. But when we make provision for a class of men to go on the retired list it is going to increase the expenses, no matter what gentlemen may say about it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will it not be true that as the years go round these men will be knocking at the doors of Congress to be put on the retired list by a special bill?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not. This is simply to get the highest class of surgeons and physicians in the country on a list, so that, should an emergency arise, these men will be available for the Navy. I do not imagine that that class of men, the eminent physicians and surgeons throughout the country, would surrender their practice for the purpose of coming into the Navy unless it was from a patriotic motive or patriotic purpose, if an emergency arose, such as war. I contemplate no condition that would be inimical to the best interests of the country or of the Navy at all.

Mr. FOSTER. This is intended simply to have these physicians and surgeons as a reserve that may be called upon?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; should Congress authorize it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it intended, under this provision, that the surgeons of the Navy shall be in consultation with this reserve corps in reference to matters medical concerning the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. The Surgeon General thought that the surgeons of the Navy would get the benefit of their service, but it would involve no pay. It would simply mean that, courtesy and contact with these men in the reserve corps being established, he would feel at liberty to consult with them as you would with your neighbor. It does not involve a consultation with resulting fees.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is undoubtedly aware of the fact that under the present law a surgeon is not taken into the Navy beyond a certain age?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. This is on a point of order, and the five-minute rule does not apply.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to be recognized, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. FOSTER. They are not appointed in the Navy when they are above a certain age. I take it that this Reserve Corps will not be so limited.

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. This is similar to the provision for the Reserve Corps in the Army, is it?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; upon identically the same basis.

Mr. FOSTER. So that they may make surgeons members of the Reserve Corps in the Navy when they are beyond the age at which they are taken into the Navy as surgeons. That is true, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. I so understand.

Mr. FOSTER. So that in time of war there might be surgeons who would be members of the Medical Reserve Corps of the Navy who would be beyond the age for service in the Navy as now provided.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Who would not be eligible to appointment.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; they might come in. This is mostly for consultation——

Mr. FOSTER. It is largely for the purpose of consultation and getting the ideas of the surgeons of the country in private practice, for the good they may do the surgeons in the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. I so understand it.

Mr. FOSTER. So that there will be cooperation between physicians in private practice and those who are in the service of the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. And give the Navy the benefit of their cooperation and coordination.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to get some information from the chairman with reference to this particular section. As I understand its provisions, it is practically the same as was enacted in 1908 for the Army.

Mr. PADGETT. It is identically the same provision, changed so as to adapt it to the Navy.

Mr. HOWARD. As I understand the terms of that provision, the appointment of these surgeons in the reserve corps is simply honorary, and in time of war the Government can call upon these surgeons for their services. The regular surgeons in the Navy will, of course, be engaged in their active duties, and these others are supposed to be held in reserve, so that when the hospital ships bring in the sick and wounded they can care for them.

Now, I want to ask what provision is made for dental surgeons in this section, or is there any provision made?

Mr. PADGETT. You will remember that the other day we offered as a committee amendment a provision for dental surgeons, and it went out upon a point of order. I will state to the gentleman that before the conclusion of the bill I am going to ask unanimous consent to return and reoffer it, to see if upon reflection and further investigation of the matter those who objected to it before may not be willing to let it go in.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman state, for the information of the House, whether the Navy Department has any dental surgeons at all now?

Mr. PADGETT. The Navy has a makeshift arrangement.

Mr. HOWARD. Do not the men have to pay for the service?

Mr. PADGETT. The Navy has no dental corps, and it needs one very much. The committee reported a dental-surgeon bill, which is on the calendar, and by authority of the committee I offered it earlier in the consideration of this bill, but it was objected to and went out on a point of order. A dental corps exists in the Army, and the provision that we reported and asked to incorporate in the bill was identical with the Army provision. With the more than 60,000 men that we have in the Navy, and with no dental corps, the efficiency, health, and even the lives of the sailors are unnecessarily jeopardized by this lack.

Mr. HOWARD. Under the present law the Army gets the benefit of dental surgery.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. But the Navy does not; and if the men get the benefit of dental surgery they have to pay for it out of their own pockets?

Mr. PADGETT. To some extent.

Mr. HOWARD. Not the regular rates, but they do pay an appreciable amount for the service?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and then they get inferior service.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, there is no point of order against this section, and I want to offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 16, page 40:

"Provided, That the professional degree and qualification prescribed as a requirement for appointment to said Reserve Corps shall be varied to include, in suitable proportion to conserve the health and efficiency of the personnel of the naval service, the professional degree and qualification required by standard American universities and colleges for graduation in dental surgery."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I did not quite catch that. Is that intended to have a dental reserve corps?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute for the amendment the dental surgeon bill that covers the whole question. It is the bill that was offered the other day, is identical with the Army provision, and creates a dental corps in the Navy identical with that in the Army, so that we can look after the welfare of the 60,000 men in the Navy.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment and the substitute.

Mr. GOOD. I reserve a point of order on the amendment and the substitute.

Mr. PADGETT. That comes too late to offer it to the amendment after we have debated it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Tennessee is well taken as to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. FOSTER. It might not be germane to this particular item in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 40, after line 16, insert the following measure:

"That the appointment of not more than 30 assistant dental surgeons be, and the same is hereby, authorized, said assistant dental surgeons to be a part of the Medical Department of the United States Navy, to serve professionally the personnel of the naval service, and to perform such other duties as may be prescribed by competent authority.

"That all original appointments herein authorized shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy in the grade of acting assistant dental surgeon, and all appointees to such grade shall be citizens of the United States between 24 and 32 years of age, and shall be graduates of standard medical or dental colleges trained in the several branches of dentistry, of good moral character, of unquestionable professional repute, and before appointment shall pass satisfactory physical and professional examinations, including tests of skill in practical dentistry, of proficiency in the several usual subjects in a standard dental college course, and in such other subjects of general education as are now or may hereafter be required for admission to the Medical Corps of the Navy.

"That at the end of three years from the passage of this act all acting assistant dental surgeons who have had two or more years' service under their original appointment, as herein provided, shall undergo such physical and competitive professional examinations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe to determine their fitness to receive commissions in the Navy, and if found qualified they shall be appointed assistant dental surgeons, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), in the order of standing as determined by the professional examinations provided for in this section.

"That after the competitive examinations provided for in section 3 of this act have been held, acting assistant dental surgeons thereafter appointed shall serve a probationary period of three years, and upon the completion of such period shall undergo such examinations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe to determine their fitness to receive commissions in the Navy, and, if found qualified, they shall be appointed assistant dental surgeons, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade).

"That if any acting assistant dental surgeon shall fail upon the examinations prescribed in sections 3 and 4 of this act he shall be honorably discharged from the naval service, and the appointment of an acting dental surgeon may be revoked at any time in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

"That all appointees authorized by this act shall take rank and precedence next below other officers of the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) now or hereafter commissioned in the Navy, and shall not exercise command over persons in the Navy other than dental surgeons and such enlisted men as may be detailed to assist them by competent authority.

"That all officers authorized by this act shall receive the same pay and allowances as officers of corresponding rank and length of service in the Medical Corps of the Navy.

"That all officers authorized by the preceding sections of this act shall be eligible to retirement in the same manner and under the same conditions as officers of the Medical Corps of the Navy: Provided, That section 1445 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable to the officers herein authorized: And provided further, That the dentist now employed at the Naval Academy shall not be displaced by the operation of this act.

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to appoint, for temporary service, suitably qualified acting dental surgeons when necessary to the health and efficiency of the personnel of the naval service: Provided, That the total strength of the dental corps, including those appointed for temporary service under this section, shall not exceed the proportion of one to each thousand of the authorized enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps: Provided further, That appointments issued under authority of this section may be revoked at any time, shall have no legal force or effect except for the time the temporary appointee is in active service, and shall include no right of retirement.

"That all appointments authorized by this act, except the appointment of acting dental surgeons, shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is pending.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, while I am not in favor of increasing officers in the Government service where it is not necessary, yet we have had in the Army a Dental Reserve Corps and dentists connected with the Army. It is even of more importance, it seems to me, that we should have dentists in the Navy than it is in the Army. When a man goes to sea he is away from where he can secure the proper services of a dentist if treatment may be necessary. It is well known now that teeth to a man in the Navy or the Army or in civil life is a very important thing, and if not in proper condition may seriously affect his health. We know that when one is suffering with a severe case of toothache he is not fit for any kind of duty.

Mr. BUTLER. Not even that of a soldier.

Mr. FOSTER. No; nor that of a sailor. It seems to me that it is important to the Navy of our country, because on every battleship we have a thousand or more men. I say it is of even more importance to the Navy than it is to the Army. I shall be very glad, indeed, to support this amendment, believing that it is very necessary for the success and welfare of the Navy.

There is one matter in this substitute which I think ought to be changed, that is that it provides for men going into the dental service of the Navy at 32 years of age. It is now provided in the Army that they go in at not over 27 years of age, as I am informed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN]. I think the substitute ought to be changed in that respect.

Mr. PADGETT. I will ask, Mr. Chairman, unanimous consent that my amendment be modified by striking out the word "thirty-two" and inserting "twenty-seven."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the substitute now reads, "and all appointees to such grades shall be citizens of the United States between 24 and 32 years of age." As I understand it, the chairman of the committee has consented to modify his amendment, and I suggest the language be amended to read that "appointees to such grades shall be citizens of the United States not over 27 years of age." That will make it correspond to the act providing for a dental corps in the Army. I will accept that modification, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the provision as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all original appointees herein authorized shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy in the grade of acting assistant dental surgeon, and all appointees to such grade shall be citizens of the United States not over 27 years of age.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the modification to the amendment in the nature of a substitute will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, personally I have no objection to this provision. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what the cost will be to the Government, and also if the provision has been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. It has been recommended for years and years by the different Secretaries and by the Surgeons General of the Navy, and we reported it out, I think, in the last Congress and put it on the calendar, but in the press of business could not get it considered. It is on the calendar now by unanimous report of the members of the committee, and we were authorized by committee action to ask permission to put it in this bill so as to get consideration of it, as there is but little prospect of reaching consideration under the calendar procedure.

Mr. GOOD. What becomes of these dentists after their service in the Navy? Are they placed on the retired list at any pay?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; just as in the Army, after they reach the age of 62 years and have a service of 30 years they will be placed on the retired list with a grade of lieutenant, as I remember. They can not get above the grade of lieutenant.

Mr. GOOD. As I understand the amendment, they are limited so that they can not perform this service after they are 34 years of age.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; they can not be appointed; they must be young men when they are appointed.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, here is the paragraph that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] was asking about which defines their official rank:

That after the competitive examinations provided for in section 3 of this act have been held acting assistant dental surgeons thereafter appointed shall serve a probationary period of three years, and upon the completion of such period shall undergo such examinations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe to determine their fitness to receive commissions in the Navy, and if found qualified they shall be appointed assistant dental surgeons, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade).

It is in connection with this definition of the naval rank that I wanted to ask a question of the gentleman from Tennessee. To what rank in the Army does the rank of lieutenant in the junior grade correspond?

Mr. PADGETT. First lieutenant.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then they are appointed practically as first lieutenants in the Army?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; after three years of service.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I assume that you provide here for promotion at stated periods in their service?

Mr. PADGETT. I think they are limited in their promotions.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is what I wanted to find out. It was impossible to tell from the reading of the Clerk.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, while these gentlemen are looking that up I think it is of some importance that we should know something about how promotions are to be made. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] are trying to find out if this makes ample provision for these promotions in the proper way and whether the bill ought to be changed——

Mr. PADGETT. As I say, they do not have any promotion. They are limited to lieutenants of the junior grade.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What about the pay? Don't they get an increase of pay?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand they do.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. They get the pay provided for lieutenant of the junior grade. I understand that both in the Army and in the Navy after five years of service they get an increase of pay, but they do not get any increase of grade. They are held to the position of lieutenants of the junior grade, and with five years of service they get an increase of pay just as in the Army.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then do they get fogey pay, as they call it in the Army, for each five years of service until they shall have had it four times? Is that the rule in the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do they get the longevity pay equal to that of similar rank in the Army?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee what this language in section 8 means:

SEC. 8. That all officers authorized by the preceding sections of this act shall be eligible to retirement in the same manner and under the same conditions as officers of the Medical Corps of the Navy: Provided, That section 1445 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable to the officers herein authorized.

I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to inform the House what that refers to. What does section 1445 of the Revised Statutes mean?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not tell you right now. I looked it up, but it has escaped my mind at this moment. The Clerk will get it.

Mr. HOWARD. I have it here—section 1445 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. PADGETT. There is the statute right there.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, without knowledge of the influence on this legislation that the statute referred to may have, it is legislating in the dark. We do not know what privileges we are granting this new class of officers. We do not know what limit there will be in the end even on the expenditures touching them. There is a statement in the same paragraph that the dentist now employed at the Naval Academy shall not be displaced by the operation of this act. I take it for granted that the dentist at the Naval Academy is a more highly paid person; and I can look a little bit ahead and see the time come when, as an employee of the Government at better pay than is provided for these dentists who are to be appointed, he will come in here with a special bill, after having reached the age of 62 years, or approximately that, and ask to be retired with the pay and allowances of a lieutenant dentist.

Mr. HOWARD. I have the statute here if the gentleman wants to hear it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia to read the section of the Revised Statutes that applies to this legislation.

Mr. HOWARD. You have to read 1443 and 1444 in order to get the sense of 1445:

SEC. 1443. When any officer of the Navy has been 40 years in the service of the United States he may be retired from active service by the President upon his own application.

SEC. 1444. When any officer before the rank of vice admiral is 62 years old, he shall, except in the case provided in the next section, be retired by the President from active service.

SEC. 1445. The two preceding sections shall not apply to any lieutenant commander, lieutenant, master, ensign, midshipman, passed assistant surgeon, passed assistant paymaster, first assistant engineer, assistant surgeon, assistant paymaster, or second assistant engineer, and such officers shall not be placed on the retired list except on account of physical or mental disability

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] is familiar with it. I will ask him if this is intended to be a limitation upon their retirement?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And they will not retire at the age of 62 years?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. No; the idea is they will retire at 62. If you read sections 1743 and 1744——

Mr. SLAYDEN. This is section 1445 I am referring to.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Section 1445, taken with the two preceding sections, shows precisely what is meant.

Mr. PADGETT. Section 1445 provides that certain officers are to be retired only for disability. A lieutenant of the junior grade is included in this provision. Now, this gives the retirement privilege for age, and gives them the privilege, when they reach the rank of lieutenant of the junior grade, that they can be retired at 62 years of age. This statute we do not want to apply to them, because this statute prohibits retirement except for physical disabilities.

Mr. SLAYDEN. You mean to say officers covered by that section of the Revised Statutes retire at 62 now?

Mr. PADGETT. It says:

The two preceding sections shall not apply to any lieutenant commander, lieutenant, master, ensign, midshipman, passed assistant surgeon, passed assistant paymaster, first assistant engineer, assistant surgeon, assistant paymaster, or second assistant engineer; and such officers shall not be placed upon the retired list, except on account of physical or mental disability.

Mr. SLAYDEN. No matter what their age?

Mr. PADGETT. But this gives them the right to retire at the age of 62. These dental surgeons are given the right to retire at 62, and for that reason it is excepted from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman another question about this and I would like to have the gentleman from Massachusetts give his attention to it also. It says that the dentist now employed at the Naval Academy shall not be displaced by the operation of this act. Who is he, and why not?

Mr. PADGETT. There is one dentist who is provided by law for the Naval Academy for the 900 midshipmen that are there. He is not under the Medical Corps. This establishment of the dental corps is intended for the general Navy of the enlisted sailormen.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is the dentist now employed in the Navy an officer?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How did he become an officer? By special act?

Mr. PADGETT. By some special act; yes, sir.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What rank has he?

Mr. PADGETT. I think it is lieutenant, junior grade.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Are you sure he is an officer?

Mr. PADGETT. That is my understanding; yes, sir.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This does not indicate it. It says "the dentist now employed at the Naval Academy."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to know what is the compensation of the dentist at the Naval Academy, because I suspect that he is being employed at a figure very much higher than is to be paid to the lieutenant, junior grade, and the reason he is not taken into that corps by legislation is that he wants the advantage of the additional salary he is now receiving.

Mr. PADGETT. I find that he is not an officer.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is as I suspected. The dentist employed at the Naval Academy is not an officer, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] seemed for a moment to think, but is employed at a compensation in excess of that which is provided for the lieutenants of the junior grade that will be created by this act. I do not know what his age is. But I think the bill ought to be amended in that particular, at least, and that we ought not to have a dentist now in the naval service who is having higher compensation than officers in the corps will get and who will, beyond all doubt, come later and ask for special legislative retirement.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] is recognized.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The dentist at the Naval Academy has charge of all the dental work at the academy. He is the only dentist there.

Mr. PADGETT. West Point has two.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. West Point has two. The dentist at the academy is obliged to maintain his establishment, support his family, and does not get any allowances from the Government except his salary, and has 900 cadets to look after at all times, except during the short period of vacation. This is not the place to reduce a salary, and I hope the gentleman from Texas will not attempt to interfere with the management of the Naval Academy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] to the amedment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The question was taken, and the substitute as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the Chair for the situation here as to this item in the bill. As I understand, this substitute was introduced as a substitute for an amendment offered by myself, and that amendment was to this particular section in this bill providing for the Medical Reserve Corps in the Navy. Now, as I understand the situation, there is no Medical Reserve Corps in the Navy, and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee and just adopted provides for an active——

Mr. PADGETT. Dental corps.

Mr. HOWARD. Dental corps. His substitute does not provide for anything that my amendment provided for. My amendment provided for an additional number of dental surgeons to the reserve corps, and specifying they should come under a certain grade of examination, or should be graduates of certain standard colleges. Now, then, the effect of the substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is that he has added to the active list in the Navy certain dental surgeons, but he has made no provision by that substitute for what my amendment sought to reach, by providing for dental surgeons in the reserve corps.

Mr. FOSTER. We do not care so much for the reserve corps.

Mr. HOWARD. The proposition is simply this: As I understand the situation, since 1796 there have been medical officers in the Army, and about 50 years after that they commenced having some dentists in the Army. But I would like to get recognition in this substitute provision here for the dental surgeons. In other words, in a battle, if these men are brought to shore and they have got these officers in reserve there, very likely a shell will burst and knock a fellow's teeth out, or break them off, and they need the dental surgeons as well as medical surgeons. And my amendment to the amendment prepared by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] simply provides for the selection of certain dental surgeons to be placed in reserve.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that when his amendment was pending the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] offered a substitute which replaced the entire plan with respect to the organization of the dental corps. No point of order was made, and the committee adopted the substitute and fastened that on the original provisions of the bill. And it is not the province of the Chair to say what would be the effect of the amendment or the substitute. The committee has taken that course.

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman that as it is in the bill, it gives us a Medical Reserve Corps, and the amendment gives us an active dental corps.

Mr. HOWARD. The thing I want to reach is not the active dental surgeons at all. I simply offered an amendment, which was germane to this section, providing for dental surgeons in the reserve corps. I do not know whether the gentleman's substitute absorbed this or not.

Mr. PADGETT. The substitute adopted provides for the employment of a certain number of contract dental surgeons, as well as the enlisted men, and I think that takes care of the question fully.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the test of qualifications for appointment to the said reserve corps and to the dental corps may be varied to suit the subjects of such branch of the healing art or specialty of surgery of which specialists may be required, and in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy such specialists may be grouped separately.

Mr. GOOD. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. The purpose of the provision, Mr. Chairman, is to ascertain the qualifications of doctors, dentists, eye specialists, and ear specialists, whatever they may be, who may come into the reserve corps or into the dental corps by men who are themselves specialists in those branches. In other words, if in the Medical Reserve Corps we want some ear specialists, we do not want their qualifications to be ascertained by dentists. If we want dentists, we do not want their qualifications to be ascertained by eye specialists. That is the only purpose of the amendment—to enable the Secretary of the Navy to have specialists determine upon the qualifications for admission to either of these corps by specialists of the same kind.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Are you not making provision in that amendment for something of a revolution in the manner of admitting medical officers to the Navy?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. This applies only to the reserve corps and the dental corps that has been established. It does not apply to the admission of surgeons into the Navy. It applies only to admissions to the reserve corps and the dental corps that we are creating.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The law prescribes the class of examinations required for admission in the Medical Corps now and the persons by whom the board of examiners shall be appointed and who the members of the board shall be. That is a regulation, I suppose, that the gentleman is proposing?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Yes. We are undertaking to allow the Secretary of the Navy to prescribe specialists to pass upon the qualifications of specialists.

Mr. SLAYDEN. May I ask the gentleman if under the authority to make regulations the Secretary of the Navy could not do that now, provided he did not involve the Government in unauthorized expenditures?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I am not certain whether he can or not, but this makes it absolutely clear that he may. There is no objection in the slightest to the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

Provisions, Navy: For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to caterers of messes, in case of death or desertion, upon orders of the commanding officers, commuted rations for officers on sea duty (other than commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Pay Corps, chaplains, chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief carpenters, chief machinists, and chief sailmakers) and midshipmen, and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited to the naval-hospital fund; subsistence of officers and men unavoidably detained or absent from vessels to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefor to be given); and for subsistence of female nurses, and Navy and Marine Corps general courts-martial prisoners undergoing imprisonment with sentences of dishonorable discharge from the service at the expiration of such confinement: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to commute rations for such general courts-martial prisoners in such amounts as seem to him proper, which may vary in accordance with the location of the naval prison, but which shall in no case exceed 30 cents per diem for each ration so commuted; labor in general storehouses and paymasters' offices in navy yards, including naval stations maintained in island possessions under the control of the United States, and expenses in handling stores purchased and manufactured under the general account of advances; and for the purchase of United States Army emergency rations, as required: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the general storehouses and paymasters' offices of the navy yards and naval stations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, shall not exceed $492,299.36; in all, $8,542,328.25.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I must admit that I am at a loss to know how to reach in this very large appropriation contained in this paragraph the items I conceive to be subject to a point of order. Upon investigation the Chairman will see that this appropriation exceeds that of the preceding year by nearly a million dollars.

Mr. PADGETT. May I interrupt the gentleman just a moment?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes. I will be glad to have any information I can get.

Mr. PADGETT. There is an increase of $532,768 on account of the 4,000 enlisted men that we have authorized in the first part of the bill, and——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Before the gentleman leaves that point, I think the chairman of the committee is mistaken on that. The evidence shows on the two hundred and eighty-third page that the amount of increase is $261,000.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman will remember that that was for 2,000 additional men and that the committee subsequently reported 4,000 men, so that it doubles that amount. That makes the $532,761.

Now, then, you will remember that there has been an increase in the daily ration for all of the men. For 48,000 men there is an increase in the cost of the daily ration.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Does the gentleman mean to say that it has been recommended by the committee that there shall be an increase?

Mr. PADGETT. No; there is an actual increase in the prices that they have to pay for food for the men. This is for feeding the men, caring for them, and purchasing the supplies. It is just a matter of mathematical calculation. There are so many men and so many other things provided for, and with these additional men and with the additional cost of food, and so forth, it takes just that much more. That is one of the paragraphs in the bill that is just based upon a mathematical calculation.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I understand that, but the evidence shows that it is vague. On page 283 of the hearings you will find that Admiral Cowie testified that the recommendation was for $8,325,943.95, but that the Secretary of the Navy thought that could be cut $50,000, and they cut it $50,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. It looks to me a loose way of doing. Millions are involved; the Secretary of the Navy recommends one thing, and then with the stroke of a pen changes his estimates. This carries out my argument that the committee thoroughly investigate and not let the department's recommendation necessarily control.

Mr. PADGETT. There is a very clear explanation there, if the gentleman will just read it. The Secretary first asked for 2,000 more enlisted men, and he said that the total cost would be $8,325,943.95 for the establishment, but he said that it would be impossible for him to enlist all of the 2,000 men at one time, and that they would not all be chargeable for the total 365 days in the year. He thought that on account of not being able to enlist them all at the beginning of the fiscal year he could reduce the amount by $50,000, and the committee accepted that; but later developments occurred, with the new ships coming into commission and under contingencies and emergencies arising, so that it was deemed proper to report in favor of 4,000 additional men.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Who deemed it proper to report 4,000 additional men.

Mr. PADGETT. It was submitted to the full committee, and was agreed to by a unanimous vote. There was not a single man present who voted against it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. It did not receive my vote. Not only that, I protested against the amount in this bill, both in committee room and on the floor of this House, and was always present at the hearings.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know about that, but I know it was submitted to the committee, and the committee agreed to it, and directed an increase of 4,000 men. Therefore we had to double the amount that would be required for 2,000 men, and that made $532,000 for 4,000 men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: For fuel, books and blanks, stationery, interior fittings for general storehouses and pay offices in navy yards; coffee mills and repairs thereto; expenses of naval clothing factory and machinery for same; tolls, ferriages, yeoman's stores, safes, newspapers, and other incidental expenses, $200,000: Provided, That hereafter worn-out typewriting and computing machines for the naval establishment may be exchanged as a part of the purchase price of new ones.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What has been done with the old typewriters and computing machines heretofore?

Mr. PADGETT. Heretofore they have just been sold for what they could get for them and the money turned into the Treasury; but it has been represented to us that if they were allowed, as individuals are when they go to purchase, to put in their old machines, they could get far more for them when put in with the company in that way than they could get by buying and paying all cash for the new machines and selling the old ones for junk. This is giving the department that business discretion.

Mr. HOWARD. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR.

Construction and repair of vessels: For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; steam steerers, pneumatic steerers, steam capstans, steam windlasses, aeroplanes (not to exceed $10,000), and all other auxiliaries; labor in navy yards and on foreign stations; purchase of machinery and tools for use in shops; carrying on work of experimental model tank; designing naval vessels; construction and repair of yard craft, lighters, and barges; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat; general care, increase, and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses for vessels and navy yards, inspectors' offices, such as photographing, books, professional magazines, plans, stationery, and instruments for drafting room, and for pay of classified force under the bureau, $8,479,144: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 10 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any other ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 20 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home. And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make expenditures from appropriate funds under the various bureaus for repairs and changes on the vessels herein named, in an amount not to exceed the sum specified for each vessel, respectively, as follows: Connecticut, $250,000; Vermont, $250,000; Albany, $350,000; New Orleans, $350,000; Minneapolis, $284,000; Columbia, $292,000; Sylvia, $14,000; Solace, $120,000; Panther, $100,000; Piscataqua, $45,000; Active, $38,000; Unadilla, $43,000; Uncas, $33,000; Penacook, $23,000; Samoset, $23,000; Pompey, $38,000; Yantic, $38,000; Prometheus, to convert to a repair ship, $350,000; in all, $2,641,000: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and offices of superintending naval constructors, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, shall not exceed $808,039.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, line 21, after the word "Prometheus," add the words "or Vestal."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, at page 45, line 5, by striking out the period, inserting a semicolon, and adding:

"Provided, No part of any money appropriated in this act shall be used for construction or repair of vessels at navy yards or naval stations in the United States by enlisted men of the Navy."

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be passed for the present and be considered as pending.

Mr. PADGETT. I suppose we might dispose of it now. Is there any special reason why the gentleman wants it passed over?

Mr. MURRAY. The only reason is that it is in line with the labor amendments heretofore offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], which have been passed over.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order, if the gentleman from Tennessee does not.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that the amendment is in order, but I raise the point of order that the gentleman from Georgia is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman thinks that the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts is well taken.

Mr. MURRAY. The only purpose I have in having the matter postponed is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], a member of the committee, has several labor amendments which are practically on the same subject matter and which have already been passed and are pending.

Mr. PADGETT. Very well, Mr. Chairman, I will consent to its being passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts will be passed for the present and considered pending.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretaries of War and Navy are authorized to cause to be made from any parts of the wreck of the Maine or its equipment that are suitable for the purpose tablets for donation as relics in conformity with the provisions of the act of December 22, 1911, making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies: Provided, That the cost of such tablets may be charged against any unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the removal of the wreck of the Maine and that the municipalities and other bodies receiving such tablets shall defray the cost thereof, which cost shall be reimbursed to the proper appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I have a letter upon that matter from the Secretary of the Navy that gives such a clear explanation that I think I will read it. It is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 7, 1912.

Hon. LEMUEL P. PADGETT, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Referring to the provision in the urgent deficiency appropriations act of December 22, 1911, that authorizes the distribution of relics of the wreck of the Maine, I have the honor to say that the articles, materials, and parts of the vessel that are of such a character as to show what they are or, so to say, speak for themselves, are not numerous enough to supply those asking for and entitled to mementos. There are available other materials and parts that could, with comparatively slight expense, be made into tablets authenticating the fact that they were once a part of the Maine, and such tablets would be equally valuable with other articles from the vessel.

It is believed that the best way to accomplish a satisfactory disposition of mementos of this latter kind would be for the department to have the tablets made and carry the expense thereof in each case until reimbursement could be made by the donee, and in order to facilitate such distribution it is requested that the provision of law mentioned above be amended so as to authorize the use temporarily of funds appropriated for work on the wreck of the Maine upon condition that the beneficiaries shall defray such expenses and the proper appropriations be reimbursed accordingly.

Inclosed herewith is a draft of provision that would, it is believed, accomplish this purpose satisfactorily. The effect of it would be simply to enable the War and Navy Departments to have tablets made up to suit organizations and municipalities requesting relics without waiting for estimates of cost to be made, approved, and accepted, while providing at the same time that, as required by the original law, no part of the expense of distribution of relics shall be ultimately borne by the Government.

This draft is in such form that it may be introduced as a separate measure or inserted as a provision in some other appropriate bill.

It is requested that this amendment receive favorable and early consideration by the committee.

Faithfully, yours,

G. V. L. MEYER.

In other words, there are large parts of the wreck of iron and steel that can be made into tablets with an inscription upon it authenticating that it was a part of the battleship Maine. They can be distributed to any city, hamlet, town, or community, or association, or Grand Army post, who would only have to pay the actual cost of molding these into tablets.

Mr. GOOD. How much remains of the unexpended balance appropriated for raising the wreck?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know that I can tell.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that I have been advised by the Navy Department that the total expense of making these tablets will not exceed $1,500.

Mr. GOOD. What assurance has the department that the municipalities or associations authorized under the law to receive them will order them and pay for them?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. They have more applications now than they can grant.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but those are free applications.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. They have to pay the cost of transportation.

Mr. PADGETT. Under the existing law they have to pay the expenses of transportation and handling, and this additional expense will be comparatively small. Of course, it would depend upon the demand for them, but the department says it is flooded now with demands for these relics, and that they are incapable of meeting them, and the suggestion is made to make these mementoes out of what remains of the wreck and supply this great demand, and the Government at the same time will be put to no expense.

Mr. GOOD. Is the gentleman satisfied that there will be no expense to the Government in the manufacturing and disposing of these mementoes?

Mr. PADGETT. I should think the cost of it would be so little that it would be entirely covered, but if it should not be, and they were left on the hands of the Government, the cost would be very small. The gentleman must remember that as time rolls around the value of these mementoes will become much greater.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman from Iowa reserve a point of order?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. A point of order is reserved.

Mr. BARTLETT. A point of order is reserved, and the point of order is good, I apprehend. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee in what way this amends the urgent deficiency bill passed at this session of Congress providing funds for the raising of the Maine and the disposition of the various parts of the wreck that might be preserved.

Mr. PADGETT. It does not in terms amend the act.

Mr. BARTLETT. It changes the law.

Mr. PADGETT. By this subsequent legislation it will give authority to take this old material and make it into tablets with an inscription on it authenticating the fact that it was made out of a part of the battleship, and that the expense of it shall be borne by the recipients of the tablets.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Subcommittee on Appropriations had hearings and went into this matter very thoroughly. The Secretary of the Navy submitted to it at that time a plan, which was agreed to by the subcommittee, the full committee, and reported to the House, by which it was determined in what manner certain parts of this battleship should be disposed of, and to whom it should be disposed of. It was discussed on the floor of the House, amendments were offered, and it was thought proper then, when the matter was fresh in the minds of the House, that nothing further should be done about the matter than was done in that bill, reported to and passed upon by the House. We knew that from all parts of the country would come innumerable requests for parts of this ship, to be preserved as memorials or relics, and it was then thought proper to confine it in such a way that it could be used only in a certain way. This appropriation bill proposes to do an entirely different thing, and to add to or amend that act.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. This act does not change the societies that are to receive the relics.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. But when they came to collect the relics from the Maine, if we may term them such, it was found that the greater portion of the material available is in such shape or form as to be not at all desirable by anybody for relics. In other words, it is broken and twisted iron, brass, copper, and bronze that does not on its face indicate that it ever was on the Maine or anywhere near it. So far as its appearance goes, it might have been taken from any junk pile in any junk dealer's yard. The people who are entitled to relics and who are applying for them can not get suitable relics from the department because the department has not got them, because there were so few that were saved from that ship. The whole purpose of this provision is to make available for the very purposes of the act to which the gentleman alludes this mass of scrap, which can be cast into tablets carrying on their face the fact that they are from the battleship Maine.

Mr. BARTLETT. But that is not the purpose of it. The whole purpose is to authorize a certain class of persons to receive them other than those already authorized.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Oh, no; I beg the gentleman's pardon. He has not thoroughly read the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. It does not enlarge the beneficiaries or the recipients that are limited by the act which was reported by the Committee on Appropriations. This is simply to authorize putting these relics into shape for distribution to the ones authorized by the former act. The language is:

> For donation as relics, in conformity with the provisions of the act of December 22, 1911, making appropriations to supply deficiencies, etc.

It does not enlarge the scope of that act.

Mr. BARTLETT. We appropriated money for the raising of the Maine and we appropriated money for this purpose in that deficiency bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and this is simply to allow them to change the character of the relics so as to make them available, and for identification so that if they should accept a relic it would show what it is, but no other beneficiary, no other donee can get one except those provided for in the act reported by the Committee on Appropriations and passed by Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. It does not change the manner of distribution?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Not at all.

Mr. BARTLETT. Nor the persons or municipalities?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Not at all. Let me say further to the gentleman, there are pieces of brass piping and sheets of copper that indicate nothing on their face. The Spanish War camp, the municipality, or the Grand Army post that is entitled to a relic from the Maine, on application under the existing law, does not care for a common piece of brass piping which means nothing. It is no ornament, and this merely provides the manner by which this junk—and that is what it is—can be put into a form that will be acceptable and desirable on the part of those who are entitled to receive the relics, and the whole cost is to be paid by those people.

Mr. BARTLETT. This is not to incur any expense?

Mr. PADGETT. None whatever to the Government.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. It is simply to carry out and expedite the provisions of the act to which the gentleman referred. The unexpended money for the raising of the Maine is to be made available and is to be reimbursed by the people who receive the relics at the cost of preparing the tablets.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to make the point of order after that statement, but I thought, on reading the provision of the bill, that it was an effort to amend a proposition which had been very carefully considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and we thought we had reached a conclusion which was satisfactory to the Navy Department.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. And it is perfectly satisfactory to our committee.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question or two about this unexpended balance. I do not know whether there is an unexpended balance of the money appropriated for the raising of the Maine.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that there is, and that is a matter that is under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, and not under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Naval Affairs; hence I have not gone into the expenditure of that. This matter does not involve the question of the accounting for the amount appropriated. That is altogether with the other committee. Ours is simply to authorize to put this junk of material in a condition so that if a town in your district applies for a piece it would get something that would be identified.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that; but that is not my object. I want to know if it is not true that the unexpended balance appropriated for any definite purpose reverts back into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly it does; yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, I want to know if it is not a further fact that before an unexpended balance can be used for any purpose it must be reappropriated for the new use?

Mr. PADGETT. If it is already appropriated, and if we enlarge the uses to which it might be applied, the authorization would be sufficient under the law, it having already been appropriated.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is what is proposed to be done here—to give that authorization.

Mr. PADGETT. That is right; that is the proposition.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman considers that the transforming of a part of the wreck of the Maine into relics is only an addition to the idea of the original appropriation, and that it can be carried into effect without making a reappropriation of the money?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not need an additional appropriation of money. We have already appropriated the money, and this is simply for authority to use it in addition to the purposes specified in the appropriation.

Mr. FOWLER. Suppose there is not an unexpended balance?

Mr. PADGETT. Then there would have to be an appropriation, but when there is an unexpended balance—for instance, once that the Constitution is complied with and Congress has appropriated, there can be an authorization which simply enlarges the scope of the original proposition.

Mr. FOWLER. This provision simply intends to enlarge the scope of a former appropriation with reference to the same subject matter.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOWLER. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I am not very much worried about the great expense that it is going to cost, because I do not think it is going to amount to very much, because there is a provision for the return of the amount expended to the Government. What I am worried about is, are we going to get enough of these relics to go around?

Mr. PADGETT. That is what the department is trying to do now.

Mr. HOWARD. Has the gentleman any idea that it is going to give enough to go around to all the towns and municipalities that may want it? For instance, I know now since this agitation has gotten up every town in my district practically wants a relic, and I want to know if there is going to be enough to go around. If there are, I should be for it, and if not, I think I should be against it.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know how many relics it will make, but I will say, as far as my district is concerned, I have had only one application.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman's district is very modest, because they know he gets so many other things.

Mr. PADGETT. I have only one request from my district. The object is to break this old junk up and make it into available tablets.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Steam machinery: For completion, repairing, and preservation of machinery and boilers of naval vessels, including cost of new boilers; distilling, refrigerating, aeroplane, and auxiliary machinery; preservation of and small repairs to machinery and boilers in vessels in ordinary, receiving and training vessels; repair and care of machinery of yard tugs and launches, and for pay of classified force under the bureau, $4,250,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for aeroplane machinery shall not exceed $20,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if we did not have a provision for this aeroplane proposition the other day? Do not we have this aeroplane proposition carried further on in the bill?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; there is still another place in the bill. Under the Bureau of Navigation there was appropriated $10,000, and under the Bureau of Steam Engineering there is an appropriation of $20,000; and then under the Bureau of Construction and Repair there is an appropriation of $10,000; making $40,000. Under the different bureaus under the law they have certain functions to perform. For instance, the Bureau of Steam Engineering has to deal with engines and machinery. The Bureau of Construction and Repair has to deal with what you might call the hull; and if we compare the flying machines and airships, that is the part that is outside of the machinery——

Mr. HOWARD. I understand; you appropriate separately for each one.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; for each department.

Mr. HOWARD. I understand.

Mr. FOWLER. I wanted to ask a question about the appropriation for the aeroplane. I saw in another place an appropriation for the same thing.

Mr. PADGETT. There are three places in there. I just explained it to the gentlemen. The appropriation is provided so as to meet the duties as distributed by law to the different bureaus. For instance, under the Bureau of Navigation, which has to do with the personnel of the Navy, the men who fly, we made the appropriation of $10,000 to meet their requirement.

Mr. FOWLER. That is on page 43?

Mr. PADGETT. That is on page 4 or 5, away back in the first part of the bill. Then on page 45, here, we have $20,000 under the Bureau of Steam Engineering. That relates to the engines and the machinery and the machine parts of the aeroplanes. Then, under the Bureau of Construction and Repair there is an appropriation of $10,000, which relates to that part of the aeroplane which might be called the hull or body.

The law, in apportioning the duties of these different bureaus, limits them to certain parts. For instance, the Bureau of Steam Engineering can handle the machinery, but can not have anything to do with the handling of the body of the machine. The Bureau of Construction and Repair must make the body of the machine, but it can not deal with making the engines or purchasing the engines.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that the reason the appropriation was not consolidated in one appropriation?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; because no one bureau alone was qualified to handle the whole proposition.

The Clerk read as follows:

Machinery plant, naval station, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii: For machine tools and appliances required for the equipment of shops, $300,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, did we not provide for machine tools and appliances $200,000 for this same plant just a moment ago?

Mr. PADGETT. We provided under the Bureau of Construction and Repair for their part of the building. This is for the machinery that goes into the building and for the Bureau of Steam Engineering. It is a different bureau. This is not a duplication.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I just came into the Chamber when the aeroplane section was being discussed, and I wish the opportunity of recurring to that for a moment, but not for the purpose of an amendment. I want to know of the chairman if he thinks a sufficient appropriation has been made for aeroplanes, or what may be better determined now, so far as naval warfare is concerned, water planes, and whether or not the chairman and the committee have the most recent reports from discoveries along those lines that have been made and inventions applied in the English navy?

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman that the committee was in hearty sympathy with the development of the aeroplanes. We had before us the chiefs of the different bureaus that have to deal with them—the Bureau of Navigation, that deals with the personnel; the chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, that deals with the body of it; and the Bureau of Steam Engineering, which deals with the engines and machinery. And we carry in the bill the exact amount they asked for, and which they said would meet all their demands and requirements for the coming year.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. How much is that?

Mr. PADGETT. Something over $40,000.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Well, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PADGETT. They said it was all they could use and all they required.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the chairman answer this question: What time was that hearing held, and at what time did these experts come before the committee?

Mr. PADGETT. It may have been during the month of April or the month of March that we had them before us, or it may have been the latter part of February. I am not sure.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I wish to say in this connection, if the chairman will pardon me for a moment, that I have been constantly, and as I thought consistently, against the building of any more battleships, based upon the idea that we would never get into a war with any country on the globe which would require more battleships.

But inasmuch, since the 10th day of this month, when the aeroplane, or waterplane, of a Mr. Horace Short, in England, has been so thoroughly tested that it could fly from a ship or fly from the water, the question has come to my mind whether we should build more battleships or whether we should build more aeroplanes or what is better known as the waterplanes. The point is this, that in my judgment we are doing the wrong thing in building any more battleships or the further fortification of any section of our coasts, especially upon the Panama Canal, where we now propose to spend untold millions, because a waterplane can ascend from the water or ascend from a ship, 250 miles away from any fortification or fleet, and drop not only a bombshell but a pig of iron or an ingot of steel, and will do the same damage to a fortress or vessel that would be done by the exploded bomb. It was demonstrated thoroughly by the English Navy that the battles of the future would be upon the sea, but not fought by the battleships. They will be fought by the aeroplanes or the waterplanes.

Therefore, with a coast from which can be sent up any number of aeroplanes, it stands to reason that no fleet can ever successfully attack this country. If we are going to attack another country, then it would be a battleship proposition, but as long as we are going to stand upon our own dunghill and fight, we are bound to and can successfully do it by the aeroplane.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I ask leave, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD, by inserting an article from the London Mirror and Daily Mail, to which I had reference in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

[Special correspondence The New York Times.]

WONDERFUL BRITISH NAVAL WATERPLANE HAS STARTLED THE OTHER POWERS—SCENES AT THE NAVAL REVIEW AT WEYMOUTH, AT WHICH THE HYDROPLANE INVENTED BY HORACE SHORT, PREVIOUSLY SURROUNDED BY COMPLETE SECRECY, AMAZED ALL THE SPECTATORS, INCLUDING KING GEORGE, WHO NOW DESIRES TO TAKE A TRIP IN IT.

LONDON, May 10.

No pleasanter surprise for the English nation has been prepared in the last half century than that provided at the naval review at Weymouth by the biplane-hydroplane, or "waterplane"—the more convenient word already on everyone's tongue—which has been invented by Horace Short.

Officially, this extraordinary machine is called the S 41, and, according to The Daily Mirror, Great Britain's triumph with it has "stunned the admiralties of Europe, including our own."

The same paper says that every aerial expert in Europe realizes that the naval airmen operating at Weymouth this week are inaugurating a new era in naval warfare.

The King has grasped the tremendous possibilities of the aeroplane that can float in security with or without the additional capacity of rising from the water. His Majesty's enthusiasm is compelling the nation to recognize that Britain's chance to secure the dominion of the air as well as that of the sea has come and must be seized.

"I have," says The Mirror's correspondent at Weymouth, "been privileged to learn a great deal of what is going on that is not public knowledge, and I am able to say with absolute assurance that within two years every British warship larger than a destroyer will carry one or more aeroplanes. It will be possible for these aeroplanes to be launched from the deck without any run at all, and to float even in a rough sea till taken on board. They will be fitted with wireless telegraphy apparatus, controlled by a passenger wearing a sound-proof helmet, and provided with bombs and a rifle. They will command from even only 1,000 feet altitude an area of 50 miles square. They will be capable of alighting on land as easily as on the water.

"The Hibernia and Africa, which have already been fitted with launching platforms, can lift an aeroplane from the sea alongside with a single hook, and swing it on board. It can be taken to pieces and stowed away. In another 10 minutes, when required, it can be put together again and launched on another flight.

"There are two machines here of incomparable importance, for their achievements are arousing the wonder of the world. They are the amazing biplane-hydroplane, called S 41, which has already made Commander Samson, its pilot, famous, and the biplane S 38, flown by both Commander Samson and Lieut. Gregory, which is also fitted with floats to enable it to rest on the surface of the sea, but can not arise from the water.

"I have positive knowledge that emissaries from at least two other naval powers are here straining every effort to obtain plans and photographs of the details of S 41, and a number of detectives are also here to assist the naval authorities in preventing them."

The S 41 is launched on wheels, which fall off as she touches the water, and is not adapted for alighting on anything but water; but it is only a simple matter to fit gear to her which will enable her to alight with equal success on land or water. Her stability and security are proved by the fact that Admiral Callaghan's daughter was permitted to make a flight as a passenger in her. She carries petrol enough to keep her aloft for seven hours.

France possesses eight hydroplanes, and Germany has been secretly experimenting and possesses several; but neither power has designed anything so efficient as S 41.

The fastest French machine has a speed of only 42 miles an hour. S 41 has a speed of 55 miles an hour. Here are some other facts about her:

No battleship could hit her at 2,000-foot altitude.

She could drop 300 pounds of high explosive upon the biggest ship and utterly destroy it.

She has made dozens of flights, rising from and descending into the water at will, without the slightest mishap.

In an article on "The waterplane—What it will do," Horace Short, its inventor, says in The Daily Mail:

"The last few months have shown to the world that aviation is no longer a dream, no longer a mere risky sport, but a stern and powerful reality, a science full of enormous possibilities, the scope and consequences of which no man to-day can predict for 20 years hence.

"The continental armies already have their air scouts in actual warfare. A British fleet has seen its sons 3,000 feet above the decks, borne through the air at 60 miles per hour on duty, following a predetermined course, carrying out a specified object, regardless of wind, fog, and rain squalls through which they flew, being only visible to those below when crossing a chance rift in the mist and cloud laden atmosphere. Their speed is double that of the fastest destroyer; their range almost that of the torpedo boat of a few years ago. They have detected the mighty naval fighting arm, the submarine, when it thought itself secure from view, submerged, with only its tiny periscope above the surface. They have carried and dropped, with close precision, ponderous masses of metal, which might have been bombs sufficient to sink or wreck a good-sized warship. They have risen from and alighted on the water, flown from the deck of a battleship, carried dispatches to shore and vessel. They have carried out maneuvers to a time-table without a hitch.

"The lookout has caught a fleeting glimpse of a distant, rapidly moving speck through a chance rift in the clouds. The air scout has seen the fleet. The admiral must realize that all his well-planned scheme has been discovered. What should he do? Change all his well-thought-out plans or boldly continue, with the haunting suspicion—which probably in his mind amounts to a certainty—that his carefully thought out strategical movement has been fully divulged to his opponent long before he can reach the critical position?

"That tiny speck in the cloud rift has vanished long before the guns are loaded and trained upon it, and the admiral well knows that in a few more minutes the full details of his formation, together with true photographs in plan of his mighty fleet, will be discussed by his opponent.

"The human occupants in that tiny speck have fully ascertained—

"1. The composition of his fleet.

"2. Its formation.

"3. And its course.

"And in 30 minutes this information is 40 miles away, irrecoverable.

"The experience of airmanship already at hand leads one to predict that the offensive and defensive hydroaeroplane of the very near future will be constructed so that it can safely remain resting on the open sea in company with the floating sea scouts and torpedo flotillas, while the parent ship will be able to render them assistance in case of need. They will arise and alight on the sea with ease. They must go from the deck of a ship and land on the water or the land, carrying three or four persons, who include two pilots, an observer, wireless operator, and a gunner, and sufficient petrol and provisions for a 500-mile journey at a speed of 60 or 65 miles per hour.

"A duplex power plant of 500 horsepower will enable an efficient design to be made, at the same time giving that further security against engine troubles which is all essential. At the same time the aerial Dreadnought will carry its 'dinghy,' sufficient for the crew to leave her when resting on the water if they wish to do so. Her speed on the water when 'skimming' will enable her far to outdistance the fleetest war vessels, so that in case of a forced descent one or both of her engines can be used to propel her through and over the water until she regains her parent ship or shelter harbor. Her offensive armament will consist of special quick-firing guns and bombs, and her wireless equipment will enable her to keep well in touch with the air scouts and the main fleet. Thus the mobility of the aerial Dreadnought in either element will far surpass the mobility of the water scout in its single element.

"The air scout, to carry a pilot and observer, will have a speed of 80 or 90 miles per hour and be of about 120 horsepower, fitted to float safely on the water and rise. It will resemble somewhat the Dreadnought, its larger brother, but will be of a lighter construction.

"There is to-day only one thing that limits the size of the aeroplane, and that is the engine. When engines are made of 1,000 horsepower, light, efficient, and reliable, the aerial Dreadnought will be still more reliable and controllable, and more effective than its smaller type. The engines, too, will be placed in such positions as to be accessible to the mechanic while in flight; so going another step further to obtain that reliability which will always be of the first importance in naval and military warfare.

"Emerging from the experimental stage, the aeroplane now only requires the thought and study of highly trained engineers and designers, working with experienced naval and military officers, to make it one of the finest fighting machines and an indispensable arm for both army and navy."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. EDWARDS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Curtiss, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 17029. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convert the regimental Army post at Fort Oglethorpe into a brigade post.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

One professor of mathematics, 1 of mechanical drawing, 1 of English, 1 of French, and 1 of Spanish, at $3,000 each.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of line 17, page 47: "Provided, That no part of the appropriation made in this bill shall be paid to civilian professors of mathematics placed on the retired list of officers after July 1, 1912."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, on page 740 of the Navy Yearbook of 1909 you will find professors of mathematics, six on the retired list. There are more of them now. On page 739 you will see that on the active list of professors of mathematics there are 14. If you will turn with me to page 749 you will find there a number of professors provided for as captains and commanders, some drawing salaries at $5,500.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to undertake to cut off from the retired list people who are not entitled to go on the retired list, and I hope the House will give me a patient hearing on this question. I have not taken up much of the time of this House, and I believe I am fair, and I believe I can convince Members on the floor of this House who have not made up their minds that this is a fair proposition.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Now, on page 481 of the hearings you will find statements in regard to an effort to get additional professors on the retired list as officers. Bills were introduced before the Committee on Naval Affairs, and this evidence was incidentally brought out in the naval hearings, and I will read for the information of the House some extracts therefrom.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that on the 30th day of June of the present year, a little more than 30 days from now, the law becomes operative to the effect that no officer on the retired list can be employed in any Government service—I mean in any of the commissioned services—so that a provision prohibiting the thing that the gentleman is complaining of—that retired officers are at work—will go into effect. But these are the active professors at the academy, who are doing the actual teaching, and the gentleman surely does not wish to cripple them or their salaries.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I think I understand the proposition, Mr. Chairman. There are on the list of professors of mathematics not only professors of mathematics proper, but also one professor of physics, and instructors in language. I read:

Mr. TRIBBLE. There is no provision of law at the present time to put them on the retired list?

Capt. GIBBONS. No, sir; they go out with nothing except what they have saved. As I say, the objection has been generally to many of these coming in. I think everybody who is there as an instructor or a professor has a bill for some form of pension. There has never been any other objection.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Do you think that their capacity to teach has been in any way impaired?

Capt. GIBBONS. No, sir; I think Prof. Terry now is an excellent man, but he is getting on and I do not know how long he will last.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Do you not think an active life is a good thing for an old man if he can give proper service?

Capt. GIBBONS. He does not want to retire until he has to. He is performing satisfactory service now.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Why should he be put on the retired list?

Capt. GIBBONS. Simply because of his long service at the Naval Academy.

Mr. TRIBBLE. He is still able to continue his service and is not asking for it?

Capt. GIBBONS. He is not asking for the retired list now.

Mr. GREGG. We have before the committee one of Capt. HOBSON'S bills, H. R. 19234?

Capt. GIBBONS. This is a similar bill for Prof. Corbesier, the sword master at the institution. He has been there even longer than Prof. Terry. This bill is to give the sword master the same pay as the sword master at the Military Academy.

* * * * * * *

Mr. TRIBBLE. I would like to ask if you think these two bills are necessary and if you favor them?

Capt. GIBBONS. I favor both of them on sentimental reasons.

Mr. TRIBBLE. But not on business reasons?

Capt. GIBBONS. That is up to you gentlemen.

Mr. TRIBBLE. You have just stated that these men were capable and that they were not impaired at all?

Capt. GIBBONS. The sword master is near the limit.

Mr. TRIBBLE. From a business standpoint you do not favor the bills, but from a sentimental standpoint you do?

Capt. GIBBONS. From a sentimental standpoint, I do.

I call particular attention to this question:

Mr. TRIBBLE. I would like to ask if you think these two bills are necessary and if you favor them?

His answer is:

Capt. GIBBONS. I favor both of them on sentimental reasons.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, I say that the time has come when the people of this country ought to understand that professors at the Naval Academy are carried on the retired list; men who have never smelled powder, men who, if there had been a battle on every hilltop and in every valley in the United States, would never have been in the service; men absolutely immune from service; men who are not as likely to be in the service as gentlemen on this floor, because they are over here at the Naval Academy employed as teachers. Yet by some method they have managed to get on the retired list at salaries of $4,000 or $5,000 a year. The people want a seagoing Navy, a fighting Navy, and not a sentimental land substitute. [Applause.] That is the position I have been taking before this House, and I believe the House will agree with me.

In the hearing I made this statement, which I read to the committee because it is in line with the thought that I am trying to emphasize here to-day:

Mr. TRIBBLE. They were very fortunate in their younger days to get these appointments, they considered themselves highly honored, and as a matter of fact, they sought them?

Capt. GIBBONS. I should say they did.

Mr. TRIBBLE. And they have had a good salary all their lives. Teachers of equal capacity in the various counties and towns all over the United States are not retired when they reach 65 years of age on a salary?

Capt. GIBBONS. No, sir.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the point I want to make is this, that men apply for these positions as professors at Annapolis. They seek them, and at the time when they apply there are a number of others who are seeking these appointments, too. They strive for them. One secures an appointment and another goes back to the private walks of life. He may follow the plow, he may stand behind the counter, he may work in a sawmill, or any other position in life. He struggles and competes with his fellow men.

The other man who is fortunate is up there at the Naval Academy, draws a big salary, and lives sumptuously all the days of his life. Now, what right has such a professor to be retired at 65 on salary? The poor fellow who was unsuccessful and who went back to the private walks of life, possibly working in a sawmill, has to pay a tax in order to support the man who has lived in luxury all the days of his life, and then after retirement to help support him in ease as a retired officer. I say you have no more right to take these professors out of the Naval Academy and put them on the retired list as commanders or lieutenant commanders, positions in which they never served, and a rank which they never expected to attain—you have no more right to do that than you have to go down into my State and take a man out of the State University of Georgia, or to go out into the country to the town of Bowman, or some other place, and pick out a professor there and put him on the retired list and pay him a salary. Now, right is right and fair is fair, and the people are going to watch this thing. Your constituents will see my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and they will read the testimony before the committee that I propose to put into the RECORD. Look at the number of retired officers in the Navy—rear admirals 151, commodores 40, captains 53, and so on.

I am not considering at this time men in the active service as officers. I am complaining against the method of placing civilians, men who are simply professors in the Naval Academy, being carried on the retired list of this Government and the people having to pay the taxes to support them. I want to illustrate the retirement question by holding up before you a drawing of a ladder. A good deal has been said here about these officers being retired and other officers taking their places, and that such retirement does not cost the Government any material sum. I want you to look at this ladder which I have drawn on this paper, so that you can understand the point I am trying to make. At the top of the ladder is carried admirals at $9,672.32; this is represented as the top round.

Now they are set aside at three-quarters salary, $7,265. He is at the top of the ladder, retired, and goes off the ladder. When you move him off every man on the ladder moves up a round, and each round represents many, many thousands of dollars. Am I right about this proposition, or are gentlemen right who take the position on the other side?

Take a commander; he is lower down on the ladder. He gets $4,479. That commander may retire 20 years before his age of retirement by the plucking board. Estimate how much he has drawn out of the Treasury during that 20 years of his retirement before the age limit and you will find that it amounts to $89,580. When one officer is taken out of the service there is an upward movement in all the ranks, new positions with increased salary. On the active list of officers there are—admirals, 26; captains, 83; commanders, 117; lieutenant commanders, 209; lieutenants, 354. On the retired list there are—admirals, 151; commodores, 119; captains 53; lieutenants, 73. This is only the head of the list of commissioned officers, and you will see nearly as many in the statement given on the retired list as there are on the active list—doing nothing and drawing from $3,000 to $6,000 per year—and yet my amendment to nullify the power of the plucking board was defeated, and this board will continue to retire 15 officers each year before such officers reach the age of retirement.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia provides that no part of the appropriation made in this bill—it does not apply to the section, but to the whole bill—shall be paid to any civilian professor of mathematics placed on the retired list of officers after the 1st of July, 1912. I want to say that civilian professors of mathematics are not placed on the retired list at any time. Civilian professors have been trying for years to get the committee to report a bill placing them on the retired list, but we have steadfastly refused to do so. There are a number of such bills pending before the committee at this time, but the committee has never reported a bill to place civilian professors on the retired list.

Mr. BOWMAN. If the civilian professors do as good work as the other professors, why should they not be put on the retired list the same as an officer promoted for a similar service?

Mr. PADGETT. That is a question not involved at this time, and it would open a door to a civil retirement list which would bankrupt the country very promptly.

The gentleman from Georgia refers to the number of professors in mathematics who may be on the retired list, but they are all commissioned officers and held the position and rank of professor of mathematics with the rank of captain, commander, and so forth, as provided in the law under which they were commissioned.

Then the amendment provides against placing professors on the retired list after July 12, 1912, so that it would not affect any on the retired list at this time. In the next place, the general law prohibits the employment of retired officers on the active list for any purpose after June 30, 1912. I therefore hope the amendment will not prevail, as it would only complicate matters and be of no service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Four instructors, at $2,160 each.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Has there been any complaint lodged with the committee with reference to the method of examination of the boys appointed by the Members of this House and by Senators for the Naval Academy that the examination has been so hard as to keep the poor boys out of the institution at Annapolis and also at West Point?

Mr. PADGETT. There has been no complaint lodged in the sense of a public complaint or any communication. Members of the committee have discussed the question among themselves whether or not the examination was rigid, but there has been no formal or official complaint. We have recognized that the examinations are difficult and that quite a number of boys have failed to pass them. The other day in a hearing before the committee Capt. Smith was heard on the personnel bill, and we discussed in connection with the legislative requirements of the general personnel reorganization the question of academic examinations, and so forth, and we had quite a hearing upon that. I will state to the gentleman that the curriculum and quality of examinations are fixed by an academic board at the academy, and they can change it, raise it, or lower it as they see fit. Perhaps if the matter was taken up with them they might revise it. It does not require legislation. That academic board is like the faculty of a school that determines the method and course of study.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I recently had occasion to examine the questions propounded some time ago to the boys who were appointed, and it struck me that the questions were to a considerable extent catch questions in order to keep boys from passing, and that they thereby keep out many deserving young men in the country who have a great ambition to enter either the one or the other of those institutions. I thought perhaps the matter might have been brought to the attention of the committee and that it might feel called upon to make some recommendation with a view of modifying the method of examination and the curriculum.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman that the committee has discussed the matter. It would be a matter very difficult to deal with in legislation. I have never been impressed with the idea that they were catch questions, but I had been impressed with the idea that it was a very rigid and severe examination for the reason that the standard at the school is very high, and it may be that the board will take cognizance of the discussions here and may consider it.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, in that connection, does not the chairman, as well as the committee, feel that the examinations as reported from time to time are entirely too rigid with reference to the opportunities of the young men of the country, and especially the poor young men of the country, to pass them and enter these institutions?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know that I can say that. I can only say that in my experience the poorest young man whom I ever appointed to one of the institutions made the highest grade in his examinations and in his graduation, while some of the richer ones that I appointed did not make better grades.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from West Virginia will permit, I think I can shed a little light on this proposition. A young man who failed in his examination in his first year came to my office a few days ago trying to secure a reappointment. I had brought to my attention the question of the character of these entrance examination papers, and I asked him what he thought about them—if he thought they were too severe or filled with catch questions. He said no; he did not. He thought the questions were calculated to bring out the knowledge the young men might have of the matters at issue.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. The examinations are certainly so rigid now that it is almost impossible, it seems to me, for boys to pass them.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. But they do get in, however.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. And I did not know but that it would be a good time and occasion to let the RECORD show that at least some Members of this body feel that in many cases the boys are really being imposed upon. I do not say that with a view of reflecting discredit upon any department of the Government.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the gentleman from West Virginia that I recall a member of the Naval Affairs Committee some 10 years ago complaining that the examinations for entrance were so rigid that he could not get boys in his district to pass. So that it would seem that this complaint is not of recent origin. A similar complaint, so far as I know, has been made ever since I have been a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, some 12 years.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, while we are discussing the requirements for admission and the regulations governing entrance to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, I feel I would like to call the attention of the Committee on Naval Affairs to one feature of those regulations which to my mind demands some attention.

As far as I am personally concerned, I have never had any complaints that the examinations were too rigid. On the contrary, the applicants from my district have never had much difficulty in passing the mental examinations; and, like the distinguished chairman of the committee, I, as doubtless many other Members of the House have done, have tried to send to Annapolis and to West Point young men who otherwise would be prevented from securing an education—bright young fellows whose parents are of limited means. I have been struck, however, by the fact that a considerable proportion of the young men who have gone there have found it extremely difficult to pay the sum of $280 in cash which is required to be paid by the boy when he enters the academy.

I was formerly of the impression that the salaries paid to the young men at the academy were sufficient to cover all expenses, purchase of books, equipments, and so forth, and I was of the impression that when this $280 deposit was paid by the boy there was some way for him to secure it back; but I am advised by the Bureau of Navigation and the Secretary of the Navy that there is no way by which it can be returned. I have recently appointed to the academy a young man to whom this $280 is just as much as a million. He is of a family which can not afford to pay that sum upon his entrance to the academy, and it puts him to the necessity of asking somebody to give him this money or to trust him for several years until he is able to pay it back. I offered to the Navy Department personally to guarantee this sum of $280. I was told that the guaranty was all right, but that it was against the rules and regulations to take it.

Assuming that the necessary amount would be loaned to the young man, I tried to arrange so it would be paid back to the person who loaned the money out of the young man's salary, but I find that this plan is not possible with the $50 a month, or whatever it is that a young man gets at Annapolis, as his salary is entirely consumed in the necessary expenses during his residence at the academy.

I do not know whether this is the proper place to consider it, but it does seem to me that as it is a comparatively small thing to the Government and a very large matter to these young men, there ought to be some way by which we can free them from the necessity of putting up that money when they enter the academy.

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman that not long since we raised the allowance of the young men at the academy $100, so that they are now getting a little more than $700 a year.

Mr. PALMER. When did that begin?

Mr. PADGETT. Two or three years ago.

Mr. PALMER. Well, I have been told within the last week by the Navy Department that the allowance is not sufficient for them to take out this $280 from the salary, and they told me that is the only way for the young man to get into the academy. This particular young man from my district has passed a most creditable examination both physically and mentally, and the only way for him to get in is to go out and solicit from his friends the loan of $280.

Mr. PADGETT. They do have to get their uniforms, and so forth, at the beginning, but when they get their $600 during the course of the year they could draw enough to repay that out of the money, and there are a number of young men, I have been told when I have been down there, who come out of the academy with a small surplus.

Mr. PALMER. I know the gentleman from Tennessee has wide knowledge of the conditions in the Navy and doubtless at the academy, but I put against his statement that the young men can pay this $280 out of their salary the statement of the Bureau of Navigation and of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, both of whom told me within the last week that this very thing can not be done with this pay; that they can not arrange it with the small sum which they receive of $50 a month, as this is only sufficient to cover the necessary expenses at the academy.

Mr. PADGETT. There is a certain amount deducted every month, which is to be used after graduation for the purpose of their outfit.

Mr. PALMER. But the amount which is taken out every month from the salary is all taken up with the graduation outfit. At the commencement time, after the four years' course, they are obliged to purchase a certain number of supplies, and in order that the boys shall not expend all the money during the four years they credit a special account with an amount of money every month, and that takes up so much of the salary of the boys that they can not pay back this $280 which they have to pay at the beginning.

Mr. PADGETT. I think the gentleman will find that a boy observing reasonable economy may absorb and take this in and cancel it during his term, because I have been told—and I have been on the Board of Visitors several times and inquired about it—there are boys to-day who upon graduation have to their credit some money over and above even their graduation outfit.

Mr. PALMER. There doubtless are cases.

Mr. PADGETT. That shows that it can be done.

Mr. PALMER. But the trouble with that, if the gentleman will permit, is that the Naval Academy will not permit the withdrawal of a certain amount every month from the salary of these young men in order to pay this $280 back. If the boys could collect it out of their spending money in the course of three or four years perhaps they might pay it all back, but the Navy Department will not permit the withdrawal of the funds to pay back to the person who loans the money to the boy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. The committee will look into that matter.

Mr. PALMER. I ask for a couple minutes more, in order that we may thrash out this matter a little.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PALMER. I just want to ask the gentleman if it would not be possible for the committee to suggest an additional allowance to cover this original investment and put it on this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think we could afford to undertake to increase the allowance of 900 boys at the academy by $280 apiece for the year. That would be a considerable sum.

Mr. PALMER. It is not annual.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Where will you draw the line between who you pay the $280 to?

Mr. PADGETT. We are allowing them now $701 a year, I think it is.

Mr. PALMER. It seems to me it would be possible for a fund to be put at the disposal of the Bureau of Navigation, for instance, to take care of deserving cases.

Mr. PADGETT. That is a question of the regulations of the Navy Department; it is not a law.

Mr. PALMER. That is what I am complaining about; I can not control them, but this House can control them.

The Navy Department is making a regulation which, in my judgment, is unfair to these young men.

Mr. PADGETT. We will take the matter up, and we might make some suggestion to the department to change the regulation; but I do not think we ought to attempt to do so at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One swordmaster, $1,600; 1 assistant, $1,200; and 2 assistants, at $1,000 each; 2 instructors in physical training, at $1,500 each, and 1 assistant instructor in physical training, at $1,000; and 1 instructor in gymnastics, $1,200; 1 assistant librarian, $2,160; 1 cataloguer, $1,200; and 2 shelf assistants, at $900 each; 1 secretary of the Naval Academy, $2,400; 2 clerks, $1,500 each; 4 clerks, at $1,200 each; 4 clerks, at $1,000 each; 4 clerks at $900 each; 2 clerks, at $840 each; 1 draftsman, $1,200; 1 surveyor, $1,200; 1 dentist, $2,520; services of organist at chapel, $300; 1 captain of the watch, $924; 1 second captain of the watch, $828; 22 watchmen, at $732 each; 3 telephone switchboard operators, at $600 each. In all, pay of professors and others, Naval Academy, $124,676.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 48, in lines 22, 23, and 24, the words, "1 second captain of the watch, $828; 22 watchmen," and insert "12 watchmen."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I think if you will give a hearing to the words of the testimony of the officials of the Academy, as it appears in this book, you will join me in this little move of economy. I have advocated economy in this bill in many particulars, but I have not stricken or advocated the striking from this bill one word that will affect the efficiency of the Navy, and I think you will find when this bill is finished that there has been anywhere from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 stricken from it; and feeling as I do that the efficiency of the Navy has not been affected, I have no apologies to make for the attacks I have made on this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are 24 watchmen down there to guard the Naval Academy. In addition to that there are 2 captains of the watch to look after them. Somebody may say, "You will need these watchmen because you have soldiers there." But these watchmen do not have a thing to do with the soldiers. The soldiers have their own watchmen and their own guarding of the gates.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, I say there are four gates down there and they have 24 men with which to guard them. Now, if you will give 12 men, as I have provided in this amendment, you can have a change every eight hours for each day. And why in the name of reason do you want more than the 12 watchmen at the expense of the Government down there to guard a few buildings on the college campus?

Now, here is the testimony:

Mr. TRIBBLE. What is the reason one watchman could not properly perform that duty?

Commander COLE. When he was at one gate unauthorized persons might go out the other gate.

Now, listen, please. I want you to listen to this testimony:

Mr. TRIBBLE. Who?

Commander COLE. People who may want to acquire property which is not their own.

Mr. Chairman, who wants anything or who would steal anything from the Naval Academy? Now, I took him up on that proposition:

Mr. TRIBBLE. The visitors would not trouble anything.

Commander COLE. We can not tell.

And then another officer there, who was in the room, saw that I had driven Commander Cole into a hole, and he said:

There are a number of colored people who come in and go out; there is a large class of undesirable people who come in there, I am sorry to say.

And then I said to him:

I would like to have you enumerate some pieces of property that could be carried away from there that there is danger of being stolen, so as to show the necessity of these watchmen.

What is his answer? He says:

A lot of people go there to get relics. They will break off a piece of stone or bricks that is a relic in the academy as a souvenir.

Who ever heard of such an excuse for 26 men to guard relics and pieces of stone? The Government had better build a new stone building down there occasionally than to keep 26 men there on pay of the Government to guard four gates. Changing every eight hours there would be two for each gate, one fellow to watch the other to see that he does not leave.

Now, gentlemen, I ask that you vote for my amendment and pass it.

Mr. PADGETT. There are about 150 acres of ground embraced in the reservation. There are a number of buildings. The outlay that Congress has made there is something over $10,000,000. There are about 900 students, and there are multitudes of visitors going in and out, both foreign and from the city, of different grades and classes, and there is much valuable property there about the dormitories and the buildings, in the way of books, valuable relics on exhibition in the way of flags and other things.

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Have you not got the same law down there in that State as anywhere else? If anything is stolen, can not you prosecute the thief in court?

Mr. PADGETT. If you catch him. But it is a very poor solution to have a relic stolen that perhaps could not be replaced at any price if it were destroyed. We remember that only a few weeks ago, right here in this building, with all the guards around here, one of the most valuable paintings was mutilated and very badly injured—right out there in the hall. I do not think there would be any economy in striking out these watchmen there with the great value we have there and the great number of interests to be watched and to be safeguarded, and therefore I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Expenses of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy, being mileage and $5 per diem for each member for expenses during actual attendance at the academy, and for clerk hire, carriages, and other incidental and necessary expenses of the board, $3,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "Academy," in line 16, down to and including the word "thousand," in line 19, and substituting therefor the following: "six hundred," and add after the word "dollars" the following:

"Provided, That so much of the act approved February 14, 1879, as relates to the constitution of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy be amended and reenacted as follows: 'That hereafter the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy shall consist of five members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and seven members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the respective chairmen thereof; the members so appointed shall visit the Naval Academy annually at such time or times as the chairmen of said committees shall appoint, and the members from each of said committees may visit said academy together or separately, as the said committees may elect, during the session of Congress; and the superintendent of the academy and the members of the Board of Visitors shall be notified of such date by the chairmen of the said committees. The expenses of the Board of Visitors shall be their actual expenses while actually engaged upon their duties as members of said board and their actual expenses of travel by the shortest mail routes: Provided further, That so much of the act approved February 14, 1879, making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, as is inconsistent with the provisions of this act is hereby repealed.'"

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the amendment is not subject to a point of order. It comes clearly under the provisions of the Holman rule and reduces expenditures.

Mr. GOOD. Then I will make the point of order, because it is not evident on the face of the amendment that it will reduce expenditures. I understand that the previous rulings of the Chair have been that it must be evident on the face of the amendment and the provision it seeks to amend that it reduces expenditures.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the amendment on its face undertakes to reduce the appropriation from $3,000 to $600. Therefore it is clearly within the provisions of the Holman rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], before he begins, to the language of his amendment. That, in my opinion, leaves a very wide-open door in the bill. It provides that the actual expenses shall be paid. I know that down at the academy the hotel rates run from $3.50 a day to large amounts a day for rooms during the June week at the academy, and it seems to me that it would be better for the gentleman to state in his amendment that there shall be a per diem allowance, as there is now under existing law, of $5 per day to pay his expenses, instead of just saying that the actual expenses shall be paid, and let him go down there and engage a room at a large cost a day while he is attending the commencement.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would be very glad, Mr. Chairman, to accept an amendment providing that "the expenses of the members of the board shall be their actual expenses while engaged in their duties as members of said board provided the same shall not exceed the sum of $5 per day."

Mr. PADGETT. I think it would be better to provide a certain mileage. I believe they are allowed now not exceeding 8 cents a mile and $5 per diem for expenses. My experience down there has been that the hotel charges the per diem that you get for a room, about the cheapest you can get. About $4.50 or $5 is about the cheapest you can get, and from that up. Then, if you start out with actual traveling expenses, there is a question of what may be the actual traveling expenses.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The actual traveling expenses from Washington to Annapolis?

Mr. PADGETT. Every other year Congress will not be in session, because in the odd years Congress adjourns on the 4th of March, and the members will go from their home cities.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This provides for the actual traveling expenses.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman did not catch the actual reading of the amendment. As it was shown to me it provides that they shall go during the sessions of Congress and investigate it just as they would have a hearing in the city of Washington. Their expenses in going from here to Annapolis and back will certainly be very little.

Mr. PADGETT. You do not intend that they shall necessarily go during the commencement week?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The amendment expressly provides that they shall go during the sessions of Congress, at such times as the committees may determine.

Mr. PADGETT. I overlooked that limitation on the time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If this amendment is adopted, it will provide that only members of the Senate and House Committees on Naval Affairs shall be members of the Board of Visitors. I hardly think it probable that any Member of the Senate or House would abuse the privilege of going to Annapolis and paying any exorbitant sum for hotel accommodations.

Mr. PADGETT. I think it is better to place a per diem limitation, if for no other reason, so that the hotel men can not say, "It is an unlimited amount, with the Treasury behind you," and charge an exorbitant figure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I should like five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. At the outset I want to say that I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment, and will be glad to do so, which will provide that the hotel expenses shall not exceed the sum of $5 per day. This amendment is in the interest of economy, and also, in my judgment, in the interest of good legislation. I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will agree that it may be adopted. Under the present law the President appoints seven members of the Board of Visitors. In addition two members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and three members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House are appointed, making a board of twelve who visit the academy during the commencement exercises, as I understand. If this amendment is adopted, it will not reduce the number on the board, for it provides that the board shall consist of five Members of the Senate, to be chosen from the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, and seven Members of the House, who shall be chosen from the House Committee on Naval Affairs. It does not reduce the number of the board, but it certainly reduces the expenses to a very great extent.

In addition to that, it is practical in its operation, because if it is adopted then the members of the two great Naval Committees of the House and Senate will have the opportunity to go to the academy and to examine and investigate the conditions of the Naval Academy while it is actively in operation. They are the men who shape the legislation, the men who prepare the bills and introduce them, and advise Congress as to what ought to be done with reference to the Naval Academy. As it is now, the President appoints seven men. I am not criticizing his selection. I do not know who has been appointed in the past. I am sure he has appointed good men and representative citizens of the country, but they are not charged with the responsibility of legislation. They are not charged with any responsibility with reference to the Naval Academy. They go there during the commencement exercises, when the students and everybody are on dress parade. They are no doubt dined by the officers, and it is very proper that they should be. They get their ideas as to what the Naval Academy is from what they see there during commencement week; but this amendment, if adopted, will provide that members of the House and Senate Naval Affairs Committees shall visit the academy not on the day of commencement but during the sessions of Congress, at very little expense, I submit, because we know it is only 40 or 50 miles from here.

As an instance of the economy which will result, I call your attention to the fact that four or five years ago this Congress passed a law providing that the Board of Visitors to West Point Military Academy should consist of members of the Military Affairs Committees of the respective Houses. In other words, they cut off the right of the President to make appointments. As a result they have reduced the appropriation for the Board of Visitors to West Point Academy from $3,000 to $1,000, and I am informed that it only costs about $700 or $800 every year, whereas this bill undertakes to carry $3,000 for the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy. Now, if this amendment is adopted the appropriation will be cut down to $600. I submit that this board of 12 going from Washington to Annnapolis, a distance of 40 or 50 miles, can go for a much less sum.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have long been in favor of a similar proposition to that now offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, and if my memory serves me the plan has been recommended several times in the past by the Board of Visitors at Annapolis. The only criticism of the gentleman's amendment that I would make is that the amount of money he makes available, $600, is too small. He provides for 12 members of that board, and as I understand, there is to be a limitation of $5 per diem for hotel expenses. That would make $60 per day for 12, and if they remained a week that would be $360 out of the $600, for rooms, meals, and living—too small an amount, in my judgment, for transportation back and forth and for incidental expenses of the board while there.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I submit to the gentleman that Congress only appropriates $1,000 for the Board of Visitors to West Point, which, as the gentleman knows, is much farther distant; and, it seems to me, taking the distance into consideration, this is much more liberal than the appropriation Congress has been in the habit of making for the visitors to West Point.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I have never been on the Board of Visitors to West Point, and do not know how much territory there is to be covered by that board of inspection. I have been at Annapolis, and I know the grounds are extensive; and I know it is unreasonable to expect a Board of Visitors to walk all over those grounds, and it is necessary, as an incident to the visit of any board, that there be carriages provided to carry them over the reservation. That is another reason why I think the gentleman's amount is too small. It should be at least $750, in order that the members of this board would be enabled to make the proper visit and inspection of the academy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, it will not take $600 to make the inspection. Four days is all we have ever consumed heretofore at any time, even during graduation week, with the entertainment and various things of that kind. So that three or four days would give ample time. You can get a round-trip ticket from here for $1.25, so that I think $600 is ample. The only question is as to the limitation upon the per diem, if it is not deemed necessary to limit that, so that one man would not engage a room at $20 and another at $3.50.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman if it will be acceptable if the amendment is modified so as to read, "the expenses of the members of the board shall be the actual expenses while engaged in their duties as members of said board, not exceeding $5 a day, and actual expenses of travel by the shortest mail route."

Mr. PADGETT. That is all right.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. As I understand, this amendment excludes any but Senators and Representatives from the Board of Visitors?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is exactly the right thing to do. I think an institution like the Naval Academy should have on the visiting board at least three persons not connected with Congress or legislation affecting the institution. Now, as to the compensation of the Senators and Representatives, I do not see any necessity for allowing them a per diem. They are receiving a per diem now. All they ought to ask for is their actual expenses. I really believe that, for the good of the Navy, there ought to be some one else on the board besides Members of the House and Senate. We have all the rights now that this will give us. We could go down and inspect the Naval Academy, and the Naval Committee of the House or of the Senate can go there and inspect the academy. They can send for the officials, they can send for the commandant and any other officials and bring them here and examine them. I believe, for the good of the service and for the better satisfaction of the people, it would be wiser to have two or three civilians on the board. If you do, they ought to have a per diem and ought to have mileage.

Mr. PADGETT. Members of Congress get a per diem now and mileage.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This does not provide for a per diem, but for the actual expenses.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Nobody objects to that, but, as I said, there ought to be some one on the board besides Members of the Senate and the House, and if you have outside people they are entitled to some compensation, because they receive nothing from the Government, and they would be entitled to a per diem and traveling expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment be modified as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I rose to advocate the amendment, but since the gentleman from Tennessee accepted it, I shall not take the time of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingencies for the superintendent of the academy, to be expended in his discretion, $2,000.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 21, insert, after the word "academy," the following: "And to provide for equipment of needy applicants at the time of admission to the academy," and strike out the word "two" and insert the word "six."

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I called the attention of the committee to the fact that young men at the academy are required under the naval regulations to make a deposit of $280 and some cents upon their entering the academy to cover initial equipment of clothing and necessary household goods with which they supply their rooms in the barracks. The Navy Department insists that this sum of $280 can not be deducted from the salary received by the young men while they are in the academy. The purpose of this amendment is to put in the hands of the superintendent of the academy the sum of $4,000 with which he may at his discretion give aid to such persons upon their entering the academy as absolutely need it.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman mean that this is to be an increase—a bonus—to them, or is it to be deducted out of the $700 they receive?

Mr. PALMER. My idea of it would be that this sum of $4,000 be put in the hands of the superintendent to be used at his discretion. When a young man passes a creditable examination for admission to the academy, and shows that he is absolutely without funds—that he can not enter the academy unless he receives some help to make this deposit—then let the superintendent of the academy give him such help; and this sum of $4,000 would provide the entire deposit for 15 or 16 boys, and would provide half the deposit for 30 boys, which unquestionably would be all in any given year which would actually need this amount of money.

Mr. PADGETT. Then the gentleman is making a disproportion between the boys and a discrimination which will result in confusion and dissatisfaction. If it is to be used as a fund to advance the boy and to be later deducted from the pay of the boys throughout their course, it might be all right, but if it is to be given in addition, it will be a disturbing factor; an element for disquiet.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing that it should be deducted, but in leaving the matter to the discretion of the superintendent I have no doubt that is the way that he would work it out. There is nothing in the objection which the gentleman from Tennessee urges—that this would mean discrimination in favor of one student as against another. Every college in the country has endowment funds from which needy students are given assistance, and nobody in the academy will ever express any criticism because some other person in the academy needs it and has been assisted by the Government in order to get into the academy. I say that it is far worse that these young men should be compelled to resort to private charity or the assistance of friends at home and get money in that way to go into the academy of the United States than it is to have them know that Uncle Sam is going to help them when they need it.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentleman that the amendment is subject to a point of order, and I purposely did not make it, because I wanted it to be considered upon its merits.

Mr. PALMER. I do not think that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. It certainly is subject to a point of order. There is no law authorizing it, and it does not reduce expenditures.

Mr. PALMER. That is true, but you are making an appropriation here to the superintendent of the academy for contingencies, and all that I am doing is to define those contingencies and increase the amount.

Mr. PADGETT. But the gentleman is not putting it as a contingency. He is naming a specific purpose. I did not raise any point of order because I thought it could be considered upon its merits, but I do think that the gentleman ought to amend it so as to provide that this amount shall be refunded from time to time out of the pay of the young men either before or after graduation. For this reason——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I take five minutes in my own right, and will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I just want to suggest that at the academy they have very rigid rules in regard to equality. The richest young man who goes there is not allowed any more money allowance than the poorest. His people are not allowed to send him anything. He is allowed to expend no more than the others; everything is held upon an absolute equality with reference to money and to finances, so that to incorporate this amendment, to give to one more than another, under the traditions and customs that prevail there, would not be beneficial, and I think in view of that, while I am willing that this contingent fund should be placed there for use as intended, I think it ought to be turned back to the Treasury in order to preserve an absolute equality among the young men.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield there for a moment? Did I understand the gentleman's motion increased the contingent fund to $6,000, to increase the superintendent's contingent fund from $2,000 to $6,000?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; to be used for the purpose I mentioned.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman's motion define the purposes for which the additional $4,000 is to be used?

Mr. PALMER. I have increased the contingent fund of the superintendent to $6,000 and defined the uses to which the entire contingent fund may be put. It would not mean, I suppose, that all of the $4,000 should be used for that purpose.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. The gentleman realizes that the present contingent fund of $2,000 is practically a fund placed at the disposal of the superintendent of the academy for the purpose of entertainment.

Mr. PALMER. So I understand.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. And unless there was a very careful distinction made by the motion of the gentleman it might be possible in any given year that the superintendent would have $6,000 with which he could entertain. If he had no application for this deposit to be taken out, he might possibly have the whole $6,000, and I suggest to the gentleman the better way to get at it would be to make a separate provision, a separate contingent fund for that purpose, and not interfere with the present contingent fund.

Mr. PALMER. I will say to the gentleman the reason I offered the amendment in this way was in order to escape the point of order, which, I think, can not lie against the amendment as it is now written, because, after all, it simply defines the contingencies for which this money can be expended; but the idea of the gentleman from Massachusetts is perfectly proper, and if there be no point of order raised against it I will be willing to make that separate amendment and offer it separately instead of an amendment at this point.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I think, Mr. Chairman, the members of the committee are in full sympathy with the purposes indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I doubt very much if any point of order would be raised against such a worthy amendment as that.

Mr. PALMER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment——

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order; I do not say I will make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment——

Mr. PALMER. So it may appear, after line 21, page 51, as follows:

For contingencies for the superintendent of the academy: To provide for equipment of needy applicants at the time of admission to the academy, to be refunded out of salary before or after graduation.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that is sufficiently definite to be regulated by the department.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his amendment may be modified as stated by him. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the House ought to agree to this amendment. A few moments ago the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE] complained because certain applicants to West Point and Annapolis were not able to pass the examinations, and if any inference is to be drawn from his remarks it must be we are to reduce the standard so that applicants to these institutions can obtain entrance more easily. Now for the first time it has been intimated that certain worthy young men, or rather a young man in the district of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was not able to pay the expenses incident to his entrance. I think it is apparent to everybody that Members of this House have fivefold more applications than they can grant in the way of recommending ambitious young men as cadets to these institutions. This is the first time I have ever heard the point raised that a young man could not enter the Academy at West Point or Annapolis because he could not raise the necessary incidental expenses. I do not believe there is a young man anywhere who desires to go through West Point or Annapolis who can not live on the $700 a year that is allowed him and pay all incidental expenses out of this Government allowance.

This amendment is placing a premium upon the applications of those who will in the future be applicants for entrance to these institutions, and I think we are writing into the statutes to-day something that we will regret if we adopt amendments like this. It will be but the beginning of a reform that will in the end let down the standard of entrance to these institutions and will place a premium upon the applications for entrance to these institutions. And I oppose the amendment.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, the very purpose of the gentleman's amendment is to take off any premium, so that poor boys can get in as well as the rich. Now, I think we all agree that, if possible, we ought to select the boys who are not able to educate themselves. I represent a rural district. We have a few city schools in the district, and there are but a few of those schools prepared to advance a boy high enough to assure his entrance at Annapolis. In this statement I do not include the universities, but I can safely say the common schools do not prepare them sufficiently for entrance at Annapolis. If he is a poor boy and not able to attend the universities, in order to enter he must go to a special school. If his father is a poor man, the father must put up the money to send him to a special school in order that he may go to Annapolis. He exhausts all the funds he can get before the boy is ready to enter. This amendment provides that nothing shall be taken out of the Treasury of the United States that is not now taken out of the Treasury. It simply provides that the poor boy may enter the academy and be relieved of paying the sum now required. The entrance fee of $250 now required is considered a loan by this amendment, and he is required to reimburse the Government out of the funds now provided for the monthly pay of the cadet after his entrance.

I approve this amendment, and say, further, I shall keep up the fight to lower the examination for entrance at the Naval Academy and give the poor boys, whose opportunities have been limited, an opportunity to enter the Government school.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to give this amendment my earnest support. [Applause.] And the very reason enunciated here in opposition to it is a controlling reason that appeals to my sense of justice in giving it my approval.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] well said that the average boy, in order to obtain admission to either the Military Academy or Naval Academy, must go to a special preparatory school and fit himself to pass the rigid examination of admission. These preparatory schools are expensive to a poor boy. If you do not send your boy or applicant to one of them, the chances are he is going to fail on his examination. I believe the percentage of failures of those who fail to take advantage of a special preparatory school is about 50 per cent and of those who enter such schools, where there is a special course and trained and experienced instructors, 95 per cent succeed in passing the examination. The two best institutions, I believe, in the world are located at West Point and Annapolis. The rich man can send his son to Harvard, Princeton, or Yale, or any of the other leading institutions of this land, but many of the ambitious sons of poor men are prohibited from entering either one of these Government academies for the reason stated by the author of this amendment [Mr. PALMER] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

One of the brightest stars in the American Navy was Commodore Farragut. Had this requirement, the payment of this money, $280, been exacted in his day he never would have entered the Naval Academy. His father was a very poor man and lived in my town, Knoxville, Tenn. There is a marker upon a farm near that city showing it was the birthplace of Commodore Farragut. The senior Farragut made his living in the city of Knoxville by peddling water from the near-by springs, for, in the early days of that city, they were without modern waterworks. Old man Farragut drove his cart with a barrel of water upon it, drawn by a single horse, through the streets of that city. And accompanying him on those daily trips in the delivery of this water was his son, who afterwards entered the Naval Academy—Commodore Farragut. [Applause.] This barefooted boy delivered the water from the cart to the citizens.

This amendment should appeal to every man who feels for and sympathizes with the deserving and ambitious poor boys in the land who desire to enter the Military or Naval Academy.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I care nothing about the amount involved, so far as the expense is concerned, but has the gentleman considered the question as to whether the water cart and the development of good manhood in the boy were not more responsible for his success than the training in the Naval Academy?

Mr. AUSTIN. His school of adversity and early hardships were of great value, but he needed the training in the Naval Academy to make him the great naval hero of Mobile Bay and of the Civil War, Mr. Chairman, and that is what we must do for every boy in this land who has a chance or opportunity to secure one of these appointments, either to the Military Academy at West Point or the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and let him make something of himself—give him a chance.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. KOPP. Is the gentleman in favor of increasing the appropriation of each boy to that extent?

Mr. AUSTIN. For every boy who is unable to raise this amount, $280, and needs the aid or the credit of this Government advanced to him, and under the provisions of this amendment to repay it out of his salary, either as a student or a commissioned officer in the Navy.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to continue two minutes more. I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. PADGETT. I shall have to object, Mr. Chairman, and call for a vote. This discussion is not essential.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word just here, before a vote is had.

Mr. PADGETT. Well, go ahead.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, since I have been in Congress I have in every instance made recommendations to the Naval Academy and to the Military Academy in pursuance of competitive examinations. I have always thrown those examinations open to every boy in the district within the required age, and I have gone before those classes before they took the examination and said, "It will cost this Government $20,000 or $30,000 to educate the boy who wins out here and is admitted to the academy. I do not want any one of you to take the examination unless you pledge me here that if you get in and complete your course you will stay in the service of the United States during the balance of your life. I do not propose to recommend any boy to either of these academies to get an education at the expense of the Government and after a few years have him get out and go into private service and make more money or do something more pleasing to him." I have held that promise open, so that the boys think it is the law and not discretion on my part. The best boy in the examination wins if he passes the physical examination. I have not known an instance where any of these boys who got in did not raise the money to pay for his uniform.

I sometimes think that learning is made too easy these days. I sometimes think that a little trial, a little adversity, a little uphill work, will do for a boy quite as much good as the mathematics and Latin and Greek that he will get in college. [Applause.] We are doing much, it seems to me, to smooth the path for the young men and young women. While we are giving them luxurious rooms and accommodations, we propose also to pepsinize and pulverize and pump the intellectual pabulum into them without requiring them to do anything for themselves. I believe in their doing something for themselves. I do not believe in the Government doing everything for them. I do not think there is any boy in the country who can not get, by borrowing or otherwise, enough money to buy a uniform until he can pay it back out of the $700 a year that he gets from the Government. The Government is doing enough for him. Let him do a little for himself. [Applause.]

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I suspect that sufficient has been said with reference to this amendment, yet I can not allow the debate to be closed without making some reference to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], who said that he had never, in his experience, heard of any boy who was prevented from entering the academy by reason of this charge of $280, and that nobody had ever mentioned any case, except that now it is brought forward, because a young man in my district was unable to pay the money.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, my attention was called to this matter by the fact that a young man in my district was affected by it. But he will not be affected by this amendment if it becomes a law; and it is not to assist anybody in my district, either the young man or anybody else, that the amendment is proposed. It would not go into operation until after it would be beneficial to this young man, for he will have entered before the appropriation would be available.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. There was nothing personal in my statement. I only intended to convey the information that this was the first time I had ever heard the matter urged at all.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman think the Government ought to donate this money or any part of it to a certain class of boys and not to the others?

Mr. PALMER. No; I am not asking the Government to do it.

Mr. KOPP. Has the gentleman thought of this contingency: Suppose the boy receives the $280, and then he meets the fate that so many boys meet and is dropped at the end of the first year; what are you going to do in that case?

Mr. PALMER. I think in that case the Government could afford to lose the small sum. [Applause.]

Mr. KOPP. The gentleman is willing to donate part of it if it is necessary?

Mr. PALMER. If that happens.

Mr. KOPP. That is the reason I asked the gentleman the question, to find out his position.

Mr. PALMER. There is no doubt—all of us know it perfectly well from our experience—that a certain proportion of the young men who enter the academy find this $280 an insuperable obstacle as far as their own resources are concerned. They must do one of two things: They must either go out to an individual and beg the money as a gift, which I submit is not a good thing in building the character of the boy, or they must borrow the money from somebody.

If they borrow it from an individual, he treats it as a gift, because he knows he can get no security for it. The Government will not permit the young man to pay it out of his salary month by month; and my proposition simply is that the young man in that event should be permitted to borrow this money from his Government, offering to the Government the security which the Government knows is safe—his salary as an officer of that Government. My entire idea in the thing is to make the young man free and independent. These boys who go into places of this kind as objects of charity, through assistance by individuals, will not get out of the life and experience at the academy all that they are entitled to; but if they are needy and the Government is lending them the money to go through, they will not suffer from the influence which is bound to follow upon making them in a sense objects of charity.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Is a young man who is old enough to enter the Naval Academy, or the Military Academy, or any other college, who borrows money and gives his note or his word, and treats that as a solemn and binding obligation that he will pay it back with interest, an object of charity? And if he pays it back, does not that tend to develop character and independence? If a boy who does that is an object of charity, then I was an object of charity, because I worked my way through college, and I borrowed the money and paid it back with interest.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman knows what the difficulties would be in the way of a young boy securing money in that way and how easy it is for kind friends to get together, and instead of one man loaning the $280, to pass the hat and make a present to the boy of this amount, which he has got to have to enter the academy.

It happens in four cases out of five that instead of some person loaning it to the boy, somebody gives it to him, and then the young man is impressed with just the idea that the gentleman from New York wants him to escape—that his education is coming to him too easily, and he will be harmed more by that gift of money for his original equipment than he would by a loan, and much more than he would by the advancement of it by his Government.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. This is the first time it has ever been brought before the House since I have been here, that it is necessary to borrow this money in this way. It seems to me a law should not be passed here on account of this particular case in Pennsylvania which the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman must know that the cases are very common all over the country.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I never heard of one before.

Mr. PALMER. I am not responsible for the gentleman's lack of knowledge.

Mr. BOWMAN. Does not the gentleman know that some small colleges have a fund that they loan to students under similar circumstances? I know of a number of young men who never would have been able to go through college if it had not been for the amount of money advanced to them out of these funds.

Mr. PALMER. That is a common practice in every college in the land. There is an endowment fund for the very purpose of allowing the heads of the institution to exercise discretion in helping poor students.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. They do not advance money to get them in, but they pay their expenses after they are in, whereas the Government pays $20,000 or $30,000 each year to these students.

Mr. PALMER. That is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon the pending amendment and all amendments to this paragraph be now closed. We are expending more value in time to debate it than it would take to pay it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that all debate upon this paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be reported again.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, unless the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee prevailed, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment has been closed by vote of the committee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PADGETT) there were—ayes 26, noes 32.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands tellers. All those in favor of taking a vote by tellers will rise. [After counting.] Thirteen Members have arisen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay, Marine Corps: For pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on the active list, including clerks for assistant paymasters, five in all, and for the following additional officers hereby authorized: One major, four captains, four first lieutenants, and four second lieutenants, $936,278.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the following language:

And for the following additional officers hereby authorized: One major, four captains, four first lieutenants, and four second lieutenants.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, it does not occur to me that the point of order is well taken, for the reason that, under the law, the question of the number of the enlisted force of the Marine Corps is not a fixed number, but the law expressly provides that it shall be such as Congress from time to time shall establish. It was left in that form for the purpose of Congress legislating as it might see fit on the appropriation bills each year.

Now, with reference to the active list of the Navy, the commissioned officers, it is different. The personnel bill of 1899 fixed a certain number of admirals, a certain number of captains, a certain number of commanders, lieutenants, and so forth, and a point of order would lie against that, because that is fixed and prescribed by law. In reference to the enlisted men, it provides that the enlisted force shall be such as Congress shall from time to time establish, and hence it is in order to report it upon the bill each year.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the law does not prescribe the number of officers in the Marine Corps?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not in the Marine Corps; it provides that the Marine Corps shall be one-fifth, or 20 per cent, of the enlisted force of the Army, and the number of officers is proportioned to the enlisted men, so as to have a proper military organization.

Mr. GOOD. The language here is "for the following additional officers," implying that the law does fix a certain number of officers.

Mr. PADGETT. It provides for such number as Congress from time to time shall authorize, and in the former bill we authorized certain ones, and that leaves it so that at each time when we make an increase we necessarily say "additional," because, as Congress legislates from year to year, it is fixed for the time being.

Mr. GOOD. While the gentleman is on his feet, let me ask him this question. At the bottom of the page there is a provision for four sergeants; does the same rule apply?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and as to the 400 men authorized. Those are noncommissioned officers, and make part of the 400 marines. Really, under the law we could have reported for 800 and doubled the number of enlisted men. The law says that the Marine Corps may be one-fifth of the enlisted force, and we have made it only one-tenth.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the gunnery sergeants of the Marine Corps shall hereafter receive the same pay and be entitled to the allowances, rank, continuous-service pay, and retired pay of a first sergeant in said corps.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to page 54, lines 16 to 19, including the words "in all."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will state that if the gentleman insists on it, this is subject to a point of order, but I think he would perhaps not make it when advised of the conditions. Under the previous legislation the pay of the first sergeant was fixed by law, and the gunnery sergeant does now, under the regulations, the same duty, and the department thinks he should receive the same pay for like services that is fixed for the other.

It is a small item, but it is subject to a point of order if the gentleman sees fit to insist upon it. It was overlooked in the former reorganization, and this is simply to equalize them with the others who receive the pay. They perform the same service.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, what is the difference in the pay?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will read from the hearings, at page 514:

Col. RICHARDS. Gunnery sergeants are now and have been since the establishment of the Marine Corps regularly detailed to duty as first sergeants, both on shore and on vessels of the Navy. The act of May 11, 1908, increased the pay of first sergeants of the Army from $25 to $45, and the pay of all other noncommissioned officers was also increased in the same act. This grade of gunnery sergeant was the only one where the pay was not increased by legislation. The purpose of this language is to so provide that gunnery sergeants will have the pay which corresponds to their rank and duty of first sergeant. Originally their pay was $35. The pay of a first sergeant is now $45, and the intent is to establish their pay exactly upon the same footing as that of first sergeants. The letter of July 27, 1911, is filed herewith.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fuel, Marine Corps: For heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers and enlisted men, and other buildings and grounds pertaining to the Marine Corps; fuel, electricity, and oil for cooking, power, and other purposes; and sales to officers, $164,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 58, line 4, after the word "dollars," insert:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for foreign coal."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the point of order lies against the amendment. This is clearly a limitation upon the expenditure of the appropriation.

Mr. PADGETT. What is the object of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The amendment provides that no part of this appropriation shall be expended for foreign coal for the use of the Marine Corps. I will tell the gentleman why I offer the amendment. I hold in my hand a telegram which I received, which reads as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., April 15, 1912.

Hon. W. E. HUMPHREY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

United States Marine Corps are calling for bids to be opened May 24, and eliminate competition by specifying that all of the coal called for for marine barracks at Bremerton should be British Columbia Wellington coal, notwithstanding the fact that there are two or three different coals mined in Washington that are equal to the Wellington coal. This is shown by the analysis by the United States Bureau of Mines. Would appreciate it if you could get this clause eliminated and have Marine Corps buy coal the same as Quartermaster's Department, based on the British thermal heat units.

C. E. HOUSTON.

Mr. Houston represents the Pacific Coast Coal Co. After I received that dispatch I made some inquiry to ascertain why such a provision as that was ever inserted in a call for bids. I had considerable trouble to ascertain why it was done. I must say in justification, however, that the head of the Marine Corps at that time was in Panama. After calling their attention to the matter three or four times, and finally telling them that I intended to introduce a resolution to find out why they were going to use British Columbia coal, I ascertained that some officer out there at Bremerton thought that this British Columbia coal was better than the American coal. I then called the attention of the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Winthrop, to it, and immediately he ordered that this call for bids be canceled and that new ones be issued.

Mr. PADGETT. If they have canceled that order by administrative action, is not that far better than to put this legislation on this bill and deprive the department of the opportunity of buying coal in the open market, forcing them to buy from some particular man over there at such price as he may see fit to fix? The department has redressed the gentleman's grievance. He is now seeking to put on a limitation that would tie the hands of the Government and force it to buy from a limited number, and the Government would be at their mercy.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. PADGETT. I think not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think that the gentleman is, and I will explain why. What I wanted to do was to place a limitation on the expenditure. We can not legislate judgment and patriotism into the officers of the Navy, but we can limit them in the expenditure of the money. I received a letter this morning respecting the matter of furnishing coal at the Bremerton Yard. I do not know whether it is the same officer who called for the former bids or not. This is another bid for 500 tons, but he makes a limitation that no coal miner in the State of Washington or in the United States can meet. Now, there are several different companies in the State of Washington, and any official who has no more patriotism or regard for the interests of the country than to call for bids and specify that the coal shall come from one particular company, and that a foreign company, ought to be restricted in the expenditure of the money and be reprimanded by the department. There is no reason in the world why we should use foreign coal in the Marine Corps. There is not even the excuse that they are going to use it on vessels. It is for the use of the Marine Corps at Bremerton Navy Yard. I think we ought to go on record now as condemning any such proposition.

Mr. BOWMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman, Is there any reason why the officer should specify any given grade of coal? Is not that giving an opening for some bargaining between him and the owner of some colliery? I have seen all sorts of wickedness creep in that way.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me answer that if I can.

Mr. BOWMAN. No given coal should be specified; it should be based on the British thermal unit.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They specified only one company, and that a foreign company, when there is plenty of coal in the United States on the Pacific coast, that can be purchased just as cheaply and that is equally good.

Mr. BUTLER. Do they specify one company?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They do. They say Wellington coal, British Columbia, because, presumably, some officers think it better. They have not given any reason for it. Then another point: In the last case I mentioned, they put in a condition which it is impossible for any company to comply with, although they do not limit as to who may bid.

Mr. PADGETT. What is the impossibility?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They specify for bituminous coal that it shall not go through a mesh less than 2½ inches, something that there is no mine in America that can comply with, except when you select it, and when you select it it costs much more and there is no reason for putting in such conditions. They want to use it under boilers and the only reason is that it is a little cleaner and will keep the dust off of some officer's uniform, perhaps.

Mr. PADGETT. I would not put it that way. They have a right to make some sort of specifications. Now, treat them squarely in the matter. Has the gentleman submitted the last matter to the department to see whether, they having remedied the gentleman's first complaint, they will not remedy this?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have not, because I did not get it until this morning.

Mr. PADGETT. Does the gentleman think it is appropriate, before you have submitted it to the department, when they have corrected your first grievance, to put on here legislation that is prohibitive, the result of which is to force the Government into a limited way in which they can purchase? It appears to me it is not wise or good legislation.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It took me about three weeks to get them to make the change in the first call for bids. I do not see any excuse in the world for the Navy Department wanting to purchase abroad coal of this cheap class.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[Mr. LITTLEPAGE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] to the full scope of the limitation that he has offered to the amendment to this paragraph. This paragraph provides for the fuel to be used by the Marine Corps, not only within the territorial limits of the United States, but wherever there may be marines using fuel. We have marines in the Philippines and in Samoa, and I do not know in how many different parts of the world marines are stationed, and permanently stationed. Now, if the limitation of the gentleman is adopted it will compel the Navy Department to send American coal in very small quantities to these remote parts of the world, and I suggest to the gentleman that he make his limitation apply only to coal used by the Marine Corps within the territorial limits of the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will be very glad to accept an amendment of that kind, as I had no intention of limiting it except to the Pacific coast, where I want them to use our own coal. I am perfectly willing for them to use the coal of West Virginia at other places if they desire and it is economical for them to do so.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have not the floor.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I would suggest that the gentleman from Washington indicate to the Clerk a modification of his amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I suggest it be limited to the use of the Marine Corps on the Pacific coast of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] offers an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I simply asked to modify it by placing the further limitation that it be restricted to the Pacific coast of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 58, line 4, after the word "dollars" insert:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation be expended for foreign coal to be used by the Marine Corps on the Pacific coast of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, that is a limitation. I think it would be unwise legislation.

The gentleman has not submitted any reasons, it occurs to me, that are valid and sufficient and of that urgency and importance that would require us to place restrictive legislation of this character upon this provision.

Now, the gentleman stated that there were some bids and proposals for bids for the purchase of coal that were objectionable, and that he called the attention of the department to the matter and that the department at once canceled the bids and sought to remedy it; and he also stated that to-day he has received additional information that some officer out there has called for bids that are objectionable on account of the rigidity of the specifications.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to be exactly just to the department. The Assistant Secretary of the Navy remedied it within a day or so after I called it to his attention, but I tried for two weeks to get the Marine Corps to remedy it, and they refused to do it.

Mr. PADGETT. All the dealings of the Marine Corps are subject to the direction of the Navy Department, and the Navy Department remedied the matter.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. PADGET. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the gentleman this question: What is the practice in the purchase of coal for the Navy at the present time? Is it done by competitive bids or not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; by competitive bids, published and advertised broadcast; and everyone who desires to offer coal is invited to bid.

Mr. BUTLER. Provided he can get up to 15,500 thermal units?

Mr. PADGETT. Provided he meets the specifications.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What I am complaining about in this particular case is that they do not call for bids generally, but for one particular kind of coal.

Mr. PADGETT. And the gentleman also stated that he had gotten that information this morning and had not called it to the attention of the department.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is the other one.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I understand that this amendment would give them authority to advertise, but that would confine this to the United States. They could get Pennsylvania bids and get bids from other parts of the United States?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but the freight rates would be absolutely prohibitive, and then by cutting off the opportunity of the Government to purchase on the British Islands, a few miles away, and restricting it from any but the few there in the State of Washington, it would tend to establish a trust, about which we have heard so much denunciation in this body. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Was it not testified before the Committee on Naval Affairs at this very hearing that the coal in the country that the gentleman from Washington was talking about was unfit for use on the vessels of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. It is clearly shown that it is not adequate for use on the vessels of the Navy, but this coal is for land purposes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. There is no claim made that there is any better coal than that of Washington.

Mr. HOWARD. If this coal is not of superior quality, good for use on vessels, then, of course, its inferiority would be characterized by the same percentage of inferiority for the purposes on land, would it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. It might be sufficient on land, but not sufficient for coaling ships. But the whole policy of the Govment's tying its hands and restricting itself and not getting the benefit of an open market is wrong. [Applause.] I call for a vote, Mr. Chairman. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following: "But in purchasing such articles preference shall be given to those produced in the United States."

Mr. PADGETT. I move to amend the substitute by adding "which can be procured at the same price."

Mr. PROUTY. "At the same price and quality." I will put that in.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the substitute the words "which can be procured at the same price and quality."

Mr. PROUTY. I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Kansas whether or not they propose to carry along some sort of a tester, to be used when a man wants to buy coal?

Mr. PADGETT. The Government tests all coal that it buys, and requires it to meet certain specifications.

Mr. SISSON. In case of emergency, how could the Government buy coal under that amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. This is not emergency coal. It is coal that is bought for general purposes, and fuel for the Marine Corps, advertised for and bought under bids.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the substitute.

Mr. PROUTY. I have accepted the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman can not accept the amendment against protest, and I protest. This is a purely Democratic proposition.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman bears fine testimony to the Democratic Party when he says that we give the Government an opportunity to get coal under the best circumstances, at the best price.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the substitute.

The question being taken, the amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I desire to offer another amendment to the substitute:

Provided, That the coal shall be mined by labor that is employed not exceeding eight hours a day.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the clerk will report.

The clerk read as follows:

Add to the substitute the following: "Provided, That the coal shall be mined by labor that is employed not exceeding eight hours a day."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard briefly on that amendment. In the United States, so far as I know and am informed and believe, coal is mined by eight-hour labor, and in some instances less than eight hours.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Thanks to organized labor.

Mr. CANNON. From an economic standpoint if no other, I think that in that kind of labor, dangerous and underground, eight hours are a sufficient number of hours out of the 24 to be employed.

That being the case, the bids for this coal for the use of the United States are free to all the world, which practically includes British Columbia and Australia, why should the American citizen who employs eight-hour labor—American labor—be compelled to compete with the man in foreign countries who, in the first place, pays his labor less than we pay ours, and, in the second place, works that labor more than eight hours? [Applause.] In other words, I do not want to discriminate against the American citizen in organized labor or in unorganized labor. Therefore, I offer the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, to add the words "and by union labor," so that it shall be an 8-hour day and also by union labor.

Mr. CANNON. That amendment is not in order. When my amendment is disposed of then the gentleman's amendment will be in order. My amendment is an amendment to the substitute, and a substitute is amendable only in the first degree.

Mr. FOSTER. I offer my amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has the floor if he desires it.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I should like to suggest that if you make the provision that union labor be employed you can cut out the other part of it, because it will be an eight-hour day. Organized labor has already secured an eight-hour day in most industries which are organized.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it would be well to put in the amendment, so that there can be no question about it.

Mr. CANNON. When my amendment is disposed of the gentleman can offer any amendment that is in order.

Mr. FOSTER. Will not the gentleman accept that modification?

Mr. CANNON. I will not accept any amendment to my amendment, because when it is either agreed to or rejected my colleague Mr. FOSTER can offer any amendment he sees fit to offer; and I think the gentleman, with his knowledge of parliamentary law and his great zeal for the public service, is quite competent to stand upon his own merits, without seeking to fasten himself upon my coat tails. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to my friend from Illinois that I am very glad to see that he has come to a time in this House when he is taking the opportunity to recognize union labor. [Applause.] I congratulate the country and the House that this amendment has been offered at this time. I am glad indeed to know that my colleague has offered it. I do not desire to cling to his coat tails in this matter, but I would like to have him go a little further and accept a modified amendment and make it apply to union scale of wages, so the worker may not only have a shorter day, but a living wage.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to the substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Now it is in order for the gentleman from Illinois to offer his amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment "and by union labor," to follow the words "eight hours a day."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "day," in the substitute, the words "and by union labor."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment speaks for itself, that the coal which the Government proposes to buy shall be mined under the 8-hour day provision, as offered by my colleague from Illinois, and also that there shall be employed union labor, which is an organized effort for fair pay and better conditions in the mines; that these men who employ pauper labor, that do not pay a living wage, can not furnish coal to the Government. I am glad, indeed, that this provision for 8 hours a day has been put in the bill, and I hope this amendment that I offer will be adopted and that my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] having done good work in putting restrictions on the bill for 8 hours a day, will join with me, and that the labor in this country will be given consideration by the Government in the purchase of the coal under these conditions, so the wages will be fair.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. And it will be a stand-off between you.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my colleague will support my amendment as heartily as I supported his.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, touching the amendment of my colleague from Illinois, that I never yet in this House have offered an amendment touching the public service that abounded in demagogy, nor have I ever failed to voice my true sentiments upon any question that was presented touching the public service.

I offered the amendment in the best of faith, realizing, if you choose, that through organization and a wise public sentiment we had an eight-hour day in the coal-mining industry.

Let me say to my colleague that union labor in the United States has always received my approval. I have been called upon to defend my position touching union labor. I have received the assaults of people who profess to lead federated labor, not in one campaign, but two, aye, three, and I have always taken the position that if I lived by labor, in the sweat of my face, under the changed and changing conditions in production, that in simple self-protection I would federate with my co-laborers, unite for the purpose of making a contract between one employer, whether it be a person or corporation, and on the other hand, the employees—thousands and thousands and tens of thousands of whom could not singly act effectively, each one making a separate contract. That has been my position always, and it is my position now. [Applause.]

Now, the man in union labor goes there voluntarily, and I say again that if I was a coal miner or a worker in the machine shop or operating on the railway I would combine for the purpose indicated. I have appealed, when attacked by Samuel Gompers and some other labor leaders who came in person and sent walking delegates into my district to defeat me—I have frankly said to the 12,000 men federated in the building trades and operating in the mines exactly my position as I have indicated it here. Then I have turned and appealed to them and said, "I have stated everywhere that you do not want exceptional legislation, class legislation, for your protection; you are American citizens, thank God, and you never mortgaged your manhood, you never mortgaged your politics, to the dictation of any man or men. You organized for a specific purpose and for no other; and I want to say to you that I am satisfied that I always received 95 per cent of the Republicans of the 12,000 people that were organized in union labor in my district." [Applause on the Republican side.]

A man has a right to be federated—to join the union. A man also has a right not to join a union. They are all American citizens. There are said to be 2,000,000 voters among the federated labor unions of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, there are said to be about 2,000,000 voters among those who are federated in labor organizations. That includes the railway employees who are not federated but who have very efficient organizations without being federated. There are 92,000,000 of people in the United States——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Ninety-six.

Mr. CANNON. Ninety-six, says my friend from Michigan. There are, say, twenty-five to thirty millions of men laboring on and off the farm and elsewhere who are not unionized, as against the 2,000,000 who are unionized. They have just as much right under the Constitution and under the law to their liberty and protection as has the man who is unionized. Does my friend say they have not? Does any man here within the sound of my voice say they have not? I pause for a reply. I pause for a reply from my other colleague [Mr. BUCHANAN], who was a labor leader. I get no reply. Therefore, when my colleague Mr. FOSTER offers an amendment that the coal shall be produced under an 8-hour day, and that the labor by which it is produced must be unionized, he seeks to say that every man who is not unionized shall be shut out of that industry, and by the same rule out of every industry; and that before he can assert his constitutional right to liberty and equality of opportunity he must be unionized. God save the unions of this country from such statesmanship! [Applause.]

Is there any man on that side of the House who does not agree with what I say? If so let him stand up and speak now. I pause for an answer. No one answers nay. Let us be honest with ourselves. Cooperation and unionization of labor is here to stay. Thank God, it ought to stay. I indorse it, but I defend the multiplied thousands that are so organized and so federated against the hot-footed man or men who wants to pick them out of all the 92,000,000 people of this country and say, "You shall be preferred by law over the other 90,000,000." Shame on such a position!

Mr. Chairman, I am ready for a vote. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask my colleague if under the regulations of coal mining to-day in America it is not practically impossible to mine coal except by labor that is organized?

Mr. CANNON. Why, the labor is organized and it is mining the coal and it is improving its condition. It is improving its hours, improving it from every standpoint. That is the condition. I am for maintaining it. It has been achieved without such proposed legislation as my colleague suggests, and it is not necessary. I deal with practical questions, and not with possibilities.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I am certainly pleased at the turn that matters have taken in regard to an eight-hour day, and pleased to have the support of my colleague in securing legislation providing that work shall be done under an eight-hour day and fair conditions for labor. I am of the opinion, however, that the pending amendment probably would not stand a constitutional test. Having been in the labor movement for a number of years, I have had some experience in securing the passage of city ordinances and State legislation for the betterment of labor and to throw greater safeguards around the life and limb of the workers. I have always considered that where we had a provision for the employment of union labor, it would be considered class legislation. I am somewhat surprised at the absence of our constitutional lawyers to-day. They seem to be very numerous at times.

I have never made any pretense of knowing much about the law, but still I have had some experience with it. I want to say, in addition to what my distinguished colleague and friend, Mr. CANNON, has said, that I have had a wide experience in the organized-labor movement, and I believe, and my record will show, that my efforts have been quite successful. The splendid results of union labor should, it seems to me, bring all labor to the realization of the need of uniting their forces for protecting their interests. Labor, as will be seen, if you look over the history of the world, has never obtained any great consideration in the way of reduction of hours, increase of wages, or betterment of conditions except through unity of action in organized labor. [Applause.] They are sometimes given assistance by those who think they might be a power in politics, and that it might not be safe for a public man to deny the legitimate and fair requests of organized labor. If labor would unite for political action, regardless of past party affiliations, public men who denied their requests for remedial legislation would soon be relegated to the political scrap pile.

I want to say that so far as I am concerned, although I spent the best years of my life for the uplifting and betterment of the workingmen, I do not make any claims to be able to receive 95 per cent of the labor votes, as does my colleague Mr. CANNON. I do not believe that labor has come to a realization of the need of that yet. I have in my endeavors toward organized labor tried to point out to its members the need of their exercising their influence in a wise, legitimate political policy for the purpose of securing legislation giving them their rights as organized workingmen and equality in the legislation and administration of the law. They have never been, and would not be, justified in asking remedial legislation that would not apply to all the people, and they never have asked it, to my knowledge.

Now, something has been said here about the president of the American Federation of Labor in regard to his activity in political affairs. I know something about that matter. I know Mr. Gompers personally, and respect and admire him for his brilliant intellect, rugged honesty, sincerity of purpose, and fidelity to a principle, and I know something about his record as a laboring man. Mr. Gompers hesitated to go into politics, and when he did go into it, it was to carry out the demands of a conference that was held, if my memory serves me right, in March, 1907, and which might be called a special convention which had representatives not only of those organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, but those that were not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and I suppose so far as representation is concerned it was one of the largest conventions that the laboring people of this country have ever had.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That meeting or convention instructed the executive officers of the American Federation of Labor as to what they should do. The plan, as I remember it, was to appeal to Congress for redress, and appeal to the President or to anyone from whom they might get results in the way of remedial legislation against the abuses of injunctions and other policies which were obstructing their fundamental and constitutional rights as organized American workingmen. [Applause.]

Their appeals to the Republican House of Representatives were received with deaf ears. They appealed to the President without avail, and then went to the Republican convention, where they were again turned down. They next went to the Democratic convention, and what they asked for was put in the Democratic platform. What else could these people do under the circumstances except support those who had complied with their wishes and oppose those who had received their appeals with deaf ears? They would have been ingrates and not worthy of the respect and confidence reposed in them if they had not supported the Democratic candidate for President, whose record had been favorable to labor legislation.

The American Federation of Labor never has been a partisan organization. Its political influence has never been used only to support its friends and oppose its enemies. The Socialists in the labor movement endeavored at times to make the Federation of Labor a tool for that political group, but failed. The American trade-union movement has refused to be the tail of the kite of any political organization. [Applause.] Mr. Gompers's political position has been the position of organized labor, and that is what I desire to make clear to you, that Mr. Gompers should not be attacked for what he has done in political matters unless you attack the trade-unions, because he was carrying out what he had been instructed to do by the representatives of the unions, and I think it was a credit to him to make the political fight he did in 1908. To do so was answering the call of duty.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman know of any instance where Mr. Gompers or any other national representative of the Federation of Labor has ever asked that their union be officially recognized by the Congress of the United States?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not remember that they have ever asked for legislation that would require the Government or any employer to employ union labor. What they have asked for is fair conditions and a square deal. Organized labor is willing to take its chance to get work if you will give it the conditions [applause], because it has the most efficient workmen in its ranks. The question of efficiency, however, is a speech in itself, but I want to say that by personal experience I have learned that where you give the shortest workday and the greatest amount of liberty consistent with the work that is being done you will find the greatest efficiency and, in my opinion, the best products and the labor cost cheapest.

I regret that it seems to be necessary to take up the time of the House to-day in regard to this matter, but the question has been raised in a way which necessitates my making certain explanations. There have been things that have occurred with the organization that I had the honor to represent four years previous to 1905, when I retired from activity in the labor movement, that have cast reflections upon organized labor. My four years as international president of the Structural Iron Workers of this country gave me an insight into what is being done in the industries of this country. There are the so-called captains of industry—I would think that some who are parading as captains of industry would be better named if they were called captains of highbinders instead—and I want to make a distinction here between what I consider the honest, legitimate employers and what I consider commercial and industrial pirates.

The interests of organized labor and honest, legitimate business can not be separated. They lie together, and when they are fighting it is like the right arm fighting the left; and while the legitimate employer and employees are fighting, spurious capital, watered-stock jugglers, and frenzied financiers are robbing them all, yet they continue to jump at each other's throats, apparently ignorant of what the real trouble is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Could I impose upon the committee for five minutes more?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks that the time of his colleague [Mr. BUCHANAN] be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall make this distinction so that I will be understood, because as a representative laboring man I endeavored to teach the members of my organization that their interests lay in the success of the industry in which they worked, and that if the organization became sufficiently powerful to enforce rules that would result in the obstruction of that industry the enforcement of such rules would be antagonistic with their own interests.

While international president of the Structural Iron Workers in 1903 I discovered that some of the big employers in the building industry in New York City were in collusion with a group of unscrupulous and dishonest labor men for the purpose of destroying competition. This naturally developed a system whose disreputable methods and tactics made it incumbent upon me, as the executive head of the ironworkers' organization, to enter into a contest to bring about its overthrow. This group of unprincipled men in the labor movement was applying the resources of the union to their own personal use and ambitions at the sacrifice of the interests and almost the existence of the organization. Upon entering this contest I realized that I was opposing a dangerous, violent crowd and probably taking chances on my life. In fact, many of my friends and associates cautioned me repeatedly of the fact that they might do me bodily injury, but I felt that the interests if not the existence of the organization depended upon the overthrow of this malicious element. I found that the dishonest employer was largely responsible for the methods that were practiced, and once, when I told the president of the Building Employers' Association in New York City that the employers were more responsible for existing conditions than the labor unions, he said to me, "BUCHANAN, you can get no argument out of me about that; I know it better than you do."

This plutocratic element of industrial highbinders and commercial pirates which is preying upon and sucking the lifeblood out of the business world as well as the laboring men has its poisoned fangs stuck into all these movements with a view to creating turmoil and disruption within their ranks and in that way bring about their probable destruction.

It is encouraging to me to have men like my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] recognize the rights of the laboring people and the need of shorter hours and better conditions. I believe in the labor movement, in that conservative, sensible element which is working earnestly and honestly to uplift the labor interests of this country and thereby make it better and brighter. I believe that when their efforts are understood the better element of business men—which element is in the great majority, if you please; the commercial highbinders and pirates of whom I have spoken are very much in the minority in the business world—the legitimate, fair-minded business men will give organized labor their indorsement when they find that the minority—the highbinders and pirates—on account of greed and avarice, in collusion with the unscrupulous and dishonest element in the labor movement, have been able to retard the real progress of that movement in establishing equitable conditions.

Mr. BATHRICK. Here is an amendment requiring that all the labor of a coal mine furnishing coal to the Government, as I understand it, must be union labor. Is that the way you understand the amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. BATHRICK. Do you not think an amendment so radical as this is antagonistic to the labor interests of the country?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; do not misunderstand me. I believe that the Government should recognize trade-union conditions, because organized labor has established a better wage scale and more favorable conditions than where labor has not been effectively organized; and since the prosperity of the country depends upon labor's interests being protected, I believe legislation favoring union conditions would be advantageous to the people of our country. But, due to many decisions rendered by our judges, labor seems to be impressed that judges are receiving their convictions from the sources that secure them their positions, which are the big business interests and trusts of the country; and while I favor the principle of the amendment, yet I think it would be unwise to pass such legislation, because it would not stand the constitutional test.

Mr. BATHRICK. Now, I am in favor of the eight-hour law——

Mr. BUCHANAN. So am I. I worked for it a number of years and have given the best part of my life to secure it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Let me ask, Mr. Chairman, that this debate come to a conclusion. I do not want to object, but the gentleman's time has been extended already two or three times. I ask that it be extended for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I want to finish my question. I wish to state that I am in favor of the employment of eight-hour labor on the goods that the Government buys—that is the Government's right the same as a private employer—but I can not be in favor of a proposition which compels the people who manufacture these goods to employ union labor entirely on all classes of goods, shutting out all other kinds of labor by law. I want to ask you if you are in favor of that provision?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am in favor of the principle of that provision; yes; but I think my colleague ought to withdraw it, because it would be unconstitutional and poor public policy.

Mr. BATHRICK. I thought it was so radical that it was impossible to pass legislation of that kind and would harm labor by the ridicule thus brought upon it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If you will refer to my record you will be compelled to think that I am in favor of organized labor. I believe in organized labor using its resources in a proper and conservative manner. When I say to you that I had the friendship and support of such men as Senator Hanna and that I had an autograph letter from "The strenuous one" and others high in public life, and had their assistance in my efforts, it would indicate, at least, that I was reasonable in my requests. My position was, as a representative of organized labor, that the best man in the labor movement for the interests of labor was that man who secured the best terms possible under the conditions that prevailed with the least friction and the least ill will on the part of his employer. I always felt that if I obtained favorable conditions for the members of my organization and at the same time kept the good will of the employer I had accomplished more than if I had called a strike for it.

The history of my organization during the four years that I was its international president speaks for itself, because no other organization in the history of the labor movement ever made greater progress than it did in the same period of time.

Through that unity of action of the ironworkers they have increased their wages from an average of $2.25 a day previous to their organization to an average of $4.50 a day since the organization has been effected and also reduced the hours per day from 10 to 8. The organization also provides for funeral expenses and disability benefits. I gave my best efforts to secure improved conditions for the men who worked at the structural-iron industry, one of the hardest and most hazardous trades there is. The structural iron workers, the men who trip the beams and girders that span the mighty rivers and make possible our great interstate commerce, are worthy of much more consideration than they have ever been given, and I only wish that I could have been of greater service to them in securing the conditions to which they are duly entitled.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], who, as he said, has spent a large portion of his life in the real service of the laboring people of the country. There is no man in this House who will vote more readily than I will to aid those who toil in the mines and in the shops and in the fields and other places in this country for their livelihood, and I do not like to see sport made of them or their organizations, those who belong to the organization or those who do not.

I have served eight years with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and I never heard him, when the Republicans were in power in this House, offer anything that even looked like eight hours to the laboring people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And now, when his party has been driven from power in the House and is soon to be driven from power in every branch of the Government [applause], the gentleman talks of eight hours' labor.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to an interruption?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says my amendment was unconstitutional. He is mistaken if he refers to me. I think he refers to his colleague, Dr. FOSTER. He offered an amendment that only union labor should be employed. Mine was for an eight-hour law in the production of coal.

Mr. HEFLIN. Digging coal.

Mr. CANNON. For the production of coal, either in Australia by 10-hour labor, or in British Columbia by 11-hour labor, or in the United States by 8-hour labor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Is the gentleman opposed to the man who is not a member of the union digging coal for a livelihood to provide subsistence for his wife and children?

Mr. CANNON. I would protect him, even from the gentleman from Alabama, if he wanted to work in the coal mines, whether he belonged to the union or not. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is exceedingly late in his efforts to protect the laboring man [applause on the Democratic side]—after 16 years of power in this House—and now the gentleman says the laboring men have not mortgaged their souls and their politics. Let me say a word about the gentleman's party in its relation to labor organizations. The manufacturers, whom the gentleman's party pretends to protect, have served notices on organized labor the day before election that if they did not vote the Republican ticket on the morrow they need not come back to work next day. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That is one of the fruits of Republicanism in this country. [Applause.] The first eight-hour law ever offered in the Congress of the United States was offered by a Democrat from New Jersey by the name of Rogers. The first political party that ever offered a resolution recognizing union labor in the United States, extending its sympathy and offering its services, was the Democratic Party in national convention in 1868.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. President Grant was the first man in connection with legislation that proposed an eight-hour working-day, as far back as 1868. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Rogers, of New Jersey, a Democrat, offered a bill in this House prior to that time. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman may be correct, but if so, he is lost in space, because everybody thinks it was Grant in 1868.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am correct. I have studied the labor question a long time, and I have not been recently converted to the needs of the laboring man.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. If the gentleman from Alabama has studied the labor question so long, why has he not done something for labor in his own State, just one little thing? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HEFLIN. The laborer in my State fares far better than he does in the State of the gentleman from New York, where a hundred thousand men are out of employment and begging for work to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from New York talks to me about the laboring man——

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I mean in the way of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. I see that my remarks have warmed up the opposition a little. Whenever you give them the facts you warm them. [Laughter.] Why, the poor, struggling labor masses in the United States are being driven——

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; not now—are being driven to want and misery by the merciless laws of the Republican Party under the system of high protection. One candidate for President says "Down with the bosses," but he does not name the bosses. The other one is talking about the "dignity of the courts" and the deceit and hypocrisy of the ex-President, but the Democratic Party says, "Here is the evil, here it is." What is it? It is the high protective-tariff system of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FARR. I desire to ask the gentleman if in the State of Alabama they are not working convicts in the mines against free labor?

Mr. HEFLIN. Some convicts are working in the mines. I am talking of national affairs. The gentleman can not dodge the issue. That is what a Republican does every time you mention the tariff. We are dealing with national issues now; we are discussing national questions. Your party promised these men employment, you promised them good wages, you promised them work for all, and I think one of you said, "All kinds of work for all kinds of people," and you can not pick up a daily paper now without reading that some poor husband and the father of children has taken carbolic acid or shot his brains out because he could not find work under a Republican administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield now. I have only a few moments left. I can not afford to yield any more time. Your candidates are going around the country to-day and they are not talking about the deadly upas tree flourishing in the political life of America—the high protective-tariff system—beneath whose shade you are robbing the American masses to-day. Trusts are springing up all around us, and yet when you have been driven out of this House—the only branch of power you have lost in 15 years—you are trying now to bolster yourselves up by trying to fool again that class that you have deceived so long—the laboring people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, thank God for the political judgment day that is coming. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is not long off, the political judgment day in the United States, and many of you on that day will not be prepared. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] You fooled the laboring people many a time, but at last their eyes are open and they are going to walk with heads erect, ballots in their hands, on election day next November with the party that has stood for labor since its birth; the party whose representative offered the first 8-hour law in Congress will find this mass of the laboring men in the United States solid beneath its flag in the November election. [Applause on the Democratic side.] After that you will have time to think of how you might have served the laboring man during the long years you were in power before we carried this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. CANNON. I trust the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Before that is done I want to make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. PADGETT. I will amend my motion, and move that the debate close after 10 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I should like 10 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I will yield to the gentleman. I move that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes; and I ask unanimous consent that the 10 minutes be given to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. HEFLIN. I reserve the right to object. If the chairman proposes to close debate in 10 minutes, he must give 5 minutes of that time to a Democrat.

Mr. PADGETT. There has been debate on both sides.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will object unless you divide the time and give some Democrat 5 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Who on this side wants five minutes?

Mr. FOSTER. I want a minute.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I want a minute on this side.

Mr. PADGETT. I move that at the end of 15 minutes the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close, and I will ask that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] have 10 minutes, and the other gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] 5 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, just a moment, reserving the right to object. How much time has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] consumed in the argument of this question?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. How much time has the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] consumed?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] had 10 minutes. I have not been keeping track of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] moves that at the expiration of 15 minutes all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HEFLIN) there were—ayes 42, noes 14.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment, and to substitute the one I now send up for the one I previously offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment to the substitute. The Clerk will report it.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman offers an amendment to the substitute. Does he withdraw that?

Mr. FOSTER. I want to offer this as a substitute for the one I did offer.

Mr. CANNON. It is not amendable, but the gentleman can ask unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] to ask unanimous consent to modify his amendment by offering for it a substitute which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that does not pay the union scale of wages.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the substitution of this amendment for the other one offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]?

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to the gentleman offering it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further debate, the question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] desired some time.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Just a minute or two.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman ask for recognition?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Yes; I asked for recognition.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to close the debate.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I should like just two minutes, if the gentleman will give it.

Mr. CANNON. I do not give it, because the gentleman can be recognized in his own right.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to occupy more than two minutes of your time on this question, but on account of the turn which this debate has taken I am prompted to refer to it in a very few words.

There has been a good deal of buncombe here this afternoon; more playing to the galleries and for home consumption than usual. One gentleman offers an amendment that all coal purchased by the United States shall be mined by labor that is employed not exceeding eight hours a day, and another gentleman, in order to go him one better and make a stronger appeal to his home constituents, offers an amendment that it be mined by union labor. No one can tell how far these gentlemen would have gone in their maneuvering for position had not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], who is a real friend of organized labor, taken up the subject seriously and urged the gentlemen to be careful, else the whole provision might be held to be unconstitutional. He thought they were carrying the joke too far.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] grew so red in the face that I feared he might burst a blood vessel in avowing his sympathy for the downtrodden workingman and his desire to relieve him of some of his burden. I said I would not occupy the time of the committee in discussing this matter here at any length, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to extend a few remarks in the RECORD and to print a few extracts from the statutes, and perhaps from the constitution of the State of Alabama and of some other States which are represented here by gentlemen who are all the time talking buncombe on the question of labor, and who are doing nothing for their people at home on this question.

I question the good faith, I question the sincerity of gentlemen who come here and become very earnest and eloquent talking about labor, their interest in the working men and women, and their sympathy for the people, who in their home States do very little to improve the conditions of labor; where they have statutes in their States which are hostile to employees and servants, which provide that a person who persuades a servant to leave the employment of his master shall be imprisoned in the county jail; that a person who hires or entices away the employee of another shall be punished by a heavy fine; that a person who furnishes food or clothing to the apprentice of another shall be guilty of a penal offense; and that anyone who employs or entices from the employment of another an immigrant may be imprisoned at hard labor.

It strikes me that it would be very appropriate for those gentlemen who make such loud and long speeches in Congress to go back and do a little something for labor in their own States and set an example by acts rather than by talking here and by offering resolutions and bills. In those States the Democratic Party is in absolute and unquestioned control of their State governments. There is no real opposition to them in what they may desire to do in the way of legislation. They may, without let or hindrance, enact laws which are favorable or unfavorable to working people, and I submit that their interest in labor and in humanity manifests itself in words rather than in acts.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what they are to be.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will put them into the RECORD right from the gentleman's State—your statutes. Are you afraid of your own statutes?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; not in the least; or of you, either. [Laughter.]

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I do not ask for anything except to put in the RECORD some of the statutes of your States.

Mr. BARTLETT. Let us see what they are.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Oh, I will not manufacture them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. They pertain to labor, employees, workingmen, employers.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think I shall not object, but of course I take it for granted that the gentleman's statement that they are from the statutes of the State of Georgia is correct.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Alabama and Georgia and other Southern States, whose Representatives here do much talking on the subject of labor.

Mr. BARTLETT. What particular statutes of Georgia has the gentleman in mind?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Oh, the gentleman has a lot of statutes down there, and I will select a few of them.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, we have several statutes; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall have no objection if the gentleman will include in the extension of his remarks a full and complete list of the unemployed now in New York. [Cries of "Oh!"]

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Is that the condition? Are you afraid of your statutes being put in the RECORD?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not at all.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Are you afraid of your constitution?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not at all.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Have I got to get a list of all of the men, women, and children who are out of employment in the State of New York in order that I may be permitted to extend in the RECORD a few of your statutes? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York to extend his remarks in the RECORD? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will first insert a few sections from the Criminal Code of Alabama, 1907.

SEC. 6849. Any person who entices, decoys, or persuades any apprentice or servant to leave the service or employment of his master must, on conviction, be fined not less than $20 nor more than $100; and may also be imprisoned in the county jail or sentenced to hard labor for the county for not more than three months.

SEC. 6850. Any person who knowingly interferes with, hires, employs, entices away, or induces to leave the service of another, or attempts to hire, employ, entice away, or induce to leave the service of another any laborer or servant, renter, or share cropper, who has contracted in writing to serve such other person for any given time not to exceed one year before the expiration of the time so contracted for, or who knowingly interferes with, hires, entices away, or induces any minor to leave the service of any person to whom such service is lawfully due, without the consent of the party employing, or to whom such service is due, given in writing or in presence of some credible person, must, on conviction, be fined not less than $50 nor more than $500, at the discretion of the jury, and in no case less than double the damages sustained by the party whom such laborer or servant was induced to leave, one half to the party sustaining such damage and the other half to the county.

SEC. 6851. When any laborer or servant, renter, or share cropper, having contracted as provided in the preceding section, is afterwards found in the service or employment of another before the termination of such contract, that fact is prima facie evidence that such person is guilty of a violation of that section if he fail and refuse forthwith to discharge such laborer or servant after having been notified and informed of such former contract or employment.

SEC. 6853. Any person who entices away any apprentice from his master, or knowingly employs an apprentice or furnishes him food and clothing without the written consent of his master, or gives or sells such apprentice ardent spirits without such consent, must, on conviction, be fined not exceeding $500.

SEC. 6854. Any person who employs any immigrant, or otherwise entices him from his employer, in violation of the contract of such immigrant, must, on conviction, be fined in a sum not less than the amount of wages for the unexpired term of the contract, and may be imprisoned in the county jail or sentenced to hard labor for the county, at the discretion of the jury, for not more than three months.

SEC. 6855. Any immigrant who abandons or leaves the service of an employer without repaying all passage money and all other advances must, on conviction, be fined in a sum not more than double the amount of the wages for the unexpired term of service and imprisoned not longer than three months, or sentenced to hard labor for the county for not more than three months, at the discretion of the jury.

SEC. 6856. Any person who, by force or threats of violence to person or property, prevents, or seeks to prevent, another from doing work or furnishing materials, or from contracting to do work or furnish materials, for or to any person engaged in any lawful business, or who disturbs, interferes with, or prevents, or in any manner attempts to prevent the peaceable exercise of any lawful industry, business, or calling by any other person, must, on conviction, be fined not less than $10 nor more than $500, and may also be imprisoned in the county jail or sentenced to hard labor for the county for not more than 12 months.

SEC. 6394. Any two or more persons who conspire together for the purpose of preventing any person, persons, firm, or corporation from carrying on any lawful business within the State of Alabama, or for the purpose of interfering with the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 6395. Any person or persons who go near to or loiter about the premises or place of business of any person, firm, or corporation engaged in a lawful business for the purpose of influencing or inducing others not to trade with, buy from, sell to, or have business dealings with such person, firm, or corporation, or to picket the works or place of business of such other person, firm, or corporation for the purpose of interfering with or injuring any lawful business or enterprise, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; but nothing herein shall prevent any person from soliciting trade or business for a competitive business.

SEC 6396. Any person who prints or circulates any notice of boycott, boycott cards, stickers, dodgers, or unfair lists, publishing or declaring that a boycott or ban exists or has existed or is contemplated against any person, firm, or corporation doing a lawful business, or publishing the name of any judicial officer or other public official upon any blacklist, unfair list, or other similar list because of any lawful act or decision of such official, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 6397. Any person who uses force, threats, or other means of intimidation to prevent any person from engaging in any lawful occupation at any place he or she sees fit, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 6399. Any person, firm, or corporation violating any section of this chapter must, on conviction, pay a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, or be imprisoned not to exceed 60 days' hard labor for the county.

The following extracts are taken from the Revised Statutes of Texas of 1895, Penal Code:

ART. 299. "An unlawful assembly" is the meeting of three or more persons with the intent to aid each other by violence or in any other manner to commit an offense or illegally to deprive any person of any right, or to disturb him in the enjoyment thereof.

ART. 309. If the purpose of the unlawful assembly be to prevent any person from pursuing any labor, occupation, or employment, or to intimidate any person from following his daily avocation, or to interfere in any manner with the labor or employment of another, the punishment shall be by fine not exceeding $500.

ART. 324. If any person, by engaging in a riot, shall prevent any other person from pursuing any labor, occupation, or employment, or intimidate any other person from following his daily avocation, or interfere in any manner with the labor or employment of another, he shall be punished by confinement in the county jail not less than six months nor more than one year.

ART. 600. Any person who shall, by threatening words, or by acts of violence or intimidation, prevent or attempt to prevent another from engaging or remaining in or from performing the duties of any lawful employment, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $500, or by confinement not less than one nor more than six months in the county jail.

Also the following extracts are from the Acts of 1903, chapter 94, on conspiracy and boycotting:

SEC. 3. Either or any of the following acts shall constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade:

1. Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons who are engaged in buying or selling any article of merchandise, produce, or any commodity enter into an agreement or understanding to refuse to buy from or sell to any other person, firm, corporation, or association of persons any article of merchandise, produce, or commodity.

2. Where any two or more persons, firms, corporations, or associations of persons shall agree to boycott or threaten to refuse to buy from or sell to any person, firm, corporation, or association of persons for buying from or selling to any other person, firm, corporation, or association of persons.

SEC. 4. Any and all trusts * * * and conspiracies in restraint of trade as herein defined are hereby prohibited and declared to be illegal.

SEC. 11. Each and every firm, person, corporation, or association of persons who shall in any manner violate any of the provisions of this act shall, for each and every day that such violation shall be committed or continued, forfeit and pay the sum of $50, which may be recovered in the name of the State of Texas in any county where the offense is committed or where either of the offenders reside, or in Travis County, and it shall be the duty of the attorney general, or the district or county attorney under the direction of the attorney general, to prosecute for the recovery of the same, and the fees of the prosecuting attorney for representing the State in proceedings under this act shall be over and above the fees allowed him under the general fee bill.

SEC. 12. Any contract or agreement in violation of the provisions of this act shall be absolutely void and not enforceable either in law or equity.

SEC. 13. And in addition to the penalties and forfeitures herein provided for every person violating this act may further be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary not less than 1 nor more than 10 years.

By the foregoing statutes of the State of Texas it is intended, among other things, to severely punish any violation of law which ordinarily grows out of strikes, boycotting, and picketing. Apparently they are intended to protect the employer and the business man from any interference with his trade or business and from any interference with his employees or servants by organized labor or by unorganized labor.

But Texas has another law and practice the effect of which is to build up and establish a political aristocracy in the Commonwealth. It is directed against the poor man, and enhances the political power of the man of means who can pay the tax. I refer to the State poll tax and city poll tax of that State. There are many statutes on this subject for the strict enforcement of the tax and for the disfranchisement of those who do not pay it, the substance of which is as follows:

Every citizen between 21 and 60, with a few exceptions for disability, must pay throughout the State a poll tax of $1.75, and, in addition to that, every man in cities must pay from 50 cents to a dollar additional poll tax, making a tax in the country of $1.75 on every voter and in cities of 10,000 and over of from 50 cents to $1 additional. This tax must be paid on or before the 1st day of February in order that the citizen may vote at the following November election, and he is not qualified to vote at the primary election of his party in the following summer unless he has paid those taxes and is able to produce his receipts for the same. If he lives in the country at a distance from the collector of taxes, he may send in the money by another person, but if he lives in a city of 10,000 population or upward, he must go in person and pay his taxes in order to get his receipt. No man is permitted to pay those poll taxes for another. No party or organization is permitted to do so, and "any person who loans or advances money to another knowingly to be used for payment of poll taxes of such other person is guilty of a misdemeanor," and any candidate for office who pays the poll tax of another is guilty of a felony.

There is no possible subterfuge by which a man can escape paying his poll tax himself with his own money and vote.

Moreover, those taxes must be paid by the man himself and with his own money, and not by any political organization or by any opulent and ambitious individual who, were it not for this provision, might be tempted to advance the money to qualify his impecunious henchmen in the hope that they may vote for his party or himself.

In New York and many other industrial States of the North the overwhelming majority of the population reside in cities of 10,000 population and more, and especially is this true of the poorer classes. If a law such as the aristocratic lawmakers of Texas have adopted were enforced in those Northern States a very large percentage of our voters would be perpetually disfranchised. To begin with, $2.75 is a heavy poll tax and a substantial burden on a poor man. A dollar is a good deal of money when you have not got it. Those taxes would have to be paid in midwinter, before the 1st of February, when business is stagnant, labor not in great demand, money scarce, food and fuel high, extra clothing for the family needed. Under those circumstances the ordinary man would think twice before he would pay $2.75 in order to entitle him to vote in the following November. He may be public spirited and patriotic, interested in the institutions of the country and in politics, but at that time he would need the money for something else than to qualify him to vote at an election nine months in advance.

Again, many men who could spare the money without much self-denial might, through carelessness and indifference, neglect to pay and get the required receipt so long in advance, and they would be hopelessly disqualified, the same as those who could not afford the money. No one can tell what proportion of the voters this kind of a law, if as strictly enforced as in Texas, would disfranchise in the State of New York. I would not be surprised if it would disfranchise anywhere from 30 to 50 per cent. That would mean a property qualification for the exercise of the franchise, and it would mean that a very large proportion of the people would lose their political influence and the rights and privileges which flow from that influence.

The following extracts are from the revised statutes of the State of North Carolina, 1905:

SEC. 3365. If any person shall entice, persuade, and procure any servant by indenture, or any servant who shall have contracted in writing or orally to serve his employer, to unlawfully leave the service of his master or employer; or if any person shall knowingly and unlawfully harbor and detain, in his own service and from the service of his master, or employer, any servant who shall unlawfully leave the service of such master, or employer, then, in either case, such person and servant shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not exceeding $100 or imprisoned not exceeding one month.

SEC. 3374 (as amended by chapter 402, acts of 1907). If any person shall knowingly hire, employ, harbor, or detain in his own service any servant, employee, or wage hand of any other person, who shall have contracted in writing, or orally, for a fixed period of time to serve his employer, and who shall have left the service of his employer, in violation of his contract, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be civilly liable in damages to the party so aggrieved. This section shall apply to the following counties: Beaufort, Edgecombe, Person, Pitt, Washington, Warren, Vance, Pender, Halifax, Guilford, Granville, Hertford, Wayne, Wake, and Caswell.

The following extract is from the general statutes of Florida, 1906:

SEC. 3232. Whoever shall entice or persuade by any means whatsoever any tenant, servant, or laborer under contract with another, whether written or verbal, to violate such contract, or shall employ any servant or laborer, knowing him or her to be under contract as aforesaid, shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding 60 days or by fine not exceeding $100.

The following are extracts from the laws of the State of Tennessee, Shannon's Code of 1896 and supplement of 1904:

SEC. 4337. It shall not be lawful for any person in this State, knowingly, to hire, contract with, decoy, or entice away, directly or indirectly, anyone, male or female, who is at the time under contract or in the employ of another; and any person (s) so under contract or employ of another leaving their employ without good and sufficient cause before the expiration of the time for which they were employed shall forfeit to the employer all sums due for service already rendered and be liable for such other damages (as) the employer may reasonably sustain by such violation of contract.

SEC. 4338. Any person violating the provisions of the first clause of the last section shall be liable to the party who originally had and was entitled to the services of said employee, by virtue of a previous contract, for such damages as he may reasonably sustain by the loss of the labor of said employee; and he shall also be liable for such damages, whether he had knowledge of an existing contract or not if he fails or refuses to discharge the person so hired or to pay such damages as the original employer may claim, after he has been notified that the person is under contract, or has violated the contract with another person, which amount shall be ascertained and the collection enforced by action for damages before any justice of the peace of said county where said violation occurs, or the party violating said section may reside.

The following extracts are from the laws of Arkansas, Digest of 1904:

SEC. 5028. If any laborer shall, without good cause, abandon his employer before the expiration of his contract, he shall be liable to such employer for the full amount of any account he may owe him, and shall forfeit to his employer all wages or share of crop due him, or which might become due him from his employer.

SEC. 5030 (as amended by act No. 298, Acts of 1905). If any person shall interfere with, entice away, knowingly employ, or induce a laborer or renter who has contracted with another person for a specified time to leave his employer or the leased premises before the expiration of his contract, without the consent of the employer or landlord, he shall, upon conviction before any justice of the peace or circuit court, be fined not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars, and in addition shall be liable to such employer or landlord for all advances made by him to such renter or laborer by virtue of his contract, whether verbal or written, with the said renter or laborer, and for all damages which he may have sustained by reason thereof.

The following is an extract from the Statutes of the State of Kentucky, 1903:

SEC. 1349. If any person shall willfully entice, persuade, or otherwise influence any person or persons, who have contracted to labor for a fixed period of time, to abandon such contract before such period of service shall have expired without the consent of the employer, he shall be fined not exceeding $50, and be liable to the party injured for such damages as he or they may have sustained.

The following is an extract from the Statutes of Louisiana, act, 1906:

ACT NO. 54.

SEC. 2. Whoever shall willfully interfere with, entice away, intimidate, or induce a hired person, tenant, or share hand to leave the service of the employer or to abandon the land the subject of the contract, or who shall knowingly take into his employ any such person before the expiration of the contract, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined in a sum not less than $10 nor more than $200 for each offense, and shall be liable in a civil action for damages to double the amount of any debt due by said hired person, tenant, or share hand to the person who had made the advances.

The following are extracts from the Penal Code of Georgia:

SEC. 119. If any two or more persons shall associate themselves together in any society or organization, with intent and for the purpose of preventing in any manner any person from apprenticing himself to learn and practice any trade, craft, vocation, or calling, or for the purpose of inducing, by persuasion, threats, fraud, or any other means, any apprentice or apprentices to any such trade, craft, vocation, or calling to leave the employment of their employer, or for the purpose, by any means, of preventing or deterring any person from learning and practicing any such trade, craft, vocation, or calling, every such person so associating himself in such society or organization shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 121. When the servant, cropper, or farm laborer of another is under written contract, attested by one or more witnesses, if any person shall employ such servant, cropper, or farm laborer during the term for which he is employed, knowing that he is so employed and that the term of service has not expired, such person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 122. If any person shall, by offering higher wages or in any other way entice, persuade, or decoy, or attempt to entice, persuade, or decoy any servant, cropper, or farm laborer, whether under a written or parole contract, after he shall have actually entered the service of his employer, or leave his employer during the term of service, knowing that said servant, cropper, or farm laborer was so employed, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 123. If any person or persons, by threats, violence, intimidation, or other unlawful means, shall prevent or attempt to prevent any person or persons in this State from engaging in, remaining in, or performing the business, labor, or duties of any lawful employment or occupation, such offender or offenders shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 124. If any person or persons, singly or together, or in combination, shall conspire to prevent or attempt to prevent any person or persons, by threats, violence, or intimidation, from engaging in, remaining in, or performing the business, labor, or duties of any lawful employment or occupation, such offender or offenders shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 125. If any person or persons, singly or by conspiring together, shall hinder any person or persons who desire to labor from so doing, or hinder any person, by threats, violence, or intimidation, from being employed as laborer or employee, such offender shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 126. If any person or persons, by threats, violence, intimidation, or any other unlawful means, shall hinder the owner, manager, or proprietor for the time being from controlling, using, operating, or working any property in any lawful occupation, or shall by such means hinder such person from hiring or employing laborers or employees, such offender or offenders shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

The following extracts are from the Code of Virginia, 1904:

SEC. 44. A contract for labor for a term of service, not exceeding two years, made in a foreign country with a person who shall immigrate to this State and duly attested by the United States consul or commercial agent at the port where such immigrant shall embark, shall be respected and enforced to the same extent and in the same manner as if made within the State.

SEC. 45. Every contract made as aforesaid shall be in duplicate, the original in the vernacular language of the immigrant, which shall be retained by him; the duplicate in the English language, which shall be recorded in the county or corporation wherein such employer resides within 10 days after the arrival of said immigrant at such residence, and until so recorded such employer shall not be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this chapter applicable to such contracts.

SEC. 46. Any immigrant who is a party to any such contract shall have the right to apply to a justice, who shall require personal security for the payment of wages at the times specified in said contract; or if not so specified, then monthly; and any immigrant who, without good and sufficient cause, shall be discharged from the service of an employer may recover from him, in addition to the amount due for past services, damages not exceeding the wages for three months of the unexpired term of his contract.

SEC. 47. An immigrant bound by any such contract who shall, without good and sufficient cause, leave the service of his employer shall be liable to said employer for an amount not exceeding the sum which may or would be due for a period not exceeding three months of the term of his contract.

SEC. 48. All the provisions of the four preceding sections shall apply to contracts made with immigrants after their arrival in the United States, as well as to contracts made in a foreign country, except that such contracts made within the United States may be attested by a justice or other officer authorized by law to attest and affix his official seal to such contract.

Virginia is the only State I find whose statutory law provides for contract labor of foreigners; and to show how backward it is in this respect I cite the following sections of the United States Statutes of 1883, chapter 164:

SECTION 1. That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien or aliens, any foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, under contract or agreement, parole or special, express or implied, made previous to the importation or migration of such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That all contracts or agreements, express or implied, parole or special, which may hereafter be made by and between any person, company, partnership, or corporation and any foreigner or foreigners, alien or aliens, to perform labor or service or having reference to the performance of labor or service by any person in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia previous to the migration or importation of the person or persons whose labor or service is contracted for into the United States, shall be utterly void and of no effect.

SEC. 3. That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same by knowingly assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parole or special, with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, previous to becoming residents or citizens of the United States, shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor, including any such alien or foreigner who may be a party to any such contract or agreement, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the circuit courts of the United States, the proceeds to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and separate suits may be brought for each alien or foreigner being a party to such contract or agreement aforesaid; and it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such suit at the expense of the United States.

You will observe that Virginia, in the face of this Federal statute, maintains a law that a contract made in a foreign country with laborers who shall immigrate to that State shall be respected and enforced. While the statute does not provide that those who make contracts with foreigners in their own country for their labor shall pay the passage of those people to this country it does not prohibit it. Hence it is easy to conclude that it is done. The payment of transportation across the ocean from southeastern Europe to a man or woman who can not raise the money is a great temptation to migrate and accept very low wages under an iron-bound and hard contract. This law and the practice under it are bad in many respects. Too many, rather than too few, immigrants are flocking to our shores of their own volition and paying their way. The flood of immigration is becoming such a menace to this country, in the judgment of many people, that they are urgently demanding legislation which will check it to a very large extent. The importation of contract labor to Virginia reminds one of the time when Africans were imported to the Old Dominion, and it is offensive to the American notion of human freedom.

The following extracts are from the Code of Mississippi, 1906:

SEC. 1146. If any person shall willfully interfere with, entice away, knowingly employ, or induce a laborer or renter who has contracted with another person for a specified time to leave his employer or the leased premises before the expiration of his contract without the consent of the employer or landlord, he shall, upon conviction, be fined not less than $25 nor more than $100, and in addition shall be liable to the employer or landlord for all advances made by him to said renter or laborer by virtue of his contract with said renter or laborer, and for all damages which he may have sustained by reason thereof.

SEC. 1147. Any laborer, renter, or share cropper who has contracted with another person for a specified time in writing, not exceeding one year, who shall leave his employer or leased premises before the expiration of his contract, without the consent of the employer or landlord, and makes a second contract with a second party without giving notice of the first contract to the second party, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be fined not exceeding $50.

The following extract is from the Criminal Code of South Carolina:

SEC. 359. Any person who shall entice or persuade by any means whatsoever any tenant, servant, or laborer, under contract with another, duly entered into between the parties before one or more witnesses, whether such contract be verbal or in writing, to violate such contract, or shall employ any laborer knowing such laborer to be under contract with another, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than twenty-five nor more than one hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not less than 10 nor more than 30 days.

I further submit a condensed reference to labor laws in those 12 States as a comparison of them with those of other States.

Twenty-eight States of the Union provide by statute that children under the age of 14 shall not be employed in mills, factories, and so forth. Only one of those States is from the above group of 12, viz, Kentucky.

Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, and South Carolina fix the age limit at 12 years, while Georgia fixes it at 10, and Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia have no laws for the protection of children.

Thirty-two States and Territories have statutes which provide that eight hours shall constitute a day's work. They generally apply to public service. Of those 32 only 3 are from the above group of 12, viz, Arkansas, North Carolina, and Texas, which provide, in substance, that men engaged in operating railroad trains shall not work over eight hours a day. The railroads in those States are, generally speaking, owned by foreign capital, and it is an inexpensive matter to make a record in labor legislation for which foreign capital must pay.

These extracts from and references to the statutes of Southern States are placed in the RECORD to illustrate the political inconsistency of certain gentlemen who never miss an opportunity of speaking for labor in the Congress and never improve an opportunity to say a word for it in their home States.

Let us refer back to the anti-injunction bill which was passed through the House a few days ago, and analyze the personnel of the Committee on the Judiciary that reported it. The membership of that committee is as follows:

Democrats: HENRY D. CLAYTON, of Alabama; ROBERT L. HENRY, of Texas; EDWIN Y. WEBB, of North Carolina; CHARLES C. CARLIN, of Virginia; WILLIAM W. RUCKER, of Missouri; JOHN C. FLOYD, of Arkansas; R. Y. THOMAS, Jr., of Kentucky; JAMES M. GRAHAM, of Illinois; H. GARLAND DUPRÉ, of Louisiana; MARTIN W. LITTLETON, of New York; WALTER I. MCCOY, of New Jersey; JOHN W. DAVIS, of West Virginia; and DANIEL J. MCGILLICUDDY, of Maine.

Republicans: JOHN A. STERLING, of Illinois; REUBEN O. MOON, of Pennsylvania; EDWIN W. HIGGINS, of Connecticut; PAUL HOWLAND, of Ohio; FRANK M. NYE, of Minnesota; GEORGE W. NORRIS, of Nebraska; and FRANCIS H. DODDS, of Michigan.

That is a very powerful and important committee, for it passes on constitutional questions, and has jurisdiction of most of the legislation affecting employers and employees and many bills which are of interest to labor and labor organizations.

You will observe that 14 are Democrats and 7 are Republicans. You will further observe that of the 14 Democrats the first 7 and the ninth are from Southern States. Those 8 southern Democrats dominate the 6 Democrats from other parts of the country, and the 14 determine the action of the committee on party questions, because the caucus is king in the Democratic Party in this House.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], who is the second member on the Committeee on the Judiciary, as well as chairman of the Committee on Rules, brought in a rule for the consideration of the anti-injunction bill which was adopted by the Democratic majority. That rule denied the right to offer amendments to the bill, and Members were required to vote either for it or against it exactly as it was reported. Let us here reproduce the last paragraph of that bill for the convenience of any who may care to compare its provisions with the foregoing statutes, and let me remark in passing that this was the paragraph about which was the greatest controversy and dispute between those who favored the bill and those who opposed it. It reads as follows:

And no such restraining order or injunction shall prohibit any person or persons from terminating any relation of employment, or from ceasing to perform any work or labor, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do; or from attending at or near a house or place where any person resides or works, or carries on business, or happens to be for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information, or of peacefully persuading any person to work or to abstain from working; or from ceasing to patronize or to employ any party to such dispute; or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means so to do; or from paying or giving to or withholding from any person engaged in such dispute any strike benefits or other moneys or things of value; or from peaceably assembling at any place in a lawful manner and for lawful purposes; or from doing any act or thing which might lawfully be done in the absence of such dispute by any party thereto.

The first part of this paragraph provides that no person or persons shall be restrained from terminating the relation of employer and employee at any time, or from ceasing to perform any work or labor, or from recommending, advising, or persuading others by peaceful means to leave their employment.

I do not wish to be understood as criticizing this provision. The relation of employer and employee is one of contract in all enlightened countries and States, and either party who breaks it is, under the common law, liable in damages to the other. I doubt if there is a Member here from any State in the country, save a Southern State, who would think of making it a penal offense for an employee to leave the service of his employer, or that the man who persuades him to leave is guilty of a crime. There are only 10 States in the Union which make it a crime to violate a contract of employment or to induce or persuade an employee to break such a contract and leave such employment, or to employ a person who has broken such a contract. Those States are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee.

These are all Democratic and Southern States, and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, who introduced the bill, drafted the report, and managed it through the House, is from the State of Alabama, which heads this list. Four other distinguished Democrats on this committee come from States which make it a criminal offense for a man to leave his employment and also a criminal offense to entice an employee from his work.

The second part of this paragraph in this anti-injunction bill justifies and legalizes picketing, and in such a way as to open the door for very dangerous and lawless consequences. However, I am not discussing the merits of this bill here, but comparing the records of the Members who reported, advocated, and rushed it through the House, in Congress, and in their home States. There are two States, so far as my examination has gone, which by statutes make picketing a criminal offense, and those are Alabama and Colorado, both Democratic.

The last part of this anti-injunction bill expressly recognizes the boycott and provides for its protection and success. There are only five States which by statutes make a boycott a criminal offense. Those are Alabama, Texas, Indiana, Colorado, and Illinois. Four of these five are Democratic, and again Alabama heads the list, and appears in the three lists.

Alabama is the only State in the Union which by solemn statutory enactment condemns as criminal and penalizes as such the three successive acts which go to make a successful strike, viz, abandoning employment and inducing or persuading others to do so, the picket, and boycott.

Mr. Samuel Gompers and several other officers of the American Federation of Labor sat in the gallery all the while the anti-injunction bill was under consideration in the House. They were manifestly interested in its passage, because it legalizes those acts which the Alabama statutes penalize and would the more easily make labor strikes successful. Mr. Gompers is consistent. He knows what he wants and knows how to go after it. But what about Mr. CLAYTON, the chairman of this great committee? He was born and reared and has always lived in Alabama. Men are usually influenced by their home associations and environment, and if a thing is really good they like to have it for themselves and their home people. Is he consistent, and is he sincere?

Another gentleman was born, reared, educated, and has always lived in Alabama, Mr. HEFLIN, of the fifth district, who is one of the most vociferous advocates in the House of the plain people, and whose perfervid declamation in behalf of the downtrodden workingman, during the debate on the naval appropriation bill, prompted me to make these remarks and place before the House and the country some of the labor laws of his own State.

There are several other able and influential Members of this body from the State of Alabama, among them a prominent candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination. Let them return to their own States and repeal those outrageous statutes which are relics of industrial slavery and peonage. Let them get in step with the march of progress in other parts of the country. Let them, by their acts, give evidence of their good faith and sincerity as friends of the plain people and of labor, and they will be listened to on that subject with attention and respect.

The 10 States above mentioned whose statutes make it a criminal offense, punishable as such, for a servant to leave his master, or for a man to entice a servant away from his master, or for a man to harbor an employee who has left his employer, have 83 Members in this House, 79 of whom are Democrats and 4 Republicans. This statement tells its own story on the question of labor legislation.

Texas has 16 Representatives—all Democrats. Virginia has 10 Representatives—9 Democrats and 1 Republican. Those 12 States, some of whose statutory laws are herein cited, are represented on this floor by 111 Members—106 Democrats and 5 Republicans. The representation from those States was in several previous Congresses the same in number and practically the same as to party affiliation. Those 12 States compose what is known as the "solid South," and no matter what political storms may have swept over other parts of the country they have remained true to the Democratic Party. From the Fifty-fourth to the Sixty-first Congress, inclusive, those Democratic Representatives constituted the bulk of their party in the House. Throughout other parts of the country Democrats, and Republicans too, are swept in and out according as the political gales are favorable or otherwise. Not so in those 12 States, for they have practically only one party. Their Representatives have been solidly Democratic, and by reason of their long and continuous service, their large experience, ability, and ranking positions on most all the great committees they organized the Democratic majority in the present Congress and completely dominate it. They are the men who formulate and report bills on industrial questions. They are the men who talk buncombe in the House on labor matters, and neglect the working people in their own States. They are the men who advocate laws for the Nation which they do not expect to pass, and if they should pass they know such laws will not affect their home conditions to any appreciable extent. Therefore when they talk loudly and eloquently for labor I question their consistency, and in some cases I question their sincerity.

Mr. CANNON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair understands that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] was speaking out of the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; I think not. I think I had unanimous consent granted that I might proceed for 10 minutes. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes to close the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have again reported the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] as an amendment to the substitute that I offered.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not a substitute.

Mr. CANNON. It is an amendment to the substitute that I offered.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; and I want to state this: That inadvertently I inserted the word "not" in the amendment I offered, whereas it should not be there, and I will ask that the Clerk report it correctly.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment to the substitute.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the substitute the following: "And that does pay the union scale of wages."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] repudiated the amendment offered to the substitute by my colleague, Dr. FOSTER, saying that he was in favor of it in principle and believed in it, but that he believed it was not constitutional, and therefore he was not in favor of it. He went further and said that organized labor never had demanded such a provision. I think the gentleman is correct. For many years I have kept general run of the action of organized labor in its platforms. My friend from Illinois, Dr. FOSTER, however, favors class legislation, because he wants to regulate the labor which produces coal that the Government buys by providing that it shall be paid at union scale. That is class legislation. If you can say that it shall be paid at the union scale, you can say that it shall be produced by the union man. Did my good friend think that, ostrich like, he could hide his head in the sand and thereby conceal his body?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If it be true that it would be unconstitutional to provide that coal should be mined by union labor, is it not equally unconstitutional to say that the mine owner shall pay the union wages?

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. That is my point. One is as unconstitutional as the other, and I believe that neither side of this House will write that legislation upon the statute books. Now, I am 76 years old, Mr. Chairman. I have been almost 38 years a Member of this House. I came into Congress on the 4th of March, 1873. How marvelously this country has grown. I came from a then purely agricultural district, a young man, a rough ashler and possibly a rough ashler yet, and without the privilege of having even a good common school training. I had lots of things to learn; but, thank God, I did know touching the constitutional privileges of every citizen of the great Republic. I could wrestle very vigorously on a country circuit on questions of fact, although I did not know much law, and I guess I have not improved greatly in that respect. [Applause.]

But I know that all law in a civilized nation that does not, like the grace of God, cover every individual, without fear, favor, affection, or discrimination, is no law under the Constitution. Now, some gentleman was kind enough to say, my honored colleague, I believe—no; the gentleman from Alabama

[Mr. HEFLIN], with burly-headed statesmanship and patriotism, with lungs like a bellows and a voice like the bull of Bashan, from time to time throws all questions into the tariff and then jumps on the tariff when he is pressed. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. I have not much time, but I will yield just for a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman says I jump on the tariff. The difference between the gentleman and myself is that he never jumps on the tariff.

Mr. CANNON. I only yielded for a question, as I only have a few moments. The gentleman says I have not been converted, and that therefore I am an enemy of organized labor; that for eight years, while I was Speaker, labor went hungry in its demand and its recognition in a Republican Congress. Thank God, I am like the old woman, when somebody said that there were infants in hell not a span long; she did not argue it; she said, "Thank God, that is a lie." [Laughter and applause.]

Take the record that was made in the eight years I was Speaker, with Theodore Roosevelt as President for six and President Taft for two years. There was more good legislation enacted by Republican Congresses in that period touching labor conditions than was enacted in all the years before or since the organization of the Government. [Applause.] There were demands made to which I did not subscribe as Speaker, and as a Member I do not now. One of them, and perhaps the principal one, demanded by Samuel Gompers and some of the other leaders, was that there should be legislation enacted providing that the right to do business at a particular place or any place is not a property right.

I said and the law says it is a property right, and I did not respond to the demand. That was the principal cause, in my judgment, that made Mr. Gompers come to my district and enter upon a campaign for my defeat. He had a right to come, and I am not abusing him. Oh, I never yet have seen the time when any American citizen is charged with the commission of a crime, as principal or accessory, that I have hotfootedly jumped on and denounced him. An American citizen, whether he be McNamara or any other labor leader or any man who is not a labor leader, whatever the crime may be that he may be charged with, is entitled to his day in court and a trial by a jury, and no man has heard me, when the denunciations came against Mr. Gompers after he had pronounced—before the case was tried—for the innocence of the McNamaras, no one has ever heard me say he is an old fraud and responsible for the crimes committed by the McNamaras on their own confession. Nay, nay. The presumption of innocence runs to him, and that innocence has to be removed beyond all reasonable doubt under the law before I will denounce him on that account. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee for the courtesy of allowing me 10 minutes. The Chair did not count the time of the gentleman from New York in the time I have had?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not. All time has expired——

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], chairman of the committee, in asking unanimous consent to close debate in 15 minutes, provided that my colleague Mr. CANNON should have 10 minutes of that time, and that I should have 5 minutes to close the debate.

Mr. CANNON. Let that be as it may, I did not so understand it, but I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have five minutes to close debate. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his colleague Mr. FOSTER have five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the distinguished ex-Speaker of this House, placed a proviso upon an amendment offered a little while ago that no coal should be bought by the Government from any operator, mine owner, or company——

Mr. CANNON. Unless produced by 8-hour labor. That applied to Australia, British Columbia, and the United States, and——

Mr. FOSTER. I am certain it applies to Australia and all the world, and I am glad it does. I want to compliment the gentleman from Illinois not only for indorsing the 8-hour bill in the United States, but indorsing the 8-hour bill for the world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not a constitutional lawyer, but it occurs to me that if we have the right to limit the purchase of coal from mines that must install the 8-hour day, we must say to those mine owners, "You must maintain a union scale of wages." And I for one am ready now to go on record for an honest wage for an honest American workman. I was in this House while the former Speaker [Mr. CANNON] occupied the chair.

But for a long time there was a demand for an eight-hour bill to be passed by Congress; there was a demand by the labor interests of this country that there should be an anti-injunction bill; there was a demand that there should be passed through this Congress the right of trial by jury in cases of contempt. So we say to-day that we are going to fulfill the pledges of the Democratic Party and stand for the rights of labor in this country, that have so long been neglected in these respects.

I believe that every Member of this House ought to vote for a provision which proposes to pay decent wages to the American workmen. We have heard for years that we must levy a high protective tariff and that the laboring man must get a part of that protection. Now, when you have an opportunity to say that this money that we appropriate for the buying of coal shall not be paid to mine owners unless they do pay their men a decent wage, are you going to vote against it? I do not believe that the membership upon that side of the House or the membership upon this side of the House will vote against an amendment of this kind, because we stand for fair wages for American workmen. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for just one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. I just simply want to call attention to the fact that, as I said in the beginning, this whole amendment is wrong in its purpose. While there is no justification for the amendment at all, we have had a long debate, and we have had various amendments to the amendment, and it comes now to the amendment as originally offered, and it should be voted down as a whole in the interests of the Government.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am entirely in accord with the purpose of the gentleman from Illinois in his amendment. I know his desire to promote the interests of the men who work in the mines and that he would like to see union wages paid in all coal fields as they are in the State of Illinois; but, in my judgment, this amendment will not accomplish the purpose he has in mind. He proposes that none of this money shall be expended for the purchase of coal, except where union wages are paid. When the gentleman speaks of union wages, what union has he reference to? Is it a bona fide union, like the United Mine Workers, or some pseudounion which any coal operator may organize to suit his own purpose of establishing a union scale of wages far lower than the real union scale? There are many coal fields in the United States where there is no union and where no union wages have been established; and there, on various occasions, unions have been organized that were not bona fide unions, but organized for the specific purpose of preventing a real union of workingmen from getting a foothold, and there would be nothing to prevent any employer of labor in any coal field that is nonunion from organizing a union of workmen for the purpose of establishing a false union wage far lower than the real union wage and thereby bringing into existence a dual labor organization that would be injurious to the workmen in the long run by creating and using a union controlled by the coal operators to keep out a union controlled by the workingmen themselves.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? I know the gentleman's interest in union labor, and I would like to ask him if he would have this Government recognize any union officially?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I do not believe that it would be good policy, although I do not believe it is unconstitutional to do so. But when you make the statement that they are to pay union wages, you do not specify what those wages are; you do not specify what union is to make those wages, and not specifying the union, the employers can organize a union themselves and contract with the union they have created, and when they contract with it the wages become union wages, no matter what they are or how far below the standard of the bona fide union those wages may be. It would place the miners in a position where they would have a dual organization that would hardly fail to come into conflict with the regular organization, and the coal operators would not hesitate to take advantage of the animosities thus created to force reductions of wages upon their workmen. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] presents in a new form the idea of a minimum wage scale for all persons employed in the production of material for the use of the Government. It has been prepared and presented in the heat of debate and consequently does not reach the end sought to be attained, but sooner or later the idea will be perfected and enacted into law. In its present form I shall oppose it because I am sure it will not accomplish the purpose my friend from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] had in mind when he presented the amendment to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY].

Mr. CANNON. No; my substitute was an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was adopted, and at that time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] offered a further amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Then the vote is on the amendment offered by my colleague, Dr. FOSTER?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask to have the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the substitute the following words: "And that does pay the union scale of wages."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. BUCHANAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I understood that my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] withdrew that amendment.

Mr. RAKER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. FOSTER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a substitute. That follows the amendment that was offered by my colleague, ex-Speaker CANNON.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of the amendment, the following words: "who are not paid less than the union scale of wages."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. PROUTY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute as amended.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. SABATH. Will the Chair please have the substitute reported again? The Members do not know what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

But in purchasing such articles the preference shall be given to those produced in the United States which can be procured at the same price and quality: Provided, That the coal shall be mined by labor that is employed at not exceeding eight hours per day.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the substitute as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Military stores, Marine Corps: Pay of chief armorer, at $4 per diem; 1 mechanic, at $3 per diem; 2 mechanics, at $2.50 each per diem; 1 chief electrician, at $4 per diem, and 1 assistant electrician, at $3.50 per diem; per diem of enlisted men employed on constant labor for periods of not less than 10 days; purchase of military equipments, such as rifles, revolvers, cartridge boxes, bayonet scabbards, haversacks, blanket bags, canteens, rifle slings, swords, drums, trumpets, flags, waist belts, waist plates, cartridge belts, spare parts for repairing rifles, machêtes, purchase and repair of tents, field cots, field ovens, and stoves for tents; purchase and repair of instruments for bands, purchase of music and musical accessories; purchase and marking of prizes for excellence in gunnery and rifle practice; good-conduct badges; medals awarded to officers and enlisted men by the Government for conspicuous, gallant, and special service; incidental expenses of schools of application; construction, equipment, and maintenance of school, library, and amusement rooms and gymnasiums for enlisted men, and the purchase and repair of all articles of field sports for enlisted men; purchase and repair of signal equipment and stores; establishment and maintenance of targets and ranges, and renting ranges, and entrance fees in competitions; procuring, preserving, and handling ammunition and other necessary military supplies; in all, $307,737.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] is recognized.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I have been listening daily, sometimes once and sometimes twice and as often as three times daily, to the effusions of my friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. Sometimes they were poetic; never prosy.

He comes from the ambitious State of Alabama, where they aspire to the Presidency. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But I am afraid that the only shining light reflected from that State at the moment is Mr. UNDERWOOD'S personality, but if we get nothing more than we just received from the gentleman from Alabama, notwithstanding the courage and ability and popularity of the Democratic leader, Mr. UNDERWOOD, his case is a hopeless one.

Now, my friend from Alabama, Mr. HEFLIN, has undertaken, I think, to do something that does not become him, and in view of the record of his own State is indefensible. I want, Mr. Chairman, to read a few lines from a letter written by a friend of mine who resides near his home, and I think possibly in his district. He has something to say about labor conditions there.

This is what he says:

Shortly after I arrived at this camp—

One of these convict camps of Alabama—

the convict warden came up to me one day and said that if I wished he would show me something, as he termed it, "You damn Yankees are not used to seeing." I followed him to the stockade, where he ordered four trusties to bring out a colored convict who had committed a trivial offense. He then ordered this man to take off all his clothes (he was as fine a speciman of muscle and strength as I have ever seen), then told him to lie on the ground flat on his stomach, and placed the four trusties, one on each arm and leg in order that the man could not turn over. The warden then produced a strap about 4 feet long, one-half inch thick, and about 2 inches wide; this was on a round wooden handle; he then started to punish this man by giving him 25 lashes. When he had finished the man was bleeding from a dozen or more places on his back. He could hardly stand. Later on I saw this same warden start to lash a white convict who was so sick and weak that he looked more like a corpse than anything else. That was too much for me. I left, but later heard that this victim had fainted and they had to carry him to his pen. These were common occurrences at that time in Georgia and Alabama.

I was asked on several occasions while in those sections to help support and join the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. I offended quite a few persons by making fun of their society and referring to the manner in which they treated convicts.

I have particularly noticed that the wardens and convict guards of Georgia and Alabama are looked upon as being lower than the convicts themselves by the better class of people, and are sprung from what the southerner calls "poor white trash and sagers." I consider that these men, if you wish to call them that, are the lowest type of manhood in the white race.

While I was in the two States mentioned, from 1905 to 1909, the following companies were working convict labor to my knowledge. The ones I mention I happen to know on account of being in the vicinity where they were worked:

Durham Coal & Coke Co., Chattanooga, Tenn.; convict camp, Durham Mines, Pittsburg, Ga. Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railway Co., Birmingham, Ala.; convict camp, Flat Top Mines, Ensley, Pratt City, and other mines in Alabama. Pratt Consolidated Coal Co., Birmingham, Ala.; Banner Mines, convict camp, Littleton, Ala. Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co., Birmingham, Ala.; convict camp, Flat Top Mines and others. Republic Iron & Steel Co., Birmingham, Ala. Dimmick Pipe Works, Birmingham, Ala.

All the above camps in Alabama are within a radius of 30 miles of Birmingham.

If you wish to investigate you will find that most of these companies prefer to work convict labor. If they can not get it they have men out all over the country looking for any kind of foreign labor. They will give anyone work in preference to Americans, and the Americans they do work they hold to the lowest possible wages, and will keep other companies from giving them better positions and higher wages, as the inclosed letters from the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railway Co. will prove.

If what I have written you is not what you want, kindly let me know just what you want, and I can give you more details.

Yours, very truly,

BEN T. PHILLIPS.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, in substantiation of what I have read, in response to what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has said in his assaults on the North, and labor conditions there, and to the shame of the State of Alabama, I want to show you the evidence of the inhumanity, brutality, and cruelty of his State, greater than that of the camps of Siberia and Russia. I hold in my hand a photograph of a convict camp in Alabama, which any gentleman can see. [Applause.]

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his amendment until I can address the House for five minutes.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. It is one of a series of amendments which have been offered to all these propositions, and I want to offer it now, so that it may be pending; and I will ask unanimous consent that it be passed over under the agreement made with the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Illinois on Saturday.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 6, page 59, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase or manufacture of such rifles, revolvers, cartridge boxes, bayonets, scabbards, and haversacks as have been or are being manufactured in a Government establishment from or by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of commencement and during the prosecution of the work on the articles named herein established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged or to be engaged in the work on the articles named herein."

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Tennessee, the chairman of the committee, is going to introduce an amendment to the 8-hour bill passed by the House, and until that is disposed of I ask to have this amendment passed and be considered as pending.

Mr. CANNON. One moment, Mr. Chairman. When the amendment is offered, then I will give my consent or make my objection.

Mr. PADGETT. The amendment is offered now.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. It is offered now, and I ask that it be passed, as have the other amendments, and be considered as pending.

Mr. CANNON. Well, Mr. Chairman, one swallow does not make a summer. Where does the gentleman's amendment come in?

Mr. PADGETT. At the end of line 6, page 59. There are two other similar amendments identical in language that have been passed.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection, Mr. Chairman; I thought it was to the paragraph to which the gentleman from Iowa offered the amendment a short time ago and which was agreed on.

The CHAIRMAN. It is to a different paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. I shall not interpose any objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be passed and be considered as pending.

Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. BARTLETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I understood that I was to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not aware that the gentleman from Alabama was seeking the floor. He was aware that he was seeking time on this side. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no duty to perform in making a reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] for anything he has said in reference to Alabama. I have no knowledge on the subject of the conditions in Alabama; nor does it devolve upon me to make any defense for her or to reply to what has been said by him with reference to that State. Alabama can take care of herself ably and well; but I want to say, with reference to the statement in the letter which the gentleman has read as to conditions in the State of Georgia, that if the man who wrote that letter referred to any conditions in Georgia as now existing or claims that they have existed since 1907, he has written what is not true.

Mr. Chairman, we did suffer in Georgia for years with an infamous convict system, under which convicts were hired out to private parties, but it was first fastened upon us by a Republican governor and a Republican legislature in 1870. [Applause on the Democratic side.] As a member of the Georgia Legislature in 1882 and 1884 I endeavored to correct it and cast my influence and my vote in favor of abolishing the system and endeavored to have the system abolished. Finally, when the contracts that had been made for 20 years under a Republican governor had expired, when Georgia was able to get control of her own affairs by the aid and influence of her Democratic governor, who insisted that the system of hiring out the convicts be abolished, thank God we did abolish it, and hiring out convicts in Georgia has ceased and never will again be permitted. [Applause.]

We have at present as humane a system as any State in this Union. We tax our people burdensomely in order to provide for a humane and proper system, and there is no convict camp in Georgia to-day controlled by private parties; nor are the convicts worked in competition with free labor as was once the case. I merely rose to say that the statement in the letter read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in so far as it refers to the State which I have the honor to represent, in my opinion, is a falsehood and a slander. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman of the committee how long we are going to continue this evening, and how long we are going to continue this kind of politics?

Mr. PADGETT. I want to expedite the consideration of the bill and reach at least the increase of the Navy to-night. We ought to reach it by 6 o'clock.

Mr. GOOD. I think we ought to cease this kind of debate.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that general debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close at the end of 10 minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. I wish the gentleman would make it 15 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I will make it 15 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move as an amendment that all debate be limited to the items in the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. That is the rule anyway, if a Member insists on it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the gentleman from Tennessee will not make any such motion as that.

Mr. GOOD. I shall object to any remarks not confined to the item now under discussion.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to deny me the opportunity to reply to the assault made upon my State by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Alabama has already invited all the attacks that he has received.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] has read what appears up to this time to be an anonymous letter which reflects upon the State that I have the honor in part to represent. The name of the gentleman who wrote that letter has not been given to this House.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order. He is not speaking to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. But he got unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I obtained unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. I requested unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that under the five-minute rule if the point of order be insisted upon the speaker is obliged to confine himself to the subject matter of the paragraph.

Mr. HEFLIN. But I had 10 minutes. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE] did ask unanimous consent that I might proceed for 10 minutes in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and there was no objection, as I understood it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee intervened with a motion to limit debate. The Chair did not submit the request of the gentleman from West Virginia, but will do so now.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes in reply to the attack made on his State by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama be allowed to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. HOWARD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman from Alabama have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in order at this time. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of appealing to my colleague from Iowa to withdraw his objection. This attack upon the State of Alabama came from the Republican side, and I ask in all justice and fair play as a Republican that the gentleman from Alabama have the opportunity to be heard in answer. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the point was not made against the gentleman from Pennsylvania, when he read his letter, from this side, and it is unfair for this side to object to the gentleman from Alabama having an opportunity to reply to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, in order that I may put this matter properly before the country and in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the attack that has been made upon my State by the reading of the letter which purports to be from somebody——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the letter does not speak the truth [applause], and I ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes in which to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama submits a request for unanimous consent that he be permitted, out of order, to address the committee for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to say to the gentleman that I have no objection to his making any explanation that he desires to make; but he knows, and every Member of this House knows, that this is no place for this kind of discussion, and therefore, Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman does that, I will ask him why he did not make an objection when my State was slandered by a gentleman from his side. Why did he not make that objection then, when a Member on the Republican side was knowingly and intentionally slandering Alabama? Do you want to be unfair; do you want to slander a sovereign State in this fashion; do you want to speak a deliberate falsehood through a Member of that side and then deny me under the rules a chance to reply? [Applause.]

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, was there an objection to my request?

The CHAIRMAN. The request was objected to, and the time of the gentleman from Alabama has now expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, is it permissible to raise a question of personal privilege in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that, notwithstanding the gentleman has already made one speech upon the subject, to which I replied, I hope the House will permit him to go ahead and say what he has to say. I may ask the House later to permit me to reply.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask this question for information. Is it permissible in the Committee of the Whole to raise the question of personal privilege?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that where a question of personal privilege properly rises under the proceedings, it may be brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. The attack made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] upon the district and upon the State that I have the honor to represent referred to me personally and constitutes a reflection upon the people that I represent, and I desire to state my question of personal privilege and to reply to that unwarranted attack and slander.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, what is it the gentleman from Alabama is making a speech about? I want to know what the regular order is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. I am trying to find out what the regular order is, and I find the gentleman from Alabama is making a speech. I can not hear what——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama arose to a question of personal privilege and is now stating it

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand the gentleman can do that in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I make a point of order against it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that the grounds stated by the gentleman do not present a question of personal privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule in regard to questions of privilege is:

> Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of Members, individually, in their representative capacity only.

If it does not affect a Member in his representative capacity, the question of privilege would not arise.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has reflected upon my people and has referred to me or to my district in connection with the convict system in the State, and in order that the truth may now go in the RECORD, I desire to reply now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, ruling on the point of order, would say the Chair does not think the gentleman makes out a case of personal privilege under the state of affairs so far.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, in order that this matter may be adjusted now, that the gentleman from Alabama may have 10 minutes to address the committee, and that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] may have 5 minutes to follow him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may have 10 minutes in which to address the committee and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] may have 5 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Total Marine Corps, exclusive of public works, $7,425,578.78.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, we have now reached the increase of the Navy, I think.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. We have.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. HULL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24565, the naval appropriation bill, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 720).

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 19 of the act of Congress, approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith a copy of the Journal of the Executive Council of Porto Rico for the second session and the extraordinary session of the Sixth Legislative Assembly, 1912.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 27, 1912.

The SPEAKER. Ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. J. M. C. SMITH, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. HELM, for 30 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOEHNE, for three days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14083. An act to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at

Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17029. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convert the regimental Army post at Fort Oglethorpe into a brigade post; and

H. J. Res. 142. Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

S. 5930. An act to extend the time for the completion of dams across the Savannah River by authority granted Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908;

H. R. 14083. An act to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes;

H. R. 17029. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convert the regimental Army post at Fort Oglethorpe into a brigade post;

H. R. 20586. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. J. Res. 142. Joint resolution to declare and make certain the authority of the Attorney General to begin and maintain and of any court of competent jurisdiction to entertain and decide a suit or suits for the purpose of having judicially declared a forfeiture of the rights granted by the act entitled "An act granting the Washington Improvement & Development Co. a right of way through the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington," approved June 4, 1898.

REPORT OF NAVAL BOARD (S. DOC. NO. 725).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 23d instant, certain information relative to the appointment of a board to consider the question of transferring certain offices of the Navy Department to the Department of Commerce and Labor, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH M. PADGETT v. UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 724).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact and conclusion of law filed by the court in the cause of Joseph M. Padgett v. United States (Washington Navy Yard), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 319) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1912, and for other purposes.

The message also transmitted to the Senate resolutions of the House on the life, character, and public services of JAMES P. LATTA, late a Representative from the State of Nebraska.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of the congregation of the Dingman's Methodist Episcopal Church, of Delaware, Pa., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Quincy, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the preparation and printing of a national directory of commercial organizations of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also presented a memorial of the Silver Crown Building & Loan Association, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation levying a special excise tax on building and loan associations, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hillside, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the use of insignia and garb of any denomination in the Indian public schools, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry members of the Ladies of the Maccabees of the World, residents of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the publications of fraternal associations the privileges of second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Bond County, Ill., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-injunction bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of members of the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Paul's School, of Concord, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide medical and sanitary relief for the natives of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation to maintain the present water rates in the District, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. POMERENE. I present letters from the legislative committee of the Grain Dealers' National Association and the transportation committee of the Peoria Board of Trade and sundry telegrams from chambers of commerce and commercial organizations throughout the State of Ohio in favor of Senate bill 6810, relating to bills of lading. I do not ask that they be read, but I should like to have them printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters and telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 28, 1912.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: The Grain Dealers' National Association gives its hearty support and approval to Senate bill 6810.

This association represents the entire grain interests throughout the United States in all of its branches. Its membership of more than 2,000 is composed of country shippers, receivers, and exporters. This membership makes it national in scope and thoroughly representative of the entire grain industry of the country.

The matter of bills of lading has been one of great importance and serious consideration by this organization for a great number of years, and Senate bill 6810 meets the hearty approval not only of this association itself, but of its constituent members.

It is to be hoped that this measure will receive the approval of Congress at the present session, because there is a crying necessity for remedial legislation of this character.

Respectfully submitted by the legislative committee of the Grain Dealers' National Association.

A. E. REYNOLDS, Chairman.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., May 27, 1912.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

This will confirm our letter to you and other Senators comprising the committee handling Senate bill 6810, on bills of lading, and will also confirm similar letter to Senators from Minnesota approving the Pomerene substitute bill and urging all to use every effort toward passing this bill without change. We, as one of largest shippers, believe this bill fits the situation and clearly places the shipper in position of knowing his rights. Hence the necessity of favorable action is not imperative, and we request such action of United States Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present resolutions adopted by Masonic lodges in the State of Georgia, favoring the passage of House joint resolution No. 271 relating to the use of the insignia of fraternal or secret societies. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LANDRUM LODGE, NO. 48, F. AND A. M.,
Savannah, Ga., May 18, 1912.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit to you the inclosed copy of resolution passed last night by Landrum Lodge, No. 48, Free and Accepted Masons, and to request that you give the resolution your favorable attention and exert your influence as therein urged.

Yours, very truly,
[SEAL.] W. C. TRAVIS, Secretary.

Whereas we are informed that there is pending in the House of Representatives a resolution introduced by Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi (H. J. Res. 271) directing the Secretary of War to permit emblems or insignia of fraternal or secret societies to be inscribed on monuments, tombstones, slabs, or markers in the national cemeteries of the United States; and

Whereas many men have found both consolation and refreshment in the brotherly love and affection which such organizations are intended to promote, and naturally many such men desire to have their last resting places marked by the emblems of some beloved fraternity; and

Whereas it seems but simple justice that the wishes of the dead should be granted in this respect: Now therefore be it

Resolved by Landrum Lodge, No. 48, Free and Accepted Masons, That Congress be requested to pass this resolution and permit the placing of such emblems and insignia over the graves of members of fraternal and secret orders.

Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions be sent by the secretary, under the seal of the lodge, to Senators for Georgia and to the Representative from this district, and also to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives at Washington, with the request that they exert their influence to have the said resolution, No. 271, passed.

Passed May 17, 1912.

A true copy.

W. C. TRAVIS, Secretary.

ZERUBBABEL LODGE, NO. 15, FREE AND ACCEPTED MASONS,
Savannah, Ga., May 23, 1912.

Whereas the Declaration of Independence was drawn by Masons, and all the early struggles for the independence of this country were aided and encouraged by the Masons, who have ever stood for individual liberty and for the highest ideals in private and public life; and

Whereas under a rule of the War Department no insignia or emblem of a fraternal or secret society can be placed over the grave of one buried in a national cemetery; and

Whereas many worthy and patriotic Masons have laid down their lives for their country and the members of this order still constitute a large part of the defenders of the State and Nation; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives House joint resolution No. 271, by Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi, providing for the placing of insignia or emblems of fraternal or secret societies on graves in national cemeteries: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That Zerubbabel Lodge, No. 15, Free and Accepted Masons, and the members thereof, do most heartily approve said House joint resolution No. 271, and do most earnestly request the House Committee on Military Affairs and the National Congress to pass said resolution No. 271, and we further urge upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence in favor of the same; be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of this lodge forward a copy of this resolution to the two Senators from Georgia, to the Representative in Congress from this district, and to the House Committee on Military Affairs, under the seal of the lodge, and call their attention to this request.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM A. BISHOP, Secretary.

Whereas the Junior Order United American Mechanics is a secret order in which are taught the purest patriotism and the deepest devotion to our beloved country; and

Whereas it has come to our attention that under an order or rule of the War Department it is forbidden for the emblems or insignia of secret or fraternal orders to be displayed on the graves in the national cemeteries; and

Whereas it is our understanding that a resolution has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi, known as House joint resolution No. 271, providing that the emblems and insignia of secret and fraternal orders be permitted to be placed on tombstones, monuments, slabs, and markers in national cemeteries under certain regulations: Now therefore be it

Resolved by Resolution Council, No. 2, of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, That we most heartily approve the said resolution No. 271, above mentioned, except that we favor allowing the deceased to designate, prior to his death, what emblems or insignia shall be placed over his grave, and also favor placing such insignia and emblems as the deceased may have selected when in life, without regard to the wishes of the nearest relatives; and we further favor allowing such emblems and insignia to be placed over the graves of persons leaving no near relatives when the fraternal or secret society to which such deceased person belonged or his legal representative so requests.

Resolved further, That we urge and request the Senators from Georgia, the Congressman from this district, the House Committee on Military Affairs, and all Members of Congress to use their influence toward the passage of the said resolution by Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi, No. 271, and that the secretary of this council send to each of the said Senators and to our Representative and the House Committee on Military Affairs a copy of this resolution.

Passed by Resolution Council, No. 2, Junior Order United American Mechanics, this 20th day of May, 1912.

A true copy.

C. W. HOLLIDAY, Councilor.

Mr. SANDERS. I present a communication from the secretary of the National Federation Retail Implement and Vehicle Dealers' Associations, of Abilene, Kans., and a communication from the National Implement and Vehicle Association, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the establishment of a rural parcel post. I ask that the communications be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the communications were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATIONAL FEDERATION RETAIL IMPLEMENT AND VEHICLE DEALERS' ASSOCIATIONS,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Abilene, Kans., May 23, 1912.

Hon. NEWELL SANDERS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SANDERS: It is needless to tell you the position our federation takes in regard to parcel-post matters. We have had this matter up a number of times with your association, and I am sure that it was discussed the year that you were president. We feel that the establishment of a rural parcel post would be very disastrous. I do not care to engage in a detailed discussion of the matter, because I think you know all of the arguments we have to set forth. I am simply writing you at this time to ask on behalf of the 5,000 implement and hardware dealers affiliated in our federation your influence in defeating any parcel-post legislation at this session of Congress. We believe that the only way to settle this matter now is to refer it all to a commission with power and means to make a thorough investigation. So many plans have been suggested that it seems to me it would be unadvisable to enact any legislation until due consideration has been given the subject.

Wishing you abundant success, and assuring you of my esteem, I remain,

Sincerely, yours, H. J. HODGE, Secretary.

NATIONAL IMPLEMENT AND VEHICLE ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Chicago, May 25, 1912.

Hon. NEWELL SANDERS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SANDERS: I have a letter from our mutual friend, Mr. H. J. Hodge, of the National Federation of Retail Implement and Vehicle Dealers' Associations, relative to parcel post, to the inauguration of which you are aware that the retail dealers in our lines are strongly opposed.

You will also recall that the old Association of Agricultural Implement and Vehicle Manufacturers were also on record against it, and while our present association has given no official expression on the subject, yet a great many of our members stand with the dealers in their position.

We believe the attitude they now take is a reasonable one, inasmuch as they suggest referring the whole question to a commission with power and means to make a thorough investigation. This certainly ought to bring valuable facts to light, and as the question has been before the public many years and will have a most important bearing on the retailing of merchandise throughout the country a little further delay pending the report of such a commission can not possibly be seriously detrimental to any interest, and we hope it will be your pleasure to take the same view of it and support any bill which will secure the desired result.

With the kindest personal regards, I beg to remain,

Yours, truly,

E. W. MCCULLOUGH.

Mr. GRONNA presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Larimore, N. Dak., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to restrict the free and open marketing of grain, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Kintyre, N. Dak., remonstrating against the adoption of certain amendments to the patent laws, which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. ASHURST presented a petition of Grand Canyon Lodge, No. 249, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, of Winslow, Ariz., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit fraud upon the public by requiring manufacturers to place their own names upon manufactured articles, which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. ROOT presented a petition of sundry members of the Ladies of the Maccabees of the World, residents of Hudson, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the publications of fraternal associations the privileges of second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred certain bills granting pensions and increase of pensions, submitted a report (No. 808), accompanied by a bill (S. 6978) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, the bill being a substitute for the following Senate bills heretofore referred to the committee:

S. 152. Grant Noble.
S. 350. Edward F. Shaughnessy.
S. 428. Gust Carlson.
S. 451. Ira Howell.
S. 4763. Jethro J. T. Garde.
S. 5324. William Buck.
S. 5393. Anna E. R. Webb.
S. 6676. Marion Franklin.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21478) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 809) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 22194. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 810);

H. R. 22261. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 811);

H. R. 22867. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 812);

H. R. 23515. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 813); and

H. R. 23765. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors (Rept. No. 814).

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 6965) making it unlawful for any society, order, or association to send or receive through the United States mails, or to deposit in the United States mails, any written or printed matter representing such society, fraternal order, or association to be named or designated or entitled by any name hereafter adopted, any word or part of which title shall be the name of any bird or animal, the name of which bird or animal is already being used as a part of its title or name by any other society, fraternal order, or association; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) for the appointment of three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500 for the construction of a sidewalk bordering the property of the Government at Fort Banks, Mass., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURTON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 for the salary of a chief of division of compilation in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 24023), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the pay teller in the office of the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati, Ohio, from $1,800 per annum to $2,000 per annum, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 24023), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,500 for civilian assistant in the Bureau of Yards and Docks, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 24023), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

JOHN T. M'CROSSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11628) authorizing John T. McCrosson and associates to construct an irrigation ditch on the island of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—GEORGE B. DUNCAN.

On motion of Mr. BRADLEY, it was Ordered, That there be withdrawn from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Senate bill 182, Sixty-second Congress, for the relief of George B. Duncan, there having been no adverse report thereon.

PROPOSED TARIFF LEGISLATION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I submit a proposed amendment to the pending tariff bill, which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. NEWLANDS to the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenues, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909:

Whereas certain of the duties heretofore levied by law on articles imported from foreign countries into the United States are so high as to encourage and facilitate the imposition of excessive prices for similar articles of domestic production; and

Whereas such excessive duties fail to produce sufficient revenue; and

Whereas both the Republican and Democratic Parties have, by declarations in their respective platforms, committed themselves to a revision of tariff duties, the former to a revision based on the ascertainment of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad with a fair profit to the manufacturer, and the latter to a revision and gradual reduction of the tariff to a revenue basis; and

Whereas both parties have declared that such revision should be accomplished with a due regard to the interests of domestic workers and without destructive readjustments of domestic industries; and

Whereas neither of such parties is in complete control of legislation and either party is able to prevent the other from carrying out completely its principles and policies, and compromise is therefore desirable and necessary in order to prevent a deadlock in legislation prejudicial to the interests of the United States: Now therefore

Be it enacted:

SECTION 1. That on the 1st day of January, 1913, a reduction of 10 per cent shall be made in the duties now imposed by law on articles imported into the United States from foreign countries, and that on the 1st day of January of each year thereafter for the period of four years a further reduction of 5 per cent shall be made on such duties until a total reduction of 30 per cent in such duties shall be made: Provided, however, That such reductions shall not apply to duties on articles which have been specifically fixed by law at this session of Congress or shall be hereafter specifically fixed by law: And provided further, That such reduction shall not apply to duties on articles the importations of which during the previous fiscal year have equaled one-tenth of the production of similar articles and products in the United States.

SEC. 2. That the ascertainment of the facts upon which the foregoing provisions shall take effect shall be made by a tariff commission consisting of five members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of whom no more than three shall belong to the same party; that the terms of the commissioners shall be one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively; and that the President, in appointing such commissioners, shall designate the term of each; that at the expiration of such terms the term of each successor shall be for the period of five years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the proposed amendment referred to the Committee on Finance?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will take action in regard to that later on. Let the proposed amendment lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the proposed amendment will lie on the table for the present.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. SMOOT. I submit a conference report and ask that it be considered immediately.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3367) to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to homesteads, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: On page 2, line 7, of the House amendment, strike out the word "any" and insert in lieu thereof the word "that."

Amendment numbered 2: On page 2 of the House amendment strike out the following words: "That the entryman may be absent from the land for not more than five months in each period of one year after establishing residence," and in lieu of the words stricken out insert the following: "That upon filing in the local land office notice of the beginning of such absence, the entryman shall be entitled to a continuous leave of absence from the land for a period not exceeding five months in each year after establishing residence, and upon the termination of such absence the entryman shall file a notice of such termination in the local land office."

Amendment numbered 3: After the word "shown," on page 2, line 12, of the House amendment, strike out the semicolon and insert a comma and the following: "and the person commuting must be at the time a citizen of the United States."

Amendment numbered 4: On page 2 of the House amendment, at the end of section 2291, insert the following: "Provided further, That the entryman shall, in order to comply with the requirements of cultivation herein provided for, cultivate not less than one-sixteenth of the area of his entry, beginning with the second year of the entry, and not less than one-eighth, beginning with the third year of the entry, and until final proof, except that in the case of entries under section 6 of the enlarged-homestead laws double the area of cultivation herein provided shall be required, but the Secretary of the Interior may, upon a satisfactory showing, under rules and regulations prescribed by him, reduce the required area of cultivation: Provided, That the above provision as to cultivation shall not apply to entries under the act of April 28, 1904, commonly known as the Kinkaid Act, or entries under the act of June 17, 1902, commonly known as the reclamation act, and that the provisions of this section relative to the homestead period shall apply to all unperfected entries as well as entries hereafter made upon which residence is required: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall, within 60 days after the passage of this act, send a copy of the same to each homestead entryman of record who may be affected thereby, by ordinary mail to his last known address, and any such entryman may, by giving notice within 120 days after the passage of this act, by registered letter to the register and receiver of the local land office, elect to make proof upon his entry under the law under which the same was made without regard to the provisions of this act."

That the House agree to the same.

REED SMOOT,
W. L. JONES,
FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
SCOTT FERRIS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
FRANK W. MONDELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the conference report be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the conference report will be printed and lie over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if he would not allow us to consider the report to-day?

Mr. HEYBURN. If I had time to see how much new legislation is in the bill as reported by the conferees that was not in it when it was before our committee, I would be ready to consider the bill to-day. I have no desire to delay it; but, of course, I have not had time to read the report. There are certain provisions in it that are very radical. I merely want to look at the report, and that is only a fair request.

Mr. SMOOT. I had hoped, Mr. President, that we could have the matter considered and disposed of to-day.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know; I do not quarrel with that sentiment of getting things through, but I have some responsibility; I served on the committee which reported the bill, and I want to know how much change has been made in it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement regarding this report. The bill has been in conference for two months. The original bill was passed in the Senate; it went to the House, where a new bill was substituted for it. The debate in the House showed that they expected the conferees to fully consider the question of reservations embraced in the conservation policy relating to minerals, timber, and water power. The Secretary of the Interior was desirous that these reservations should be put into the bill. I was in sympathy with the Secretary of the Interior in that contention. It was the contention over that question which kept the bill so long in conference. The House conferees refused to make these reservations, contending that they should be considered in a separate bill, and at the last moment I have yielded and signed the report, because I am unwilling to withhold from the homesteaders of the country the relief to which I think they are entitled.

I favored a reduction of the period of residence from five years to three years; I favored the allowance to homesteaders of a period of absence of five months, during which they could pursue vocations that would enable them to obtain a livelihood; but I was desirous of opening up the entire surface of the public domain to homestead entries, with certain reservations from the grant as to timber, water power, and minerals, so that the entrymen would be free from vexatious investigations and inquiries regarding the character of their land, compelling the investigation of numerous special agents and delay in the ripening of their titles. I wished not only to protect the homesteader in securing for him a wider range of entry upon public lands, but I also wished to protect the future homesteader from the monopolization of the public domain likely to result from the enactment of a law which would be used for purposes of evasion and not for the purpose of settlement.

We all know that, under the existing misfit land laws of the United States, great monopolies have been created in the West in the shape of forests, ownership to the extent of a million acres having drifted into the hands of one firm, and also in coal, iron, and water power. The conservation movement was designed to protect these natural resources in land, in water, in minerals, and in timber from spoliation and monopoly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state to the Senator that I would be glad to yield, and to-morrow I will——

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not desire the Senator to yield that I may speak upon this report. I desire to withdraw my objection to the present consideration of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further objection to the present consideration of the report? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to go on with my statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was stating that the purpose of this conservation movement was to protect the natural resources in land, in water, in minerals, and in forests from spoliation and from monopoly, and to offer that protection in the interest of the real homeseeker and homesteader; and, so far as I am concerned, I am unwilling to cease my efforts in that direction until this purpose is fully accomplished by law.

Reference frequently is made, Mr. President, to the Canadian law as a more liberal land law for the homesteader than that on the statute books of the United States. With regard to that I have to say that whilst the Canadian land laws are liberal they absolutely exempt from the grant to the homesteader the water power, the minerals, and the timber; and the Secretary of the Interior, whilst in favor of liberalizing our land laws and our homestead laws so far as residence and absence from actual occupation are concerned, and patterning them after the Canadian land laws in that direction, was simply desirous that the restrictions upon the grant imposed by the Canadian land laws should be inserted in our law. I regarded that as a reasonable suggestion, and I contended through long weeks of discussion upon this subject in favor of making such a reservation.

Mr. President, the home seeker is interested only in securing the surface of the land; that is all he wants for a home; that is all he wants for cultivation. The possible minerals in the shape of coal and iron that may be beneath the surface are of no concern to him, nor is he engaged in entering upon land for the purpose of creating water power or of engaging in the lumber business. He wishes land simply for cultivation and for a home. The solicitude which has been shown for the home seeker in this effort to withhold from the grant these resources is, in many cases, a hypocritical solicitude, a solicitude ostensibly urged in the interest of the home seeker and the homesteader, but really asserted in the interest of the concentration of these natural resources, the monopoly of these natural resources, and the exploitation of these natural resources by the great combinations of the country. It arises from the deadly hostility to the declared policy of both parties that the natural resources of the country should be protected from monopoly.

Mr. President, whilst I have been desirous that the grant should be restricted so far as the natural resources are concerned, I have not been in favor of a great national landlordship, of concentrating the administration of the public domain in Washington for all time. Legislation upon that subject will come hereafter when we have settled the crucial question as to whether these natural resources shall be retained for the benefit of all the people or whether they shall be turned over to monopoly. That question will then be discussed and disposed of in a manner satisfactory to the people of the Western States.

The Nation has always dealt fairly with the people of the West. The Nation has never regarded itself as the owner of these lands in the sense that they constitute a national asset. The Nation has always regarded itself as the trustee of these great natural resources, holding that trusteeship for the interest of the settlers of the West, both those who are there now and those who are to come, and it will, doubtless, when the beneficiaries show by their laws that they also propose to protect the people's rights, that they also intend to guard these natural resources against combination and monopoly—the Nation will doubtless turn them over to the States under some restrictions that will require a fair discharge of the trust by the States, substituted for the Nation as the trustee for the people of the States.

I am aware that the West is restive under present conditions; that it does not like this espionage of officials two or three thousand miles away; that it resents the presence of special agents, who are charged by the national laws which we have enacted with responsibility regarding the classification of these lands; that they do not like the idea of national landlordism, of the payment of royalties upon timber and coal and iron. That can be easily obviated if we will simply turn over to the States the royalties collected by the Nation, with the intention later on of turning over the entire control of these great resources to the States as soon as by their laws they show that they are strong enough to maintain their trusts; but no one will contend, at all events I will not contend, that States in a condition of infancy possess the strength to resist the great exploiting combinations which have sought to control the legislation of the country and the administration of the country, and which will find the States weaker agencies in their hands.

So, Mr. President, my contention involves nothing but loyalty to the West, nothing but loyalty to the people of the West, nothing but loyalty to the States of the West. My contention involves the protection and preservation of these great natural resources for all the people of the West, and it is against the policy which will permit them gradually to drift, as they have in the past been drifting until checked by the conservation policy, into the hands of combinations and monopolies.

Mr. President, I should like to speak more at length upon this subject, but I know that other matters are pressing, and I shall simply content myself with asking the privilege of inserting in the RECORD my letter to the conferees upon this subject and certain other letters and documents relating to the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Without objection, the request of the Senator from Nevada is granted.

Some of the letters and papers referred to are as follows. The rest will be printed hereafter:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 3, 1912.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: By direction of Secretary Fisher I inclose herewith a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office addressed to the Secretary, quoting the exact wording of the Canadian statutes upon which the "three-year homestead law" of that country is based.

The provisions quoted are from the Canadian Dominion Lands Act, and there is also attached to the letter a copy of the report of the American consul general at Vancouver, British Columbia, on the subject of "Homesteading Regulations for the Province of British Columbia." There is also inclosed a copy of a memorandum furnished by Senator JONES in connection with the proposed three-year homestead law.

Yours, very truly,

H. A. MEYER,
Private Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, April 30, 1912.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: In department letter of February 15, 1912, to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the House of Representatives, which was in the nature of a supplemental report on H. R. 17246 and S. 3307, being the proposed "Three-year homestead law," it was suggested that if such a law was enacted that it should embody, in addition to the liberal provisions modeled upon the Canadian Dominion Lands Act, the provisions and restrictions of that law, and these restrictions were specified.

In order that the exact wording of the provisions referred to, contained in 7-8 Edward VII, chapter 20, entitled, "An act to consolidate and amend the acts respecting the public lands of the Dominion," assented to July 20, 1908, may be presented, I set forth the same in full, numbering each to correspond with the numbering used in the different paragraphs of said letter of February 15:

"(1) All unoccupied surveyed agricultural lands to which this act applies that are not reserved or that have not been disposed of shall be open to entry for homestead: Provided, That no entry for a homestead shall convey any right to salt, coal, petroleum, natural gas, gold, silver, copper, iron, or other minerals within or under the land covered by the entry, or any exclusive or other property or interest in, or any exclusive right or privilege with respect to any lake, river, spring, stream, or other body of water within or bordering on or passing through the land covered by the entry. (Sec. 8, p. 3, the Dominion lands act.)

"(2) The minister may, if he deems it necessary, require the holder of a homestead entry to furnish proof by declaration or otherwise that he is duly performing his homestead duties in each year subsequent to the date of his entry. (Par. 2, sec. 13, p. 7.)

"(3) If an entrant for a homestead fails in any year to fulfill the requirements of this act in respect to homesteads, or the requirements of the laws in force in respect thereto when the entry was obtained, the minister may cancel the entry and all rights of the entrant in virtue thereof shall thereupon cease and determine: Provided, That any subsequent entrant for the same land may be required by the minister to pay in cash reasonable compensation for the improvements, if any, of the person whose entry is canceled, and that the minister may, in his discretion, pay to the latter the amount of such compensation, in whole or in part. (Par. 2, sec. 15, p. 7.)

"(4) If entry is obtained for land which, though not reserved at the time, is ascertained to be valuable on account of merchantable timber upon it, the minister may, within six months of its date, cancel the entry. (Par. 4, sec. 15, p. 8.)

"(5) If, after entry is obtained, it is ascertained that the land entered for, or any portion thereof, is necessary for the protection of any water supply, or for the location or construction of any works necessary to the development of any water power, or for the purposes of any harbor or landing, the minister may, at any time before the issue of letters patent, cancel the entry or withdraw from its application any portion of the land entered for, but where the land is required for the location or construction of works necessary to the development of any water power, only in so far as the land is necessary for that purpose. (Par. 6, sec. 15, p. 8.)

"(6) Everyone is guilty of an indictable offense and liable to two years' imprisonment who buys, trades, or sells, or professes to buy, trade, or sell, land or any interest in or control of land open to homestead entry, or for which homestead entry has been granted, before patent therefor has been issued. (Par. 9, sec. 15, p. 8.)

"(7) Every entrant for a homestead shall, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, be required, before the issue of letters patent therefor, (a) to have held the homestead for his own exclusive use and benefit for three years from the date of entry; (b) to have resided thereon at least six months in each of three years from the date of entry or the date of commencement of residence; (c) to have erected a habitable house thereon; (d) to have cultivated such an area of land in each year upon the homestead as is satisfactory to the minister; and (e) to be a British subject. (Sec. 16, p. 8.)

"(8) Proof under this section shall be in the form of a sworn statement by the applicant, corroborated by the sworn statements of two disinterested parties resident in the vicinity, which statements shall be made before the local agent, or the officer acting for him, or such other person as is thereunto authorized by the minister: Provided, That on any application for letters patent by the legal representative of the entrant, or by his assignee, or by the guardian or committee of an entrant who has become insane or mentally incapable, or by a person who in the event of such an insane entrant's death would be his legal representative, the minister may receive proof of the facts in such manner as he sees fit to require, and, upon being satisfied that the claim has been proved, may allow the claim and cause letters patent to issue accordingly. (Par. 2, sec. 23, p. 11.)

"(9) Any person who receives consideration for abandoning a homestead, or who pays consideration for such abandonment, shall forfeit the right of homestead entry at the minister's discretion." (Par. 2, sec. 31, p. 17.)

The statement in the last paragraph of the letter of February 15, 1912, as to the requirements as to residence and the amount of land entenable in the Province of British Columbia is taken from a report dated Vancouver, B. C., August 29, 1910, made by the American consul general to the Secretary of State, on the subject of "Homesteading regulations for the Province of British Columbia." A copy of this is inclosed for your information.

Very respectfully,

FRED DENNETT, Commissioner.

OFFICE OF THE AMERICAN CONSULATE GENERAL,
Vancouver, B. C., Canada, August 29, 1910.

Subject: "Homesteading regulations for the Province of British Columbia."

SIR: I have the honor to quote below the homesteading regulations of British Columbia promulgated by the Dominion Government covering the homesteading of lands in the railway belt in this province:

"Regulations for the administration and disposal of Dominion lands in the railway belt of British Columbia have been passed by the governor in council.

"The belt is divided by the regulations into five main divisions dominated by the topography of the country, comprising, from east to west, upper Columbia division, lower Columbia division, Shuswap division, Kamloops division, and coast division.

"The regulations provide for the classification of the lands remaining undisposed of according to their character, location, and altitude. Considerable divergence in climate, timber, and soil conditions exists in the different divisions of the belt.

"In each division the disposal of lands will be in accordance with conditions prevailing therein. In the coast division the settler will be entitled to enter for 40 acres of bench lands as a homestead and preemption. If the settler is prepared to cultivate a larger area than is required in connection with a half legal subdivision entered as a homestead, he is permitted to preempt the adjoining 20 acres in the legal subdivision.

"The same provisions will apply to bench lands in the lower Columbia division and the Shuswap division. It is required in this case that the settler should clear a total of 10 acres and cultivate a total of 6 acres before patent, and double that amount if preemption is also taken.

"In the upper Columbia division, on account of the very high altitude of the lands and the character of the country, the area of the homestead is fixed at 40 acres, with preemption privilege on any adjoining 40 acres, and the area to be cultivated is slightly more. In the Kamloops division the area of homesteads is fixed at 160 acres, or a quarter section.

"The lands are divided into flooded lands, bench lands, and uplands. Flooded lands are lands subject to overflow at high water and are largely valuable for hay purposes, and will be administered as such; and where not reserved for hay by settlers will be disposed of only on lease.

"Uplands are lands which are for the most part at too great an elevation to admit of the successful cultivation of fruit. They may be disposed of as homesteads of one quarter section each, excepting in the lower Columbia division, where, on account of special conditions obtaining in that valley, they will be open as homesteads and preemptions in areas of 40 acres each. Uplands may also be leased to actual settlers for grazing purposes in areas of one quarter section each.

"Bench lands are deemed to include bottom lands not subject to overflow and vary in altitude in different divisions. In the upper Columbia division they comprise lands below 1,000 feet above the Columbia River, in the lower Columbia below 800 feet above the Columbia, in the Shuswap division below 1,200 feet above the Shuswap Lake, in the coast division below 2,500 feet above sea level. Above these altitudes all land is classified as upland.

"The terms of residence in all divisions for entries granted under the new regulations is fixed at five years and a residence of at least six months is required in each year.

"Provision is made for a conditional purchase entry in the case of bench lands in all divisions excepting the Kamloops division. The conditional purchase entry will be permitted for an entry of 20 acres in each of the other divisions except the upper Columbia, where the area will be 40 acres.

"Residence is not required except for six months during the fifth year after the date of entry, but the entrant is required to clear and cultivate the land each year for five years from the date of entry at a greater rate than is required for homestead and to pay for land at the rate of $10 per acre in five installments. The conditional purchase privilege and preemption privilege do not apply to the Kamloops division nor to the uplands in other divisions, where entry of 160 acres is permitted. The price of preemptions is $5 per acre, payable in five yearly installments, additional residence not required.

"Entry on land remaining in timber berths will not be permitted.

"Timberlands which are not in timber berths are defined. While the area of homesteads, preemptions, and conditional purchases is limited, as above stated, to 20 or 40 acres, as the case may be, it is not proposed to limit the right of any one person to acquire a total area of 160 acres, but only to limit his right to acquire more than he can cultivate at one time under ordinary conditions. Thus, after an entrant has secured patents for land first entered for, he may make another entry, and so on, until he has secured a total of 160 acres; but no person will be allowed to secure under homestead preemption or conditional purchase entry more than a total of 160 acres.

"The present regulations are the result of careful study by the department of the interior of conditions in the railway belt. The cultivatable land which may hereafter become available for settlement consists for the most part of bottom and bench lands rising from the large river and lake systems and constitute only a small fraction of the mountainous area. Such cultivatable lands are therefore very scarce and are very productive, and since the inauguration of the fruit industry in British Columbia they have attained high values. Twenty acres of such land properly cultivated will yield larger returns than a quarter section of prairie land, and there is similarly proportionate difference in the cost of preparing it for crop.

"It has therefore become apparent to the department that the homestead law which is suitable for the settling up of the prairie country is not adapted to conditions such as obtain in the railway belt of British Columbia, and that the successful development and settlement of respective districts in proportion to their productive capacities can only be effected by applying a homestead law such as the new regulations provide."

Respectfully submitted.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

GEO. N. WEST,
American Consul General.

The honorable SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, D. C.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 22, 1912.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As requested by you, I have examined the basis of agreement on the pending three-year homestead bill (S. 3367), which has been suggested by the House conferees in a communication to the conferees on the part of the Senate, and I return the same herewith.

I have already expressed very fully to you and to the other members of the conference committee the reasons why the first and third suggestions of the House conferees should not be adopted. I assume from what you and Congressman TAYLOR tell me, and also from the present communication from the House conferees, that the second suggestion made in this communication offers in substance the basis upon which alone there is any prospect of agreement. I regret very much the definite refusal to adopt the proposed amendments with regard to the reservation of minerals and of tracts necessary for future development of water power and reservoir sites. I believe that these amendments would enable us to establish more liberal rules for the benefit of the genuine homesteader, to reduce materially the work of the special agents, and to expedite the work of passing upon claims and issuing patents. I believe that you concur substantially in the reasons I have urged for inserting provisions upon these subjects for the protection of public rights, and also in the opinion that they are directly in the interests of the Western States and of the homesteaders themselves.

If, however, the House conferees compel the continuance of the system heretofore prevailing, under which the mineral or nonmineral character of the land must be determined as a question of fact at the time of patent, and lands suitable for water power or reservoir sites must be withdrawn from homestead entry, it becomes the more important to have the provisions with respect to residence and cultivation such as to remove as far as possible the temptation to acquire mineral lands and water power or reservoir sites under the homestead law. The purpose of the homestead law is to encourage and promote the actual settlement and agricultural development of those portions of the public domain that are suitable for homes. The real homesteader is the home maker. His object is not to acquire timber or minerals or water power. He intends to live upon the land and to cultivate it. Reasonable requirements as to residence and cultivation are therefore no obstacle to him. They protect him against those who seek to acquire the land to sell and not to settle. The requirements which the law imposes upon him should be such, and only such, as can readily be complied with by the genuine homesteader and with which it is to the real interest of the genuine homesteader to comply. It is not to his interest to make the provisions of the law so lenient that the public lands may be acquired by those who do not wish to utilize and develop them, but to sell them at a profit to real settlers like himself, who really desire them for homes for themselves. Such a profit represents merely an added burden which the real settler must carry. It is for this reason, and for this reason alone, that I have urged the amendments to the pending bill. You will find the exact language of the Canadian statutes in a communication from this department, which has been printed as Senate Document No. 644. I believe that the provision of the Canadian law requiring proof of annual cultivation to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior would give greater flexibility to administration and would enable the Secretary to fit the law to the facts in each case under general regulations which he could prescribe.

If a limit is to be fixed in the statute I prefer a maximum limit of one-quarter, with power to accept less under general administrative regulations. I recognize, however, that the present suggestion of the House conferees permits a certain degree of flexibility in providing that the entryman shall "cultivate not less than one-sixteenth of the area of his entry beginning with the second year of the entry, and not less than one-eighth beginning with the third year of the entry," with a provision reducing this requirement upon a showing satisfactory to the Secretary. I assume that the effect of those provisions and of the words "not less than" would be to establish the requirement of one-sixteenth and one-eighth, respectively, as the general rule, and that to justify a different requirement exceptional circumstances would have to be shown, but could be shown. I believe the department can work out feasible regulations with respect to cultivation under such a statute. In view, however, of the fact that the provision is extended to apply to entries under the enlarged homestead laws, the character of the cultivation required should be made to conform to the language used in the enlarged homestead act, so that after the word "cultivate," in the fourth line of the suggested proviso, there should be inserted the words "to agricultural crops other than native grasses." Indeed, this language should be inserted in any event so as to make certain that such cultivation as is required includes seeding as well as plowing and excludes mere summer fallowing.

After the words "beginning with the third year of the entry" there should be inserted the words "and until final proof." If we are to reduce the period of residence and the period and extent of cultivation generally required the entryman should continue to cultivate whatever is in fact required of him until he makes his final proof. Otherwise we will be in the position of having only a single season's cultivation of any substantial part of the entry. No bona fide entryman can possibly object to such a requirement, but, on the other hand, it would constitute a real obstacle to the perversion of the law.

I suggest also that it might be well to insert after the words "upon a satisfactory showing," toward the end of the suggested proviso, the words "and under regulations prescribed by him," so that it may be clear that regulations are to be issued under which the entryman may know in advance at least the general rules upon which modifications of the cultivation requirements would be made.

I wish also to call your attention to the fact that in the copy of the bill printed for the use of the Senate Committee on Public Lands, showing proposed changes by the House, there has been an important change from the existing law, in line 7, on page 2, where the word "any" has been substituted for the word "that." The present law reads, "if at that time citizens of the United States shall be entitled to a patent"; the bill reads, "if at any time citizens of the United States shall be entitled to a patent."

In the bill introduced by Senator BORAH the word "that" is used. An examination of the proceedings of the Senate on February 5, when the bill passed, fails to disclose any motion substituting the word "any." Nevertheless, the bill as printed in the House of Representatives, as coming from the Senate and referred to the House Committee on the Public Lands, shows the change from "that" to "any," and this appears to have remained in the bill ever since. I have no means of ascertaining how it got there. It would tend to encourage the very thing of which bitter complaint is being made, namely, the exodus of American farmers to Canada, for under the bill as it now reads a homesteader in this country could remove to Canada at any time after the three-year period of residence, and upon completing his final proof could foreswear his allegiance to this country, become a citizen of Canada, and at the same time obtain a patent in the United States, where he might avoid the payment of taxes upon his land until he applied for and received his patent.

The further proviso which is suggested by the House conferees to give the entryman of an unperfected entry the full period now allowed by law within which to make final proof seems to me open to serious objection from the point of view of those who are interested in local taxation. Much complaint has reached the department with regard to settlers who postpone making proof upon their entries so as to avoid taxation. The suggested proviso would enable an entryman who had made his entry during the current year to perfect it within the next two years, and yet he would be allowed to wait until the expiration of seven years before making final proof, during all of which period the land would not be taxable. Would it not be well to permit the entryman under entries pending at the time of the passage of the act to elect whether to make proof under the new or the old law, but to require him to perfect his entry within not more than five years from the date of the entry if he elects to act under the new law?

With regard to the further suggestion as to the five months' absence, I believe the language suggested by the House conferees is an improvement upon that now in the bill, and I wish to call your attention to the fact that the proponents of this bill in the Senate—Senators JONES and BORAH—have expressed their willingness to reduce the period to four months instead of five.

I think the Senate conferees should accept the proposal of the House conferees to agree to the amendment providing that no patent shall issue to any subdivision of land more valuable for the timber it contains than for agricultural purposes.

The amendment, however, should read "no entry shall be made on nor shall any patent issue to any subdivision of land more valuable for the timber it contains than for agricultural purposes." The mere prohibition of the patent might encourage entries for the sake of cutting timber, and thus perpetuate the very evil which the amendment is chiefly intended to prevent.

Contrary to representations that are frequently made, the general homestead law continues to be of the greatest importance, and immense areas of the public domain are being acquired under its provisions. The Commissioner of the General Land Office informs me that during the last fiscal year there were 44,360 original entries made under this law, not including those under reclamation projects or those under the enlarged homestead act or the Kinkaid Act.

Respectfully, yours,

WALTER L. FISHER, Secretary.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to give notice that to-morrow, immediately following the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to consider and dispose of the bill (S. 6964) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to make certain provisions for the care of the participants in the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, at Gettysburg, Pa., on the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th days of July, 1913, and making appropriation of a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this bill.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9061) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or for any Territory or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] both gave notice some time ago that they would speak this morning. They can hardly be expected to speak on this bill.

Mr. BORAH. I observe that the Senator from Michigan is not present, and I had not noticed that the Senator from Maryland was. If the Senator from Maryland desires to proceed, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to see this bill proceeded with. Although the Senator from Michigan is not present, I am ready to go ahead. I will not take over half an hour or 25 minutes of the time of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Under the circumstances I shall not press the motion.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator from Michigan, the chairman of the subcommittee, is not present.

Mr. LODGE. I have been informed that he will be here in a few moments.

Mr. RAYNER. Shall I go ahead or wait for the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SWANSON. No; go ahead.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho withdraws the request, and the Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. RAYNER. I will proceed, but if the Senator from Michigan comes in, I will stop and let him go along. He is chairman of the subcommittee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Michigan has been sent for, and probably will be here very soon.

Mr. NELSON. I observe on the calendar of to-day that a notice has been given by "Mr. SMITH of Michigan, that on Tuesday, May 28, 1912, immediately after the morning business is disposed of, the subcommittee, appointed to investigate the causes leading up to the disaster of the steamship Titanic, will make its report, preceding which he would address the Senate thereon."

What I desire to say is that the subcommittee made its report to the full committee, and the report expected to be presented to-day is the report of the Committee on Commerce and not of the subcommittee.

Mr. BORAH. What is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Nothing is before the Senate.

Mr. RAYNER. I shall proceed with the understanding that when the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] comes in he may proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is the report of the committee before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report has not been submitted, the Chair will state to the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest we should have the report read. We could then more readily apply the Senator's remarks to it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum. That will consume some time.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH, MINN.

Mr. NELSON. In order to give the Senator from Michigan time to appear, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bridge bill. It is the bill (H. R. 23634) to authorize the village of Oslo, in the county of Marshall, in the State of Minnesota, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON ALASKA COAL LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5800) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the matter go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WAYNESVILLE, N. C.

Mr. OVERMAN. While we are waiting, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 6459) for the erection of a public building at Waynesville, N. C.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "exceed," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected, on a lot now owned by the Government of the United States at Waynesville, N. C., a suitable building to accommodate the needs of the United States post office at that place, and for other purposes, at a total cost not to exceed $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

LOSS OF STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I had expected to send to the Clerk's desk this morning the unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce. For the purpose of verifying some figures it will be delayed a few moments. I shall not detain the Senate, but will proceed with my address.

Mr. President, my associates and myself return the commission handed to us on the 18th day of April last, directing an immediate inquiry into "the causes leading up to the destruction of the steamship Titanic, with its attendant and unparalleled loss of life, so shocking to the people of the world." Mindful of the responsibility of our office, we desire the Senate to know that in the execution of its command we have been guided solely by the public interest and a desire to meet the expectations of our associates without bias, prejudice, sensationalism, or slander of the living or dead. That duty, we believed, would be best performed by an exact ascertainment of the true state of affairs.

Our course was simple and plain—to gather the facts relating to this disaster while they were still vivid realities. Questions of diverse citizenship gave way to the universal desire for the simple truth. It was of paramount importance that we should act quickly to avoid jurisdictional confusion and organized opposition at home or abroad. We, of course, recognized that the ship was under a foreign flag; but the lives of many of our own countrymen had been sacrificed and the safety of many had been put in grave peril, and it was vital that the entire matter should be reviewed before an American tribunal if legislative action was to be taken for future guidance. Therefore, we determined that the testimony of British officers and crew and English passengers temporarily in the United States should be first obtained. We deemed it important to have the surviving officers and sailors of this ship meet the passengers of all classes before our committee. Without any pretension to experience or special knowledge of nautical affairs, nevertheless I am of the opinion that very few important facts which were susceptible of being known escaped our scrutiny. Energy is often more desirable than learning, and the inquisition serves a useful purpose to the State.

We went to the side of the hospital ship with purpose and pity and saw the almost lifeless survivors in their garments of woe—joy and sorrow so intermingled that it was difficult to discern light from shadow, and the sad scene was only varied by the cry of reunited loved ones whose mutual grief was written in the language of creation.

At 10 o'clock on that fateful Sunday evening this latest maritime creation was cutting its first pathway through the North Atlantic Ocean with scarcely a ripple to retard its progress.

From the builders' hands she was plunged straightway to her fate and christening salvos acclaimed at once her birth and death. Builders of renown had launched her on the billows with confident assurance of her strength, while every port rang with praise for their achievement; shipbuilding to them was both a science and a religion; parent ships and sister ships had easily withstood the waves, while the mark of their hammer was all that was needed to give assurance of the high quality of the work. In the construction of the Titanic no limit of cost circumscribed their endeavor and when this vessel took its place at the head of the line every modern improvement in shipbuilding was supposed to have been realized; so confident were they that both owner and builder were eager to go upon the trial trip; no sufficient tests were made of boilers or bulkheads or gearing or equipment and no life-saving or signal devices were reviewed; officers and crew were strangers to one another and passengers to both; neither was familiar with the vessel or its implements or tools; no drill or station practice or helpful discipline disturbed the tranquillity of that voyage, and when the crisis came a state of absolute unpreparedness stupefied both passengers and crew and, in their despair, the ship went down, carrying as needless a sacrifice of noble women and brave men as ever clustered about the Judgment Seat in any single moment of passing time.

We shall leave to the honest judgment of England its painstaking chastisement of the British Board of Trade, to whose laxity of regulation and hasty inspection the world is largely indebted for this awful fatality. Of contributing causes there were very many. In the face of warning signals, speed was increased and messages of danger seemed to stimulate her to action rather than to persuade her to fear.

At noon on that fatal Sunday the steamship Baltic warned her of ice within 5 miles of her track and near the place where the accident occurred; at 5 o'clock in the afternoon and again, an hour before the accident, when but a few miles away, the steamship Californian signaled the Titanic to beware of danger, which her operator curtly acknowledged; the same evening the Titanic transmitted to the Hydrographic Office in Washington a message from the steamship Amerika, saying she had passed "two large icebergs" near the track of the ill-fated ship. In the face of these warnings, each revolution of her engines marked at the moment of the collision her highest speed of 24½ miles per hour.

The Titanic rushed onward on her true course—one recognized as appropriate and agreed upon by mariners as the international highway for westbound vessels, yet dangerous at this season of the year, when the Labrador current may be bearing vast masses of ice across the track of ships. Scores of these towering glaciers planted themselves in the very pathway of this ship and were so large and so numerous that, in the absence of fog, they should have been easily discernible by the lookout, who says in his testimony that if he had been supplied with glasses, such as he had been accustomed to on the Oceanic and on this vessel, between Belfast and Southampton, but which were denied him by Second Officer Lightoller between Southampton and the place of this accident, he could have seen the iceberg with which this ship collided "soon enough to get out of the way." One of these icebergs was nearly 200 feet above the level of the sea, with seven-eighths of its ponderous bulk hidden beneath the surface. They are composed of ice and earth and rock, and old sailors of the coast of Newfoundland usually give them a wide berth. Land has been formed by these deposits, and icebergs have frequently grounded in 20 fathoms of water with protruding spires more than a hundred feet in height. As they go southward their journey is slow and erratic, and the influence of spring often causes explosions in the ice, which frequently serve to warn sailors of danger; sometimes the drift of field ice, led by a great berg, has been known to convoy schooners in a calm, while shipwrecked sailors have drifted hundreds of miles in safety upon the irregular surface of the ice. Skillful seamanship finds little difficulty in avoiding these obstacles, and those most familiar with the North Atlantic are usually alert at this season of the year to avoid unnecessary peril.

Capt. Smith knew the sea and his clear eye and steady hand had often guided his ship through dangerous paths. For 40 years storms sought in vain to vex him or menace his craft. But once before in all his honorable career was his pride humbled or his vessel maimed. Each new advancing type of ship built by his company was handed over to him as a reward for faithful services and as an evidence of confidence in his skill. Strong of limb, intent of purpose, pure in character, dauntless as a sailor should be, he walked the deck of this majestic structure as master of her keel.

Titanic though she was, his indifference to danger was one of the direct and contributing causes of this unnecessary tragedy, while his own willingness to die was the expiating evidence of his fitness to live. Those of us who knew him well—not in anger, but in sorrow—file one specific charge against him: Overconfidence and neglect to heed the oft-repeated warnings of his friends. But in his horrible dismay, when his brain was afire with honest retribution, we can still see, in his manly bearing and his tender solicitude for the safety of women and little children, some traces of his lofty spirit when dark clouds lowered all about him and angry elements stripped him of his command. His devotion to his craft, even "as it writhed and twisted and struggled" for mastery over its foe, calmed the fears of many of the stricken multitude who hung upon his words, lending dignity to a parting scene as inspiring as it is beautiful to remember.

The mystery of his indifference to danger, when other and less pretentious vessels doubled their lookout or stopped their engines, finds no reasonable hypothesis in conjecture or speculation; science in shipbuilding was supposed to have attained perfection and to have spoken her last word; mastery of the ocean had at last been achieved; but overconfidence seems to have dulled the faculties usually so alert. With the atmosphere literally charged with warning signals and wireless messages registering their last appeal, the stokers in the engine room fed their fires with fresh fuel, registering in that dangerous place her fastest speed.

President Ismay testified: "My recollection is that between Southampton and Cherbourg we ran at 60 revolutions, from Cherbourg to Queenstown at 70 revolutions, and when we left Queenstown we were running at 72 revolutions, and I believe that the ship was worked up to 75 revolutions, or about 22 knots per hour, but I really have no accurate knowledge of that." And he again said, when asked if she was running at her maximum speed at the time she was making 75 revolutions: "No, sir; my understanding is, or I am told, that the engines were balanced and would run their best at 78 revolutions."

It has been said many times—often in my hearing and often by letter—that the last dinner which he had partaken in the café of his ship, given by Mr. and Mrs. Widener, of Philadelphia, might have had some influence upon the action of the captain, but I have the word of the hostess, whose husband was lost in this catastrophe, that at that dinner Capt. Smith touched no liquor of any kind; indeed, that he asked that all glasses be removed from his plate. I make this statement because I think it is due to the memory of the dead, whose habits of life are worthy the highest praise.

Last Saturday, in company with Admiral Watt, of the Navy, I visited the Olympic, a sister ship of the Titanic, just before she sailed from New York. Down deep in the bottom of that ship, 24 feet below the level of the sea, I found the head fireman of the Titanic, and there in the grease and the heat, by a dim light and surrounded by his companions, he swore that he was the first man to see the water come through the sides of the stricken ship. He said that the tear extended through the side of the forward fireroom, that the water came from a point about 20 feet below the sea level, and rushed like a mighty torrent into the ship.

We know from those who gave the order to construct the ship that the designer of the Titanic and Olympic, who was himself aboard the Titanic and did not survive, a young man but 30 years of age, designed the ship to carry safely two of her water-tight compartments full of water in case of accident, the presumption being that by collision but one bulkhead and at most two of her water-tight compartments would be injured, in which event, the water-tight doors being closed, the ship could carry this additional weight without serious danger.

By the supplementary testimony of this head fireman I am able to say that five compartments filled almost instantly. He also said that at the time the ship struck the iceberg the indicator in the fireroom displayed the letters "full speed," and that the ship had been running full speed during the entire afternoon and evening; that 24 of her boilers were lighted out of the 29, and at no other time on the voyage were so many boilers lighted; that when he received a bell signal he looked hastily to the indicator and found that the white light, "full speed," had been taken from the indicator and the red light, "stop," had been substituted in its place. Instantly the water-tight doors between the firerooms were closed, but the danger had been accomplished, the harm had been done, and through a space extending past four bulkheads a tear had been made in that steel bottom admitting more water than the ship was able to carry. The water came in with tremendous force, and within five minutes after she struck the ship listed about 5 degrees.

I then reached a conclusion which, in my opinion, accounts for the small proportion of steerage passengers who were saved. The occupants of the forward steerage were the first of the passengers to realize the danger. One or two witnesses said they stepped out of their berths into water probably an inch or two inches deep. Those in the forward steerage knew directly of the impact and of the presence of water, which came up from the lower part of the ship into the mail room and the forward steerage. Those steerage passengers went on deck and as fast as they were able took places in the lifeboats, while the after steerage, more than an eighth of a mile away, was by the operation of the added weight raised out of the water. That after steerage was a deck higher than the forward steerage, and was lifted higher and higher until the ship finally disappeared, so that these steerage passengers got their first warning of real danger as the angle of the deck became very great. I feel that the small number of steerage survivors was thus due to the fact that they got no definite warning before the ship was really doomed, when most of the lifeboats had departed.

At 12.55 Sunday afternoon, answering the warning of Capt. Ranson, of the steamship Baltic, at whose christening he had taken such a proud part, and on whose bridge he had so often braved the perils of the Atlantic, Capt. Smith only replied, "Thanks for your message and good wishes. Had fine weather since leaving." The soft warmth from the Gulf Stream, through which they had passed during the day, gave way at night to chill and cold; the air and water registered their lowest point an hour before the collision. The warnings of shipmasters fell upon deaf ears and officers and crew seemed to have regarded the paper bulletins of danger with absolute indifference and, as if to stir their laggard spirits, nature gave a warning of approaching peril so significant that passengers in stateroom and steerage shut out the chill and spoke to one another of the sudden cold. Sailors off the Grand Banks know the importance of the thermometer, which is almost as necessary to their safety as is the compass. Even the quartermaster, Hichens, who regularly took the temperature of the water from the sea, says, "It suddenly became bitter cold," and added that the first order received by him from Second Officer Lightoller at 8 o'clock Sunday evening was "to take his compliments down to the ship's carpenter and inform him to look to his fresh water; that it was about to freeze," and he says he was also directed by the same officer to find the deck engineer and bring him the key to open the heaters in the corridor and officers' quarters, wheelhouse, and chart room on account of the intense cold. He also said he took the temperature of the air and water just before he went to the wheel, at 8 o'clock, and that the bucket, with which he dipped the water to make the tests "was a small paint tin," an old one, only improvised for the occasion; that the new one, a long piece of leather, leaded, was not furnished him; while Mrs. Walter Douglas, of Minneapolis, asserts under oath that both she and her husband, who went down with the ship, saw the quartermaster Saturday afternoon attempt to reach the water with this bucket and says that he was unable to do so and that both she and Mr. Douglas saw him fill the bucket from a hydrant on the deck and take that water to be tested.

Hichens then said:

> At 10 o'clock I went to the wheel. * * * All went along very well until 20 minutes to 12, when three gongs came from the lookout, and immediately afterwards a report on the telephone, "Iceberg right ahead." The chief officer rushed from the wing to the bridge. * * * He rushed to the engines. I heard the telegraph bell ring; also give the order, "Hard astarboard." Repeated the order, "Hard astarboard." "The helm is hard over, sir." * * * The captain * * * came back to the wheelhouse and looked at the commutator (clinometer) in front of the compass, which is a little instrument like a clock to tell you how the ship is listing. The ship had a list of 5° to the starboard * * * about 5 to 10 minutes after the impact.

At that moment the ice, resistless as steel, stole upon her and struck her in a vital spot, while the last command of the officer of the watch in his effort to avert disaster, distracted by the sudden appearance of extreme danger, sharply turned aside the prow, the part best prepared to resist collision, exposing the temple to the blow; at the turn of the bilge the steel encasement yielded to a glancing blow so slight that the impact was not felt in many parts of the ship, although representing an energy of more than a million foot tons, said to be the equivalent of the combined broadsides of 20 of the largest guns in our battleship fleet fired at the same moment, with a blow so deadly many of the passengers and crew did not even know of the collision until tardily advised of the danger by anxious friends, and even then official statements were clothed in such confident assurances of safety as to arouse no fear.

The awful force of the impact was well known to the master and builder, Mr. Andrews, who, from the first, must have known the ship was doomed and never uttered an encouraging sign to one another. Neither ever adjusted a life belt to himself. The builder, whose heart must have broken when he realized he had not prepared that ship to resist a blow so dangerous, seemed to have been quite willing to go down with the ship. There is evidence to show that no final warning was given by any officer. President Ismay asked the captain whether he thought the blow was serious. The captain only replied, "I think it is." Col. Astor, at the request of his wife and others who stood near him on the boat deck, was asked to make the same inquiry, and did; and to that inquiry the captain replied, "I think it is dangerous."

There is evidence tending to show that even the water-tight compartments were not successfully closed either above or below. No general alarm was given, no ship's officers formally assembled, no orderly routine was attempted or organized system of safety begun. Haphazard they rushed by one another on staircase and in hallway, while men of self-control gathered here and there about the decks, helplessly staring at one another or giving encouragement to those less courageous than themselves.

Life belts were finally adjusted to all. Only Saturday night I gathered from one who rescued the bodies brought in by the Mackay-Bennett ship that, while he found 190 bodies in one "pack," as they call it at sea, 62 miles from the place where the ship went down and within 500 yards of the iceberg which is supposed to have done the damage, all of these 190, with the exception of a little child 2 years of age, were well fitted with life belts, and it is the testimony of the surgeon who accompanied the ship that in the position in which he found them he is of the opinion that many of them lived at least four hours after they were thrown into the water, and were killed by the cold, and yet no relief came. The lifeboats were cleared away, and although strangely insufficient in number—and right here I want to say that my observations on the steamship Olympic on Saturday were most gratifying. I saw the voluntary double equipment of lifeboats. Where they had formerly carried 20 they now carry 42, leaving ample room for passengers who desire to use her decks for other purposes and affording better protection to passengers and crew.

The Titanic boats were only partially loaded and in all instances unprovided with compasses and only three of them had lamps. They were manned so badly that, in the absence of prompt relief, they would have fallen easy victims to the advancing ice floe, nearly 30 miles in width and rising 16 feet above the surface of the water. Their danger would have been as great as if they had remained on the deck of the broken hull, and if the sea had risen these toy targets, with over 700 exhausted people, would have been helplessly tossed about upon the waves without food or water. One witness swore that two of the three stewards in her boat admitted that they had never had an oar in their hands before and did not even know what the oarlock was for. The lifeboats were filled so indifferently and lowered so quickly that, according to the uncontradicted evidence, nearly 500 people were needlessly sacrificed to want of orderly discipline in loading the few that were provided. There were 1,324 passengers on the ship. The lifeboats would have easily cared for 1,176 and only contained 704, 12 of whom were taken into the boats from the water, while the weather conditions were favorable and the sea perfectly calm. And yet it is said by some well-meaning persons that the best discipline prevailed. If this is discipline, what would have been disorder?

Among the passengers were many strong men who had been accustomed to command, whose lives had marked every avenue of endeavor, and whose business experience and military training especially fitted them for such an emergency. These were rudely silenced and forbidden to speak, as was the president of this company, by junior officers, a few of whom, I regret to say, availed themselves of the first opportunity to leave the ship. Some of the men, to whom had been intrusted the care of passengers, never reported to their official stations, and quickly deserted the ship with a recklessness and indifference to the responsibilities of their positions as culpable and amazing as it is impossible to believe. And some of these men say that they "laid by" in their partially filled lifeboats and listened to the cries of distress "until the noise quieted down" and surveyed from a safe distance the unselfish men and women and faithful fellow officers and seamen, whose heroism lightens up this tragedy and recalls the noblest traditions of the sea.

Some things are dearer than life itself, and the refusal of Phillips and Bride, wireless operators, to desert their posts of duty, even after the water had mounted to the upper deck, because the captain had not given them permission to leave, is an example of faithfulness worthy of the highest praise, while the final exit of the Phillips boy from the ship and from the world was not so swift as to prevent him from pausing long enough to pass a cup of water to a fainting woman, who fell from her husband's arm into the operator's chair, as he was tardily fleeing from his wireless apparatus, where he had ticked off the last message from his ship and from his brain.

Even the electric signal of distress was only sent upon its unseen search for help after a delay of nearly 20 minutes, and its spark was arrested by an accident so providential as to excite wonder. In five minutes more the ill-paid operator on the Carpathia, who snatched this secret from the air, would have forgotten his perplexities in slumber, and no note would have been taken of the awful importance of the passing hour. Partially undressed, he had left the telephone receiver upon his head, and through it heard the call for help. On the instant the ship's course was changed and the captain replied: "We are coming to your relief." The elements of nature have chosen darkness as the most helpful medium of radiocommunication, and operators should be at their posts at that time of the voyage, ready to catch every unfavorable sign and to apprise officers and crew of dangers besetting the ship. Neither timber nor iron nor steel are impervious to its secrets; in its limitless quest no barrier seems insurmountable, and distance is annihilated as by the lightning's flash; schoolboys toy with its mysteries and catch its lessons from the housetops. Marconi, genius and gentleman, sitting in his office in the capital of the Argentine Republic, read, as in an open book, a wireless message direct from the coast of Ireland. When the world weeps together over a common loss, when nature moves in the same direction in all spheres, why should not the nations clear the sea of its conflicting idioms and wisely regulate this new servant of humanity? To that end wages must be increased in proportion to the responsibility assumed, and service, to be useful, must be made continuous night and day, while this new profession must rid itself of the spirit of venality, to which, in my opinion, the world is indebted for a systematic reign of silence concerning the details of this disaster, so apparent as to excite international concern, and should be discouraged.

It is no excuse that the apparatus on the Carpathia was antiquated; it easily caught the signal of distress and spoke with other ships nearly 200 miles away, both before and after the accident, while the operator says it was good for 250 miles. The steamship Californian was within easy reach of this ship for nearly four hours after all the facts were known to Operator Cottam. The captain of the Carpathia says he gave explicit directions that all official messages should be immediately sent through other ships, and messages of passengers should be given preference. According to "Jack" Binns, the inspector, the apparatus on the Californian was practically new and easily tuned to carry every detail of that calamity to the coast stations at Cape Sable and Cape Race, and should have done so. The course taken was singularly in accord with the reticence of the officials of the White Star Co., who knew at 2.30 Monday morning, through the steamship Virginian and their office in Montreal, what was supposed to have occurred. I recognize that this was not official and that they would insist upon confirmation because of their faith in the vessel, but it was the truth, nevertheless, and, according to their own admission, the information then given and which they battled against during all of that day, contained absolutely the entire story, and yet, at 7.51 Monday evening, a message from their own office, officially signed, contained the positive assurance of the safety of the passengers, was sent to a half-crazed father at Huntington, W. Va., nearly two hours after their admitted familiarity with the details of the disaster. Possibly this was an accident, and I know it is greatly deplored by the managing officer of that company. But it is little wonder that we have not been able to fix with definiteness the author of this falsehood.

It is not a pleasant duty to criticize the conduct or comment upon the shortcomings of others, but the plain truth should be told. Capt. Lord, of the steamship Californian, sailing from London to Boston, who stopped his ship in the same vicinity where the Titanic is supposed to have met with the accident, passed two large icebergs at 6.30 p. m. Sunday evening, April 14; at 7.15 he "passed one large iceberg and two more in sight to the southward." Because of ice he stopped his ship for the night in latitude 42° 5′ N., longitude 50° 7′ W., and at 10.50 (ship's time and 9.10 New York time) he sent a wireless message to the Titanic, telling them he was "stopped and surrounded by ice." The Titanic operator brusquely replied to "shut up," that he was "busy." Capt. Lord stated that "from the position we stopped in to the position in which the Titanic is supposed to have hit the iceberg was 19½ miles," and the course south, 16 west. I am of the opinion it was much nearer than the captain is willing to admit, and I base my judgment upon the scientific investigation of the Hydrographic Office of our Government. He says this was the last communication he had with the Titanic. He also says, "We doubled the lookout from the crew, put a man on the forecastle head—that is, right at the bow of the ship—and I was on the bridge myself with an officer" until half past 10, "which I would not have been under ordinary conditions." He thus admits extraordinary conditions, and that he received reports of icebergs, growlers, and field ice 42° north from 40° 50′ west from Capt. Barr, of the steamship Coronian, the day before, and also from the steamship Parisian on that Sunday, while the steamship New Amsterdam reported to him several days before that they had seen field ice "extending as far to the northeast as horizon is visible."

He also admits that the morning after this accident he "was practically surrounded by icebergs, the largest from 100 to 150 feet high and from 700 to 800 feet in width above the water." He admits that the officer on watch on the steamship Californian saw some signals and that when he (the captain) came off the bridge at half past 10 he said: "I pointed out to the officer that I thought I saw a light coming along, and it was a most peculiar light." He also said that he went below and told the engineer to keep the steam ready, saying that he saw these signals, and then said: "There is a steamer coming. Let us go to the wireless and see what the news is." He says he "met the operator coming" and said: "Do you know anything?" The operator replied: "The Titanic."

I call attention to the fact that the last communication with the Titanic was the one to which I have referred, which occurred at 10.50 ship time, or nearly an hour before the accident occurred.

And the captain said: "I gave him instructions to let the Titanic know," which he did, and found that it was the Titanic, although the captain said: "This is not the Titanic; there is no doubt about it." He then says: "She came and lay, at half past 11, alongside of us until, I suppose, a quarter past 1, within 4 miles of us. We could see everything on her quite distinctly; see her lights. We signaled her at half past 11, with the Morse lamp. She did not take the slightest notice of it. That was between half past 11 and 20 minutes to 12. We signaled her again at 10 minutes past 12, half past 12, a quarter to 1, and 1 o'clock with a very powerful Morse lamp, which you can see about 10 miles."

He further says that "when the second officer came on the bridge at 12 o'clock, or 10 minutes past 12, I told him to watch that steamer which was stopped. I pointed out the ice to him; told him we were surrounded by ice; to watch the steamer, that she did not get any closer to her.

I call attention to the fact that from the chart you can readily see the position of the Californian, and that to the eastward there is no ice, to the southward of her there is no ice, and to the northward there is no ice; this ship was not surrounded by ice. She was against the ice in her westward course, and was in exactly the same situation as the Titanic before the impact.

"At 20 minutes to 1 I whistled up the speaking tube and asked if she was getting any nearer. He said, 'No; she is not taking any notice of us;' so I said, 'I will go and lie down a bit.' At a quarter past 1 he said, 'I think she has fired a rocket,' and, continuing, 'She did not answer the Morse lamp'"—this is the officer on the bridge, who continued, "and she has commenced to go away from us."

Indeed, she had commenced to go away, never to return.

"I then said, 'Call her up and let me know at once what her name is.' So he put the whistle back, and, apparently, he was calling. Then I went to sleep." Capt. Lord then says, "Rockets are used as signals of distress and can not be mistaken." He does not believe that he could have seen the Titanic Morse signals, but is not quite so doubtful about being unable to see rockets that distance.

Most of the witnesses of the ill-fated vessel before the committee saw plainly the light, which Capt. Lord says was displayed for nearly two hours after the accident, while the captain and some of the officers of the Titanic directed the lifeboats to pull for that light and return with the empty boats to the side of the ship.

Ernest Gill, a member of the crew of the Californian, says that he came on deck from the engine room at 11.56, ship's time, and just before the accident that fatal Sunday evening, and saw plainly over the rail on the starboard side "the lights of a very large steamer about 10 miles away," and that he "could see her port side lights"; that he then went to his cabin and said to his mate, William Thomas, that it was "clear off to the starboard, for I saw a big vessel going along at full speed"; that he could not sleep and went on deck again and "saw a white rocket about 10 miles away on the starboard side and in seven or eight minutes saw distinctly a second rocket in the same place," saying to himself "that must be a vessel in distress."

Why did the Californian display its Morse signal lamp from the moment of the collision continuously for nearly two hours if they saw nothing? And the signals which were visible to Mr. Gill at 12.30 and afterwards, and which were also seen by the captain and officer of the watch, should have excited more solicitude than was displayed by the officers of that vessel, and the failure of Capt. Lord to arouse the wireless operator on his ship, who could have easily ascertained the name of the vessel in distress and reached her in time to avert loss of life, places a tremendous responsibility upon this officer from which it will be very difficult for him to escape. Had he been as vigilant in the movement of his vessel as he was active in displaying his own signal lamp, there is a very strong probability that every human life that was sacrificed through this disaster could have been saved. The dictates of humanity should have prompted vigilance under such conditions. And the law of Great Britain giving effect to article 2 of the Brussels Convention in regard to assistance and salvage at sea is as follows:

> The master or person in charge of a vessel shall, so far as he can do so without serious danger to his own vessel, her crew, and passengers (if any), render assistance to every person, even if such person be a subject of a foreign State at war with His Majesty, who is found at sea in danger of being lost, and if he fails to do so, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

The Senate passed, on the 18th day of April last, a bill giving effect to the same treaty, which clearly indicates the disposition of the Government of England, and our own as well, in matters of this character.

I am well aware from the testimony of the captain of the Californian that he deluded himself with the idea that there was a ship between the Titanic and the Californian, but there was no ship seen there at daybreak and no intervening rockets were seen by anyone on the Titanic, although they were looking longingly for such a sign and only saw the white light of the Californian, which was flashed the moment the ship struck and taken down when the vessel sank. A ship would not have been held there if it had been eastbound, and she could not have gone west without passing the Californian on the north or the Titanic on the south. That ice floe held but two ships—the Titanic and the Californian. The conduct of the captain of the Californian calls for drastic action by the Government of England and by the owners of that vessel, who were the same owners as those of the ill-fated ship.

Contrast, if you will, the conduct of the captain of the Carpathia in this emergency and imagine what must be the consolation of that thoughtful and sympathetic mariner, who rescued the shipwrecked and left the people of the world his debtor as his ship sailed for distant seas a few days ago. By his utter self-effacement and his own indifference to peril, by his promptness and his knightly sympathy, he rendered a great service to humanity. He should be made to realize the debt of gratitude this Nation owes to him, while the book of good deeds, which had so often been familiar with his unaffected valor, should henceforth carry the name of Capt. Rostron to the remotest period of time. With most touching detail he promptly ordered the ship's officers to their stations, distributed the doctors into positions of greatest usefulness, prepared comforts for man and mother and babe; with foresight and tenderness he lifted them from their watery imprisonment and, when the rescue had been completed, summoned all of the rescued together and ordered the ship's bell tolled for the lost, and asked that prayers of thankfulness be offered by those who had been spared. It falls to the lot of few men to perform a service so unselfish, and the American Congress can honor itself no more by any single act than by writing into its laws the gratitude we feel toward this modest and kindly man. The lessons of this hour are, indeed, fruitless and its precepts ill-conceived if rules of action do not follow hard upon the day of reckoning. Obsolete and antiquated shipping laws should no longer encumber the parliamentary records of any Government, and overripe administrative boards should be pruned of dead branches and less sterile precepts taught and applied.

Upon the bosom of the sea the nations have for ages commingled together, arts and manufactures have been exchanged freely, and the knowledge of language spread to the remotest limit of civilization. The sea, once a torment to primitive man, has long since given way to his intelligent mastery, and in its changing moods there is real glamour; there the daring spirit of the explorer and trader still lingers in this period of sharpest rivalry; there prizes await the fleetest skipper.

I think the presence of Mr. Ismay and Mr. Andrews stimulated the ship to greater speed than it would have made under ordinary conditions, although I can not fairly ascribe to either of them any instructions to this effect.

The very presence of the owner and builder unconsciously stimulates endeavor, and the restraint of organized society is absolutely necessary to safety. As men have re-formed anew the natural banks of the ocean and struck the shackles from its contracted bounds, dedicating its bays and shores to commerce, so must we do our utmost to overcome its perils.

Piracy and pillage are twin trophies of international concern and, under the same searching scrutiny, modern shipping should be free from every inherent defect.

The calamity through which we have just passed has left traces of sorrow everywhere; hearts have been broken and deep anguish unexpressed; art will typify with master hand its lavish contribution to the sea; soldiers of state and masters of trade will receive the homage which is their honest due; hills will be cleft in search of marble white enough to symbolize these heroic deeds and, where kinship is the only tie that binds the lowly to the humble home bereft of son or mother or father, little groups of kinsfolk will recount, around the kitchen fire, the traits of human sympathy in those who went down with the ship. These are choice pictures in the treasure house of the affections, but even these will sometime fade; the sea is the place permanently to honor our dead; this should be the occasion for a new birth of vigilance, and future generations must accord to this event a crowning motive for better things.

Recently we have witnessed a marked concentration of control of ocean transportation. Three companies—the International Mercantile Marine Co., the Hamburg-American Co., and the Royal Mail Steam Packet Co.—control 604 ocean steamers with a gross tonnage of 3,632,233 tons. These companies control more tonnage than the total American tonnage of all classes on the Great Lakes—2,943,523 tons. Any one of these companies controls tonnage nine times as great as the over-sea steam tonnage of the United States, and twice as great as the total registered steam tonnage of the merchant marine of the United States.

Regulation of steamship transportation is as necessary as regulation of railroad transportation, and less difficult to obtain. Transportation by rail is conducted through settled localities, where many residents would quickly discover and immediately report any irregularities or disregard of safety requirements, while by water it is conducted beyond the criticism of any except the actual passengers on the ship, making it all the more necessary for definite regulations.

Lanes of travel must be more carefully defined, strength of bow more positive and water-tight subdivision to limit submergence, life-saving equipment better and numerous enough for all, discipline and practice a rudimentary exaction, eye more keen and ear alert to catch the warning cry; as on British battleships as well as on our own, powerful lights should be provided for merchant vessels to search out the partially submerged derelict; buoys should be carried by every ship to mark temporarily the place of the ship's burial in case of accident; and men of strength and spirit there must be, won back to a calling already demoralized and decadent. But 10 per cent of the men before the mast in our merchant marine are natives or naturalized Americans; even England, that 20 years ago had barely 7,000 Orientals on her merchant ships, now carries over 70,000 of that alien race. Americans must reenlist in this service, they must become the soldiers of the sea, and, whether on lookout, on deck, or at the wheel, whether able or common seamen, they should be better paid for their labor and more highly honored in their calling; their rights must be respected, and their work carefully performed; harsh and severe restraining statutes must be repealed, and a new dignity given this important field of labor.

"In our imagination we can see again the proud ship instinct with life and energy, with active figures again swarming upon its decks; musicians, teachers, artists, and authors; soldiers and sailors and men of large affairs; brave men and noble women of every land. We can see the unpretentious and the lowly, progenitors of the great and strong, turning their back upon the Old World, where endurance is to them no longer a virtue, and looking hopefully to the new. At the very moment of their greatest joy the ship suddenly reels, mutilated and groaning." With splendid courage the musicians fill the last moments with sympathetic melody. "The ship wearily gives up the unequal battle. Only a vestige remains of the men and women that but a moment before quickened her spacious apartments with human hopes and passions, sorrows, and joys." Upon that broken hull new vows were taken, new fealty expressed, old love renewed, and those who had been devoted in friendship and companions in life went proudly and defiantly on the last life pilgrimage together. In such a heritage we must feel ourselves more intimately related to the sea than ever before, and henceforth it will send back to us on its rising tide the cheering salutations from those we have lost.

During the delivery of the speech of Mr. SMITH of Michigan,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan will suspend for a moment. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside until the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Maryland have finished the speeches of which they have given notice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from North Carolina is complied with.

At the conclusion of his speech, Mr. SMITH of Michigan said:

Mr. President, I send to the Clerk's desk a joint resolution, which I desire to have read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 111) to convey the thanks of Congress to Capt. Arthur Henry Rostron, and through him to the officers and crew of the steamship Carpathia, of the Cunard Line, for the prompt and heroic service rendered by them in rescuing 704 lives from the wreck of the steamship Titanic in the North Atlantic Ocean, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the thanks of Congress be, and the same are hereby, presented to Capt. Arthur Henry Rostron, and through him to the officers and crew of the steamship Carpathia, of the Cunard Line, for promptly going to the relief of the steamship Titanic and heroically saving the lives of 704 people who had been shipwrecked in the North Atlantic Ocean.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to cause to be made and presented to Captain Rostron a suitable gold medal appropriately inscribed, which shall express the high estimation in which Congress holds the service of this officer, to whose promptness and vigilance was due the rescue of 374 women and children and 330 men.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purchase or manufacture of said medal is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). To what committee does the Senator desire to have the joint resolution referred?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, this recognition is so highly deserved, the valor shown by this officer is so marked and worthy of emulation, I am going to ask Senators to give unanimous consent for immediate consideration and that the joint resolution be put on its passage without a reference to committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Michigan?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Out of order I desire to introduce a bill and joint resolution, and I will ask their reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 6976) to regulate navigation by steam passenger vessels, to amend sections 4400, 4471, 4488, 4490, section 3 of act of July 9, 1886, section 1 of act of June 24, 1910, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 112) providing for the creation of a commission to investigate the laws and regulations for the construction and equipment in the navigation of vessels, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The report of the Committee on Commerce has been unanimously agreed upon, and I am directed to make the report which I send to the Clerk's desk. We have thought it desirable to give the full sailing list as well as the full list of the crew from Southampton, Cherbourg, and Queenstown, also a full and complete list of those rescued and of those lost. I will ask that the report be read following the speech of the Senator from Maryland, who has given notice of his desire to proceed now, and when it is read that it be printed in full in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the attention of the Senate briefly to the subject matter indicated in my notice in reference to the disaster to the Titanic.

I shall not bring to your attention the harrowing details of this overwhelming calamity, but my purpose is to ascertain what lessons this disaster teaches us and what legislation, if possible, can be framed in order to avoid its recurrence.

Mr. President, we must change the admiralty and navigation laws of this country. They consist of an incongruous collection of antiquated statutes which should be repealed and reenacted so as to meet the necessities of ocean intercourse of the present day. This is surely one lesson that has been taught us by this dreadful calamity. Without entering into minute details, I submit to the Senate the following suggestions for its consideration. In the first place, let me say a word about the investigation by the Senate committee. The committee of the Senate has no power beyond that which it has exercised. In conducting the investigation it acquired its jurisdiction under the constitutional clause to regulate commerce. It is because Congress has jurisdiction to regulate commerce between the States and foreign countries that the committee had the right to undertake this investigation. It would have had no right whatever to summon and examine witnesses unless it had jurisdiction over the subject matter, and the jurisdiction that it has is based upon the fact that by virtue of this examination it is able to recommend to the Senate, under this clause of the Constitution, such improvement in our laws as will enable us to avoid a recurrence of this accident. Therefore the Senate was perfectly right in appointing this committee, and the committee, acting strictly within its jurisdiction and the decision of our courts under a case that I read to the Senate a few weeks ago, has done its full duty in the premises and has done it well, and the committee, and especially its able chairman, deserves not only the gratitude of the Senate but the commendation of the country for the impartial performance of their delicate and arduous duties. If it had not been for the prompt action of the senior Senator from Michigan there would have been no investigation, and his analysis and conduct of the case, thorough in every respect, deserves the appreciation of the Senate and the approval of the people in the highest degree.

I come now to the second proposition. It seems to be universally conceded that this ship was not equipped with a sufficient number of lifeboats to provide for the safety of its passengers. There may have been a sufficient number in accordance with the rules of the British Board of Trade, but it is a conceded fact that the great loss of life occurred because there was an insufficient number to meet the necessities of the case and rescue the passengers and crew.

Third. The failure of foreign steamships to carry searchlights is utterly inexcusable, and if a proper searchlight had been upon this vessel, in my judgment, the accident could have been avoided.

Fourth. The failure to supply the proper officers with binoculars was unquestionably an act of negligence, especially as I gather from the testimony that a demand had been made by the proper officers for them, and the demand had been refused.

Fifth. There was not the proper attention paid to the wireless messages that the ship received. This appears to me to have been an inexcusable act of negligence.

Sixth. The speed of the vessel was not lowered, as it should have been, when notice was received that she was in a dangerous zone. My own judgment therefore is that there was negligence in this case and that the disaster was attributable to the want of due care upon the part of the company and of those in charge of the ship. The proper tribunals will determine upon this question unaffected by any conclusion that we may arrive at in the premises.

I have said that the navigation and admiralty laws of the United States ought to be changed. Now, in what respects ought the proper amendments to be made?

First. In the first place, we can not change the criminal features so far as crimes and criminal negligence occur upon a foreign ship on the high seas. Prosecution for criminal negligence in the Titanic disaster can only be brought in the British courts, as a British ship upon the high seas is British territory. This is an unbending rule, and, as announced by the Federal courts is stated as follows:

The general rule is that such courts have no jurisdiction of the offense even when committed upon the high seas, except when committed on board of a ship or vessel of the United States, unless it appears that the vessel was sailing under no national flag.

The only exception to the rule is that where death occurs in one of our States as the direct result of injuries or exposure resulting from criminal negligence of some one on the ship. Such a prosecution, as has been decided by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, might be sustainable upon the theory that the crime was committed where it took effect.

Second. There ought to be a remedial statute providing that a civil action for personal damages against the owners of the ship could be brought in either the Federal or State courts, and the limited liability statutes of the United States should be repealed.

Third. There ought to be a statute providing that surviving relatives under Lord Campbell's Act can bring suit either in the State or Federal courts, and the limited liability statutes should be repealed so as not to apply to a case of this sort.

Fourth. There ought to be a statute providing for a sufficient number of lifeboats and for the adequate equipment of ships with wireless telegraph. There is no doubt about our right to pass such a statute, even as to foreign ships, because we have full authority to say that foreign ships shall not enter or leave our ports unless they are properly supplied in this particular, and even our statutes now are supposed to furnish that remedy.

Fifth. The doctrine of "knowledge or privity of the owner" should be swept from the statute book, and it should not be necessary in order to hold the owners to a full responsibility to prove that the negligence occurred with the privity or knowledge of the owners. There is no reason why owners of ships should not be responsible for the negligence of the crew in the same way that railroad corporations are held responsible for the negligence of their employees. The whole subject is largely in our own hands. We should, without delay, pass a system of laws that, in my judgment, would be sufficient to avoid a repetition of this heart-rending disaster. For a full discussion of the law as it now stands I refer the Senate to the following cases: Schoomaker v. Gilmore (102 U. S., 118); Richardson v. Harmon (222 U. S., 96); the case of La Bourgogne (210 U. S., 97); and Commonwealth v. MacLoon (101 Mass., 1).

And the cases I have already referred to in Thirteenth Wallace and One hundred and ninth and One hundred and thirtieth United States.

Now, just let me explain to Senators how the law stands. I think I can do it in a few moments.

At present you can not recover in the Federal courts for the death of a passenger. There is no recovery at all by the surviving family or the surviving relatives in the Federal courts for the death of a passenger. In these accidents the British law provides, under Lord Campbell's Act, that recovery can be had, and in the case that I have cited, in Two hundred and tenth United States, the Supreme Court held that it would administer the French law; that the law which governs a casualty of that sort is the law of the country to which the ship belongs, and therefore France having a law providing for recovery in case of death, the Supreme Court, in the case I have quoted, the La Bourgogne case, held that the Supreme Court of the United States would administer the French law in the Federal tribunal. This ought to be changed, and we ought to be able to administer American law in American tribunals and not have to resort to the law of the country that owns the ship upon which the accident takes place.

Now, in the second place, I want to say that you can not recover at all if the owner of the ship surrenders the ship and surrenders the freight. We have an old statute here that is a reenactment of an English statute, passed 175 years ago, and we have never changed it. It was passed during the reign of George II, in 1734. It was improved upon in the reign of George III, in 1786, and again in 1813. That is the limited-liability statute. Look at it for a moment. The owners of the Titanic can come into court and surrender their freight money, the pending freight, and there is no recovery against them in any State or Federal court. No matter how many suits are brought in the State court, no matter how many suits may be brought in the Federal courts, the owners of that ship, no matter how able they may be financially to answer in damages, can go into the Federal courts, sue out an injunction, have a trustee appointed, bring the ship if it exists—of course in this case the ship is gone—bring pending freight into court, and escape all liability whatever for injury to passengers, for injury to goods, or for any cause whatever.

That is the statute that is now upon the statute books of the United States. It ought to be repealed or modified. There is no reason on earth why it should continue. When it was passed it was thought to afford an invitation to shipowners to take to the sea and risk the hazardous character of the adventure, but I apprehend there is no more danger on the sea now than there is on land; and if these statutes are not repealed there certainly ought to be some modification of them.

Now, if you can prove the privity of the owner you can recover, and the only question of privity which arises in the Titanic case is whether the presence of Mr. Ismay on board this vessel carries with it the privity and knowledge of the owner. You can recover full damages if you can prove privity and knowledge of the owner, but if you can not prove the privity and knowledge of the owner then the company is not responsible for the negligence of its crew, and all that can be recovered is the ship if it exists and the freight money if it is brought into court.

The only open question in this case is whether or not the presence of Ismay on the ship makes the owners responsible. I am inclined to think his presence on the ship would not have this effect. He was one of the trustees of the line. He was one of the directors of the line. He was upon the executive committee of the line. He was chairman of the finance committee or upon the finance committee, and he was president of the line. In fact, he was almost the line itself. But, nevertheless, I doubt very much whether as a proposition of law his mere presence on the ship itself, admitting that he was not present as a passenger, would come within the Federal statute, which holds that damages can only be recovered where there is a privity or knowledge of the owner. Thus stands the law, and the law ought to be changed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me a question? I presume the Senator refers to what is commonly called the Harter law. Under that law if the ship is properly equipped and seaworthy the owners are not liable for any mistake of the master in navigating the ship, and in case of damage occurring they are only liable for the value of the ship and the freight earned.

Now, the question I put to the Senator is whether under that law in a case of this kind where there is a total loss the insurance would not be available under that law?

Mr. RAYNER. I think not, Mr. President. It ought to be made available, but there is a decision of the Supreme Court (I can not give my friend from Minnesota the case) in which the point came up involving the question the Senator has asked, and, I believe, though I am not certain, that the court held that insurance was not counted.

In Great Britain, I believe, the law provides that the freight money shall be equal to £15 to the registered ton; and in the loss of the Titanic that would amount to a great deal; but we have not any such statute, and there is no recovery here at all. There is no recovery for death, because it does not come within the admiralty laws, and there is no recovery for damages against the company unless you can prove the privity and the knowledge of the owner. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will notice the last case on the subject is the case in Two hundred and tenth United States Reports, which is one of the best opinions, in my judgment, that was ever delivered in the Supreme Court of the United States. Chief Justice White goes into an elaborate and exhaustive discussion of all the questions that are involved in that disaster in case of a collision, and he administered the Code Napoleon in the Supreme Court of the United States, where it required a very thorough investigation to discover what the French law upon this ruling was. The Supreme Court came to the conclusion that under the French code you could recover for death; but they came to the further conclusion that there was no privity or knowledge of the owners, and that, therefore, they had a right in the Bourgogne case, in the case of the collision of a French with a British ship, to go into the Federal courts, surrender freight money, and escape all liability. These provisions have been on the statute books from time immemorial. We have a bill now in the Judiciary Committee attempting to remedy these obsolete provisions of our navigation laws, and they ought to be remedied, because nearly every other civilized government has adopted statutes in reference to them.

There is another lesson that this disaster teaches us and which ought to be one of general application, and that is the lesson of corporate responsibility. We must enact legislation that will make the controlling and superior officers of corporations within our own jurisdiction criminally responsible for the careless and negligent management of the public-service corporations which they control. I have made this suggestion over and over again, and I repeat it now in the most emphatic way that I can, that it is a shame and an outrage that the criminal statutes of this land permit the men who are really responsible absolutely to escape from the penalties of the law, and inflict penalties and punishments upon those who are simply acting under their superior orders. We know how a large number of these corporations are organized, and what I have reference to now are American corporations, because in Great Britain corporations are controlled by laws that are more efficient and severe than ours. Let us look at the scheme a minute.

A number of individuals organize a trust. We call these companies trusts for want of a better name. The promoters absorb and consolidate a number of competing companies, and then, in order to promote the scheme, a bonded indebtedness is created. The promoters in almost every instance get the bonds and the public gets the stock. Then the consolidated company goes into operation and, as a rule, the bondholders, who consist of the individuals who practically own the constituent companies, have very little, if any, interest in the active management of the concern. The president and managing officers—I will not say in all cases, but in a great many instances of the administration of public-service corporations—perform simply perfunctory duties, their position being largely a sinecure, and the management being left to other hands. I know of one railroad accident after another and one steamship accident after another that are entirely due to the negligence of the directorate of the respective companies. Did we ever hear of a director or a president of any public-service corporation being indicted for manslaughter in an American court in any case whatever where the accident was directly attributable to the oversight, neglect, or carelessness of the company's management? American corporations in a number of instances are running loose and wild without curb and without reins. Take the street railroads of Washington. I have never in any city in the Union seen such an utter disregard of the people's rights. I have time and time again intended to offer some measure here to bring them to bay and call them to terms, and I expect to follow up this purpose. They are violating their charters and they are not giving the people proper accommodations and facilities. I have been in these cars hundreds of times when afflicted and helpless people have been made to stand from almost terminus to terminus simply because the management of these railroads will not run a sufficient number of cars and will not give to the people of this District the rights that they are entitled to. They forget that they are the trustees of the public as well as the trustees of their stockholders.

It is a delusion that these gentlemen are laboring under that they represent private stockholders alone and that their duty ceases when they pay their own salaries and interest upon their bonds and a dividend upon their stock. They owe just as great a duty to the public as they do to the private interests that they represent, and I think the time has come when we must lock hands in this Congress of the United States and demand of these public-service corporations, interstate and in the District of Columbia, that under the heaviest penalties they must properly administer their charter obligations and that the public will no longer stand by and permit the gross violation of their public duty to take place from day to day as it is now doing in this District and elsewhere. What occurs here occurs all around us, and I call upon Congress, taught the lesson as it is by this terrible disaster, to fix the standard and the measure of responsibility, not against sailors and captains and conductors and brakemen and motormen, unless where they are personally negligent, but upon the heads of these corporations, where the responsibility attaches to them for the proper direction and management of the interests that they represent.

There is another lesson, however, Mr. President, that this disaster has taught us, of more importance than a change in our admiralty and navigation laws, and of far greater and more overwhelming significance than the lesson of corporate responsibility, and that is the lesson of religious faith. Disasters like this, instead of weakening, should strengthen the faith of the Nation. There is no use of appealing to reason or to philosophy in a case of this sort. The mind stands aghast and appalled as these calamities come thick and fast. We forget in our moments of sorrow that it never was intended that the intellect of man should reason out such a problem. Suffering and affliction, as they come to the pure and the innocent in a hundred forms, are inexplainable.

The convulsions of nature alone that have swept myriads of human beings to an untimely death can not be reconciled by any process of human reasoning. When reason halts, the Creator has implanted in the soul another faculty, however, that gives us light in the hours of tribulation. It is the light of faith, a pillar of fire in the night of our darkness and despair. Throughout my life I have spent many hours of the day, and many silent and sleepless hours of the night, in the struggle for the light of reason, but in my advancing years the light that gives me fortitude and courage is the sublime light of faith, that never dims nor wanes, and at the supreme moment when reason vanishes, breaks in upon us with all the radiance of the morning sun. We can reason out the negligence of man, but we can not reason out why, in the course of nature, an iceberg from the Arctic Zone should just at this very moment have taken its course upon the path of desolation and of death. Upon all this and kindred subjects the most profound intellect of the greatest philosophers who ever lived have illumined the world just about as much as the credulity of the earliest races, who attributed every phenomenon of nature to the interposition of Divine Providence. What this Nation needs are some severe lessons that will strengthen the pillars and the altars of its faith. We are to a large extent to-day defying the ordinances of God, and the sooner we awaken to a realizing sense of our responsibility the better it will be for the spiritual elevation of the country. We are running mad with the lust of wealth, and of power, and of ambition. We are separating society into castes, with fabulous fortunes upon the one side and destitution and poverty on the other. It takes a terrible warning to bring us back to our moorings and our senses. We are abandoning the devout and simple lives of our ancestors, and the fabric of our firesides is weakening at the foundation. If this disaster teaches no lesson or points no moral, then let us pass it by with stoical indifference, until the next disaster comes, and in the meantime let the carnival go on. May the heart-rending scenes upon this night of anguish and of woe give us faith and lead us back to the altars of our fathers. I will not rehearse the agonies of this midnight sacrifice. I can not afford to dwell upon them or listen to the details that almost distract the mind and break the heart. It is the lesson and the moral that I am searching for.

I will say this, however, in closing. The agonies of separation at this scene, that palsy the tongue when it attempts to describe them, were worse than the agonies of death. I knew well one of the courageous passengers who, with his wife, yielded up their lives on this occasion. The man was a splendid type of American citizenship. I served with him in the House of Representatives, and he was esteemed and beloved by all who knew him. In private life he was a benefactor of the human race. In public life he was an unpurchasable tribune of the people. His heroic wife had the blood of martyrs in her veins, and from the most authentic account that I can obtain, the account of a witness who was not examined by the committee, because her testimony was not necessary for the purposes of the investigation, she went to her death with the same spirit of heroic fortitude with which her ancestors went to the fagot and the flame.

A harrowing thought flashes across my mind, and that is, it might possibly have been unnecessary to have presented to this devoted man and woman the terrible alternative that confronted them, and it might have been possible that both of them could have been rescued. I shall dwell upon this incident no longer.

I shall close my brief remarks with this remembrance. As the ship was sinking, the strains of music were wafted over the deck. It was not the note of any martial anthem that had in days gone by led embattled legions on to victory. It was a more inspiring stanza than this. It was a loftier and holier melody amid the anguish and the sublime pathos of that awful hour that swept through the compartments of the sinking ship. It was a rallying cry for the living and the dying, to rally them not for life, but to rally them for their awaiting death. Almost face to face with their Creator, amid the chaos of this supreme and solemn moment, in inspiring notes the unison resounded through the ship. It told the victims of the wreck that there was another world beyond the seas free from the agony of pain, and, though with somber tones, it cheered them on to their untimely fate. As the sea closed upon the heroic dead, let us feel that the heavens opened to the lives that were prepared to enter.

Father of the Universe, what an admonition to the Nation! The sounds of that awe-inspiring requiem that vibrated o'er the ocean have been drowned in the waters of the deep, the instruments that gave them birth are silenced as the harps were silenced on the willow tree, but if the melody that was rehearsed could only reverberate through this land, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," and its echoes could be heard in these halls of legislation, and at every place where our rulers and representatives pass judgment and enact and administer laws, and at every home and fireside, from the mansions of the rich to the huts and hovels of the poor, and if we could be made to feel that there is a divine law of obedience and of adjustment and of compensation that should command our allegiance, far above the laws that we formulate in this presence, then, from the gloom of these fearful hours we shall pass into the dawn of a higher service and of a better day, and then, Mr. President, the lives that went down upon this fated night did not go down in vain. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Visitors in the gallery will please refrain from manifestations of applause, which are in violation of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I ask that the report be read and that the names contained at the back part of the report be printed in the RECORD as a part of the report, but not read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the report can not be read except by unanimous consent. The Senate has given consent to lay aside the unfinished business until the conclusion of the speeches delivered by the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Maryland. The report can be printed, but the Chair thinks, under that unanimous-consent agreement, it can not now be read.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid aside until the report can be read—not the names, but simply the report.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota how long he thinks it will take to read the report?

Mr. NELSON. I do not think it will take over 15 or 20 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are 19 pages of printed matter in the report, aside from exhibits and addenda, which the Senator from Michigan does not care to have read. Without objection, the Secretary will read the report, and the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent that the speech of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], delivered this morning, be printed as a part of the report when the report is printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Washington desires that the report and the speech of the Senator from Michigan be printed together as a Senate document?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order therefor is entered.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the speech of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] be included in the document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that modification of the order will be made.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted this day by Mr. SMITH of Michigan from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with and that the entire report, with illustrations, including the names of passengers, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and an order is entered as requested.

The report in full is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 806, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

INVESTIGATION INTO LOSS OF STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted the following report.

The Subcommittee on Commerce, to whom was referred the resolution of inquiry into the loss of the British steamship Titanic, respectfully reports that that duty has been performed, and the committee has reached its conclusions thereon.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or a subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the causes leading to the wreck of the White Star liner Titanic, with its attendant loss of life, so shocking to the civilized world.

Resolved further, That said committee or a subcommittee thereof is hereby empowered to summon witnesses, send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to take such testimony as may be necessary to determine the responsibility therefor, with a view to such legislation as may be necessary to prevent, as far as possible, any repetition of such a disaster.

Resolved further, That the committee shall inquire particularly into the number of lifeboats, life rafts, and life preservers, and other equipment for the protection of the passengers and crew; the number of persons aboard the Titanic, whether passenger or crew, and whether adequate inspections were made of such vessel, in view of the large number of American passengers traveling over a route commonly regarded as dangerous from icebergs; and whether it is feasible for Congress to take steps looking to an international agreement to secure the protection of sea traffic, including regulation of the size of ships and designation of routes.

Resolved further, That in the report of said committee it shall recommend such legislation as it shall deem expedient; and the expenses incurred by this investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee.

Attest:

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary,
By H. M. ROSE, Assistant Secretary.

Accordingly the following Senators were appointed as members of the subcommittee: WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, Michigan, chairman; GEORGE C. PERKINS, California; JONATHAN BOURNE, jr., Oregon; THEODORE E. BURTON, Ohio; F. M. SIMMONS, North Carolina; FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS, Nevada; DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Florida.

WITNESSES EXAMINED.

We examined 82 witnesses upon various phases of this catastrophe, including the examination 53 British subjects or residents of Great Britain and 29 citizens of the United States or residents thereof.

We interrogated 2 general officers of the International Mercantile Marine Co., which owned the steamship Titanic—J. Bruce Ismay, of Liverpool, England, president, also a passenger on the ship on this voyage, and P. A. S. Franklin, of New York, vice president in the United States of the International Mercantile Marine Co.; all the surviving officers, 4 in number—Charles Herbert Lightoller, second officer, of Netley Abbey, Hampshire, England; Third Officer Herbert John Pitman, of Somerset, England; Fourth Officer Joseph Groles Boxhall, of Hull, England; and Fifth Officer Harold Godfrey Lowe, of North Wales; and 34 members of the crew, whose names are as follows:

Andrews, C. E., assistant steward, 145 Millbrook Road, Southampton.
Archer, Ernest, seaman, 59 Porchester Road, Southampton.
Barrett, Frederick, leading fireman, Southampton.
Brice, W., seaman, 11 Lower Canal Walk, Southampton.
Bride, H. S., telegrapher, London, England.
Bright, A. J., quartermaster, 105 Firgrove Road, Southampton.
Buley, E. J., seaman, 10 Cliff Road, Woolston, Southampton.
Burke, W., saloon steward, 57 Bridge Road, Southampton.
Clench, F., seaman, 10 The Flats Chantry Road, Southampton.
Collins, J., assistant cook, 65 Ballycarry, Belfast.
Crawford, A., bedroom steward, 22 Cranbury Avenue, Southampton.
Crowe, G. F., steward, 89 Milton Road, Southampton.
Cunningham, A., bedroom steward, 60 Charlton Road, Southampton.
Evans, F. O., seaman, 14 Bond Street, Southampton.
Etches, H. S., bedroom steward, 23a Gordon Avenue, Southampton.
Fleet, F., lookout (sailor), No. 9 Norman Road, Southampton.
Haines, Albert, boatswain's mate, No. 52 Groves Street, Southampton.
Hardy, J., steward, Oakleigh Holyrood Avenue, Highfield, Southampton.
Hemming, Samuel S., lamp trimmer, 31 Kingsley Road, Southampton.
Hitchens, Robert, quartermaster, 43 James Street, Southampton.
Hogg, G. A., lookout (sailor), 44 High Street, Southampton.
Jones, Thomas, seaman, 68 Wesfield, Liverpool.
Moore, G., seaman, 51 Graham Road, Southampton.
Olliver, A., quartermaster, 38 Anderson Road, Southampton.
Osman, F., seaman, 43 High Street, Itchen, Southampton.
Perkis, W. A., quartermaster, Victoria Road, Bitterne, Southampton.
Pitman, H. J., third officer, Castle Carry, Somerset, Southampton.
Ray, F. D., saloon steward, Palmer Park Avenue, Reading.
Rowe, G. T., quartermaster, 63 Henry Street, Gosport.
Symons, G., lookout (sailor), 55 Franchise Street, Weymouth.
Taylor, W. H., fireman, No. 2 Broad Street, Southampton.
Ward, W., saloon steward, 107 Millbrook Road, Southampton.
Wheelton, E., saloon steward, Norwood House, Shirecy, Southampton.
Widgery, J. (baths), 25 Rokeby Avenue, Redland, Bristol.

We took the testimony of 21 passengers of all classes (including President Ismay) and of 23 other witnesses on subjects related to our inquiry (including Vice President Franklin).

We held our sessions in New York and in Washington, and took testimony by deposition in other parts of the country and in the Dominion of Canada.

The results of our investigation may be stated as follows:

OWNERSHIP OF STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

We find that the Titanic was a White Star steamer and was owned by the Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., of England, all the stock of which company is in turn owned by the International Navigation Co. (Ltd.), of England, and the stock of that company, in turn, is owned by the International Mercantile Marine Co., an American corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey.

INTERNATIONAL MERCANTILE MARINE CO.

Mr. J. Bruce Ismay, of Liverpool, England, is president of the International Mercantile Marine Co., and Mr. P. A. S. Franklin, of New York City, is vice president of that company in the United States.

The board of directors of the International Mercantile Marine Co. is composed of the following persons:

C. A. Griscom (chairman), E. C. Grenfell, John F. Archbold, John I. Waterbury, the Right Hon. Lord Pirrie, George W. Perkins, Charles Steele, J. Bruce Ismay (president), Percy Chubb, E. J. Berwind, Harold A. Sanderson, P. A. B. Widener, Charles F. Torrey, and J. P. Morgan, jr.

The International Mercantile Marine Co., through its various ramifications and constituent companies, owns the White Star Line, the American Line, the Red Star Line, the Atlantic Transport Line, the National Line, and the majority of the stock of the Leyland Line.

This company is capitalized as follows (in round numbers): $102,000,000 between the preferred and common shares; $52,000,000 of 4½ per cent bonds; $19,000,000 (about) of 5 per cent bonds; $7,000,000 (about) of underlying bonds.

The total stock and bonded liability is about $180,000,000.

This company owns and operates a fleet of about 125 vessels, with a total of about 1,150,000 tons register, doing a general transoceanic transportation business throughout the world.

GENERAL PARTICULARS OF STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

The Titanic was built by Harland & Wolff, of Belfast, Ireland. No restriction as to limit of cost was placed upon the builders. She was launched May 31, 1911. She was a vessel of 46,328 tons register; her length was 882.6 feet, and her breadth was 92.6 feet. Her boat deck and bridge were 70 feet above the water line. She was, according to the testimony of President Ismay, "especially constructed to float with her two largest water-tight compartments full of water."

The vessel, fully equipped, cost £1,500,000 sterling, or about $7,500,000.

At the time of the accident the vessel carried insurance of £1,000,000 sterling, or about $5,000,000, the remaining risk being carried by the company's insurance fund.

The Titanic was a duplicate of the Olympic, which is owned by the same company, with the single exception of her passenger accommodations, and was built to accommodate 2,599 passengers, with additional accommodations for officers and crew numbering 903 persons.

TRIAL TESTS OF STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

The committee finds from the evidence that between six and seven hours was spent in making trial tests of this vessel at Belfast Lough on Monday, the 1st day of April last. A few turning circles were made, compasses adjusted, and she steamed a short time under approximately a full head of steam, but the ship was not driven at her full speed. One general officer of the steamship company was on board during the trial tests, while the builders were represented by Mr. Thomas Andrews, who had superintended the building of the vessel. Mr. Andrews conducted certain tests at Southampton and represented the builders both at Southampton and on the first voyage.

With a partial crew, the ship sailed from Belfast immediately after the trial, for Southampton, where she arrived on Wednesday, April 3, about midnight. She made fast with her port side to the wharf, where she remained until April 10, about 12 o'clock noon, when she sailed for Cherbourg, Queenstown, and New York.

ONLY TWO LIFEBOATS LOWERED.

Many of the crew did not join the ship until a few hours before sailing, and the only drill while the vessel lay at Southampton or on the voyage consisted in lowering two lifeboats on the starboard side into the water, which boats were again hoisted to the boat deck within a half hour. No boat list designating the stations of members of the crew was posted until several days after sailing from Southampton, boatmen being left in ignorance of their proper stations until the following Friday morning.

CERTIFICATE OF BRITISH BOARD OF TRADE.

On Wednesday morning, the day the ship sailed from Southampton, Capt. Clark, a representative of the British Board of Trade, came aboard and, after spending a brief time, issued the necessary certificate to permit sailing.

BOAT DAVITS AND LIFEBOATS OF THE STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

The Titanic was fitted with 16 sets of double-acting boat davits of modern type, capable of handling 2 or 3 boats per set of davits. The davits were thus capable of handling 48 boats, whereas the ship carried but 16 lifeboats and 4 collapsibles, fulfilling all the requirements of the British Board of Trade. The Titanic was provided with 14 lifeboats, of capacity for 65 persons each, or 910 persons; 2 emergency sea boats, of capacity for 35 persons each, or 70 persons; 4 collapsible boats, of capacity for 49 persons each, or 196 persons. Total lifeboat capacity, 1,176. There was ample life-belt equipment for all.

DEPARTURE OF THE STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

The ship left Southampton Wednesday, April 10, at 12.15 p. m., with the ship's complement of officers and crew (see Exhibit A) numbering 899 persons. As the Titanic left the wharf at Southampton the moorings of the New York were carried away by the backwash from the Titanic's starboard propeller, causing a delay of about half an hour.

PASSENGER LIST AND SURVIVORS OF STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

The Titanic arrived at Cherbourg late the same afternoon. The Titanic left Cherbourg and proceeded to Queenstown, Ireland, arriving there on Thursday about midday, departing for New York immediately after embarking the mails and passengers. Her passenger list was made up as follows:

First-class passengers who sailed on the Titanic:
Women and children	156
Men	173
Total	329
First-class passengers, survivors:
Women and children	145
Men	54
Total	199
First-class passengers lost:

Men	69
Total	174
Third-class passengers lost:
Women and children	119
Men	417
Total	536

SUMMARY OF PASSENGERS AND SURVIVORS.

Including the crew, the Titanic sailed with 2,223 persons aboard, of whom 1,517 were lost and 706 were saved. It will be noted in this connection that 60 per cent of the first-class passengers were saved, 42 per cent of the second-class passengers were saved, 25 per cent of the third-class passengers were saved, and 24 per cent of the crew were saved.

WEATHER CONDITIONS DURING VOYAGE.

During the entire voyage the weather was clear, with the single exception of 10 minutes of fog, and the sea was calm throughout the voyage, with sunshine the whole of each day and bright starlight every night. No untoward incident marred the trip. Greetings were frequently exchanged with passing vessels by appropriate signals.

ICE WARNINGS.

On the third day out ice warnings were received by the wireless operators on the Titanic, and the testimony is conclusive that at least three of these warnings came direct to the commander of the Titanic on the day of the accident, the first about noon, from the Baltic, of the White Star Line. It will be noted that this message places icebergs within 5 miles of the track which the Titanic was following, and near the place where the accident occurred. The message from the commander of the Baltic is as follows (p. 1058):

STEAMSHIP "BALTIC," April 14, 1912.

Capt. SMITH, Titanic:

Have had moderate variable winds and clear fine weather since leaving. Greek steamer Athinai reports passing icebergs and large quantity of field ice to-day in latitude 41.51 north, longitude 49.52 west. Last night we spoke German oil tank Deutschland, Stettin to Philadelphia, not under control; short of coal; latitude 40.42 north, longitude 55.11. Wishes to be reported to New York and other steamers. Wish you and Titanic all success.

COMMANDER.

The second message was received by the Titanic from the Californian, of the Leyland Line, at 5.35 p. m. New York time, Sunday afternoon, reporting ice about 19 miles to the northward of the track which the Titanic was following. This message was as follows (p. 735):

Latitude 42.3 north, longitude 49.9 west. Three large bergs 5 miles to southward of us. Regards. (Sig.) Lord.

The third message was transmitted from the Amerika via the Titanic and Cape Race to the Hydrographic Office in Washington, D. C., reporting ice about 19 miles to the southward of the course being followed by the Titanic, and reads as follows (p. 507):

STEAMSHIP "AMERIKA," VIA "TITANIC" AND CAPE RACE, N. F., April 14, 1912.

HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE, Washington, D. C.:

Amerika passed two large icebergs in 41.27 N., 50.8 W., on the 14th of April.

K. N. U. T.

This message was actually received at the Hydrographic Office in Washington at 10.51 p. m., April 14.

The fourth message was sent to the Titanic at 9.05 p. m. New York time, on Sunday, the 14th of April, approximately an hour before the accident occurred. The message reads as follows:

"We are stopped and surrounded by ice."

To this the operator of the Titanic replied:

"Shut up. I am busy. I am working Cape Race."

While this was the last message sent by the Californian to the Titanic, the evidence shows that the operator of the Californian kept the telephones on his head, and heard the Titanic talking to Cape Race up to within a few minutes of the time of the accident, when he "put the phones down, took off his clothes, and turned in."

The Baltic's operator on that Sunday overheard ice reports going to the Titanic from the Prinz Friedrich Wilhelm, and from the Amerika (p. 1059), while the Carpathia on the same day overheard the Parisian talking about ice with other ships (p. 497).

ICE BOTH TO NORTHWARD AND SOUTHWARD STEAMSHIP "TITANIC'S" TRACK.

This enables the committee to say that the ice positions so definitely reported to the Titanic just preceding the accident located ice on both sides of the track or lane which the Titanic was following, and in her immediate vicinity. No general discussion took place among the officers; no conference was called to consider these warnings; no heed was given to them. The speed was not relaxed, the lookout was not increased, and the only vigilance displayed by the officer of the watch was by instructions to the lookouts to keep "a sharp lookout for ice." It should be said, however, that the testimony shows that Capt. Smith remarked to Officer Lightoller, who was the officer doing duty on the bridge until 10 o'clock ship's time, or 8.27 o'clock New York time, "If it was in a slight degree hazy there would be no doubt we should have to go very slowly" (p. 67), and "If in the slightest degree doubtful, let me know." The evidence is that it was exceptionally clear. There was no haze, and the ship's speed was not reduced.

SPEED.

The speed of the Titanic was gradually increased after leaving Queenstown. The first day's run was 464 miles, the second day's run was 519 miles, the third day's run was 546 miles. Just prior to the collision the ship was making her maximum speed of the voyage—not less than 21 knots, or 24¼ miles per hour.

THE COLLISION.

At 11.46 p. m. ship's time, or 10.13 p. m. New York time, Sunday evening, April 14, the lookout signaled the bridge and telephoned the officer of the watch, "Iceberg right ahead." The officer of the watch, Mr. Murdock, immediately ordered the quartermaster at the wheel to put the helm "hard astarboard," and reversed the engines; but while the sixth officer standing behind the quartermaster at the wheel reported to Officer Murdock "The helm is hard astarboard," the Titanic struck the ice (pp. 229 and 450). The impact, while not violent enough to disturb the passengers or crew, or to arrest the ship's progress, rolled the vessel slightly and tore the steel plating above the turn of the bilge.

FIRST DAMAGE REPORTED.

The testimony shows that coincident with the collision air was heard whistling or hissing from the overflow pipe to the forepeak tank, indicating the escape of air from that tank because of the inrush of water. Practically at once, the forepeak tank, No. 1 hold, No. 2 hold, No. 3 hold, and the forward boiler room, filled with water, the presence of which was immediately reported from the mail room and the racquet court and trunk room in No. 3 hold, and also from the firemen's quarters in No. 1 hold. Leading Fireman Barret saw the water rushing into the forward fireroom from a tear about 2 feet above the stokehold floor plates and about 20 feet below the water line, which tear extended 2 feet into the coal bunker at the forward end of the second fireroom.

SERIOUS NATURE OF DAMAGE REALIZED.

The reports received by the captain after various inspections of the ship must have acquainted him promptly with its serious condition, and when interrogated by President Ismay, he so expressed himself. It is believed, also, that this serious condition was promptly realized by the chief engineer and by the builders' representative, Mr. Andrews, none of whom survived.

FLOODING OF THE VESSEL.

Under this added weight of water the bow of the ship sank deeper and deeper into the water, and through the open hatch leading from the mail room, and through other openings, water promptly overflowed E deck, below which deck the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth transverse bulkheads ended, and thus flooded the compartments abaft No. 3 hold.

WATER-TIGHT COMPARTMENTS.

The Titanic was fitted with 15 transverse water-tight bulkheads, only 1, the first bulkhead from forward, extended to the uppermost continuous deck, C; bulkheads Nos. 2, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15 extended to the second continuous deck, D; and bulkheads Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 extended only to the third continuous deck, E. The openings through deck E were not designed for water-tight closing, as the evidence shows that flooding over deck E contributed largely to the sinking of the vessel. The bulkheads above described divided the ship into 16 main water-tight compartments, and the ship was so arranged that any 2 main compartments might be flooded without in any way involving the safety of the ship. As before stated, the testimony shows that the 5 extreme forward compartments were flooded practically immediately, and under such circumstances, by reason of the nonwater-tight character of the deck at which the transverse bulkheads ended, the supposedly water-tight compartments were not water-tight, and the sinking of the vessel followed.

DISTRESS CALLS SENT OUT.

No general alarm was sounded, no whistle blown, and no systematic warning was given the passengers. Within 15 or 20 minutes the captain visited the wireless room and instructed the operator to get assistance, sending out the distress call, C. Q. D.

DISTRESS CALLS HEARD.

This distress call was heard by the wireless station at Cape Race that evening at 10.25 p. m. New York time, together with the report that she had struck an iceberg, and at the same time was accidentally overheard by the Mount Temple, which ship was immediately turned around (p. 760) toward the Titanic. Within two or three minutes a reply was received from the Frankfurt. Within 10 minutes the wireless operator of the Carpathia fortunately and largely by chance heard the Titanic's C. Q. D. call (pp. 901 and 929), which he reported at once to the bridge and to the captain. The Carpathia was immediately turned around (p. 19) and reported her latitude and longitude to the Titanic, together with the fact that she was steaming full speed toward the stricken ship (pp. 148 and 901). The Frankfurt, however, did not give her latitude or longitude, and after waiting 20 minutes asked the operator of the Titanic, "What is matter?" To this the Titanic operator replied that he was a fool (pp. 151 and 153).

In view of the fact that no position had been given by the Frankfurt, and that her exact distance from the Titanic was unknown at that time, the answer of the operator of the Titanic was scarcely such as prudence would have dictated. Notwithstanding this, however, the Frankfurt was overheard by the Mount Temple to report, "Our captain will go for you" (p. 929). Communication was promptly established with the Olympic and the Baltic (pp. 151, 158, and 901), and the Caronia, some 800 miles to the eastward, overheard the Titanic's C. Q. D. call. The wireless messages of the Titanic were recorded in part by the Cape Race station (p. 175) and by the Mount Temple (p. 929), and in part by the Baltic (pp. 1059 and 1060). The Mount Temple last heard the Titanic after the accident at 11.47 p. m. New York time (p. 929). The Baltic and the Carpathia lost touch about the same time, the last message they received being "Engine room getting flooded" (pp. 107 and 1060). The Virginian last heard the Titanic's signals at 12.27 New York time, and reported them blurred, and ending abruptly (p. 175).

FIRST PRESS REPORT.

This information is contained in a report received by the Associated Press from Cape Race, and communicated by them to the public and also to Vice President Franklin of the White Star Line, and later verified from his office in Montreal, as follows (p. 1022):

CAPE RACE, NEW BRUNSWICK,
Sunday night, April 14.

At 10.25 o'clock to-night the White Star Line steamship Titanic called "C. Q. D." to the Marconi wireless station here and reported having struck an iceberg. The steamer said that immediate assistance was required.

Half an hour afterwards another message came, reporting that they were sinking by the head, and that women were being put off in the lifeboats.

The weather was calm and clear, the Titanic's wireless operator reported, and gave the position of the vessel as 41.46 north latitude and 50.14 west longitude.

The Marconi station at Cape Race notified the Allan liner Virginian, the captain of which immediately advised that he was proceeding for the scene of the disaster.

The Virginian at midnight was about 170 miles distant from the Titanic and expected to reach that vessel about 10 a. m. Monday.

2 A. M. MONDAY.

The Olympic at an early hour this (Monday) morning was in latitude 40.32 north and longitude 61.18 west. She was in direct communication with the Titanic and is now making all haste toward her.

The steamship Baltic also reported herself as about 200 miles east of the Titanic and was making all possible speed toward her.

The last signals from the Titanic were heard by the Virginian at 12.27 a. m.

The wireless operator on the Virginian says these signals were blurred and ended abruptly.

VESSELS IN VICINITY OF STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

At this time the committee thinks it advisable to invite attention to the reported positions of the vessels in the vicinity of the Titanic when her calls of distress were being sent out.

The Californian, of the Leyland Line, west bound, was in latitude 42° 05′ north, longitude 50° 07′ west, and was distant in a northerly direction 19½ miles according to the captain's figures (p. 716).

The Mount Temple, of the Canadian Pacific Railroad line, west bound, was in latitude 41° 25′ north, longitude 51° 14′ west, and was about 49 miles to the westward of the Titanic (pp. 759 and 760) and on her return to the Titanic's position passed an unknown schooner.

The Carpathia, of the Cunard Line, east bound, was 58 miles away, and she steered a course north 52° west to reach the Titanic (p. 20).

The Birma, a Russian ship, was 70 miles off at 12.25 a. m. on Monday, the 15th of April (pp. 780 and 929).

The Frankfurt, of the North German Lloyd Line, east bound, was in latitude 39° 47′ north, longitude 52° 10′ west, 153 miles to the southwest (p. 772).

The Virginian at midnight was about 170 miles distant from the Titanic (p. 175).

The Baltic, of the White Star Line, east bound, was about 243 miles southeast of the Titanic's position at about 11 o'clock Sunday evening, New York time (p. 1053).

The Olympic, of the White Star Line, east bound, at 12.14, New York time, was about 512 miles to the westward, in latitude 40° 22′ north, longitude 61° 18′ west (p. 771).

STEAMSHIP LIGHT SEEN FROM STEAMSHIP "TITANIC."

Sixteen witnesses from the Titanic, including officers and experienced seamen, and passengers of sound judgment, testified to seeing the light of a ship in the distance, and some of the lifeboats were directed to pull for that light, to leave the passengers, and to return to the side of the Titanic. The Titanic fired distress rockets and attempted to signal by electric lamp and Morse code to this vessel. At about the same time the officers of the Californian admit seeing rockets in the general direction of the Titanic and say that they immediately displayed a powerful Morse lamp, which could be easily seen a distance of 10 miles, while several of the crew of the Californian testify that the side lights of a large vessel going at full speed were plainly visible from the lower deck of the Californian at 11.30 p. m., ship's time, just before the accident. There is no evidence that any rockets were fired by any vessel between the Titanic and the Californian, although every eye on the Titanic was searching the horizon for possible assistance.

THE STEAMSHIP "CALIFORNIAN'S" RESPONSIBILITY.

The committee is forced to the inevitable conclusion that the Californian, controlled by the same company, was nearer the Titanic than the 19 miles reported by her captain, and that her officers and crew saw the distress signals of the Titanic and failed to respond to them in accordance with the dictates of humanity, international usage, and the requirements of law. The only reply to the distress signals was a counter signal from a large white light which was flashed for nearly two hours from the mast of the Californian. In our opinion such conduct, whether arising from indifference or gross carelessness, is most reprehensible and places upon the commander of the Californian a grave responsibility. The wireless operator of the Californian was not aroused until 3.30 a. m., New York time, on the morning of the 15th, after considerable conversation between officers and members of the crew had taken place abroad that ship regarding these distress signals or rockets, and was directed by the chief officer to see if there was anything the matter, as a ship had been firing rockets during the night (p. 736). The inquiry thus set on foot immediately disclosed the fact that the Titanic had sunk. Had assistance been promptly proffered, or had the wireless operator of the Californian remained a few minutes longer at his post on Sunday evening, that ship might have had the proud distinction of rescuing the lives of the passengers and crew of the Titanic.

INTERNATIONAL SIGNALS OF DISTRESS AT SEA.

The committee deems it important to emphasize the meaning of signals of distress and includes in its report the international code, which is as follows.

Signals of distress.

When a vessel is in distress and requires assistance from other vessels or from the shore, the following shall be the signals to be used or displayed by her, either together or separately:

In the daytime.

(1) A gun or other explosive signal fired at intervals of about a minute.

(2) The international code signal of distress indicated by NC.

(3) The distant signal, consisting of square flag, having either above or below it a ball or anything resembling a ball. (This is purely a code signal, and is not one of the signals of distress given in the Rules of the Road, the needless exhibition of which entails penalties upon the master of the vessel displaying it.)

(4) The distant signal, consisting of a cone, point upward, having either above it or below it a ball or anything resembling a ball.

(5) A continuous sounding with any fog-signal apparatus.

At night.

(1) A gun or other explosive signal fired at intervals of about a minute.

(2) Flames on the vessel (as from a burning tar barrel, oil barrel, etc.).

(3) Rockets or shells, throwing stars of any color or description, fired one at a time at short intervals.

(4) A continuous sounding with any fog-signal apparatus.

STEAMSHIP "TITANIC'S" LIFEBOATS CLEARED AWAY.

When Capt. Smith received the reports as to the water entering the ship he promptly gave the order to clear away the lifeboats (p. 233), and later orders were given to put women and children into the boats. During this time distress rockets were fired at frequent intervals.

The lack of preparation was at this time most noticeable. There was no system adopted for loading the boats; there was great indecision as to the deck from which boats were to be lowered; there was wide diversity of opinion as to the number of the crew necessary to man each boat; there was no direction whatever as to the number of passengers to be carried by each boat, and no uniformity in loading them. On one side only women and children were put in the boats, while on the other side there was almost an equal proportion of men and women put into the boats, the women and children being given the preference in all cases. The failure to utilize all lifeboats to their recognized capacity for safety unquestionably resulted in the needless sacrifice of several hundred lives which might otherwise have been saved.

CAPACITY OF LIFEBOATS NOT UTILIZED.

The vessel was provided with lifeboats, as above stated, for 1,176 persons, while but 706 were saved. Only a few of the ship's lifeboats were fully loaded, while others were only partially filled. Some were loaded at the boat deck and some at the A deck, and these were successfully lowered to the water. The twentieth boat was washed overboard when the forward part of the ship was submerged, and in its overturned condition served as a life raft for about 30 people, including Second Officer Lightoller. Wireless Operators Bride and Phillips (the latter dying before rescue), passengers Col. Gracie and Mr. Jack Thayer, and others of the crew, who climbed upon it from the water at about the time the ship disappeared.

LIFEBOAT DEVICES.

Had the sea been rough it is questionable whether any of the lifeboats of the Titanic would have reached the water without being damaged or destroyed. The point of suspension of the Titanic's boats was about 70 feet above the level of the sea. Had the ship been rolling heavily the lifeboats as they were lowered would have swung out from the side of the ship as it rolled toward them and on the return roll would have swung back and crashed against its side. It is evident from the testimony that as the list of the Titanic became noticeable the lifeboats scraped against the high side as they were being lowered. Every effort should be made to improve boat-handling devices and to improve the control of boats while being lowered.

CONFLICT IN LIFEBOAT REPORTS.

In the reports of the survivors there are marked differences of opinion as to the number carried by each lifeboat. In lifeboat No. 1, for instance, one survivor reports 10 in all. The seaman in charge reports 7 of the crew and 14 to 20 passengers (p. 574). The officer who loaded this boat estimated that from 3 to 5 women and 22 men were aboard (pp. 404 and 405). Accepting the minimum report as made by any one survivor in every boat, the total far exceeds the actual number picked up by the Carpathia.

NO DISTINCTION BETWEEN PASSENGERS.

The testimony is definite that, except in isolated instances, there was no panic. In loading boats no distinction was made between first, second, and third class passengers, although the proportion of lost is larger among third-class passengers than in either of the other classes. Women and children, without discrimination, were given preference.

Your committee believes that under proper discipline the survivors could have been concentrated into fewer boats after reaching the water, and we think that it would have been possible to have saved many lives had those in charge of boats thus released returned promptly to the scene of the disaster.

CONDUCT ON LIFEBOATS.

After lowering, several of the boats rowed many hours in the direction of the lights supposed to have been displayed by the Californian. Other boats lay on their oars in the vicinity of the sinking ship, a few survivors being rescued from the water. After distributing his passengers among the four other boats which he had herded together, and after the cries of distress had died away, Fifth Officer Lowe, in boat No. 14, went to the scene of the wreck and rescued four living passengers from the water, one of whom afterwards died in the lifeboat, but was identified. Officer Lowe then set sail in boat No. 14, took in tow one collapsible boat, and proceeded to the rescue of passengers on another collapsible lifeboat.

The men who had taken refuge on the overturned collapsible lifeboat were rescued, including Second Officer Lightoller and passengers Gracie and Thayer, and Wireless Operators Bride and Phillips, by lifeboats No. 4 and No. 12, before the arrival of the Carpathia. The fourth collapsible lifeboat was rowed to the side of the Carpathia, and contained 28 women and children, mostly third-class passengers, 3 firemen, 1 steward, 4 Filipinos, President Ismay, and Mr. Carter, of Philadelphia, and was in charge of Quartermaster Rowe.

SHIP SINKING.

The ship went down gradually by the bow, assuming an almost perpendicular position just before sinking at 12.47 a. m., New York time, April 15. There have been many conflicting statements as to whether the ship broke in two, but the preponderance of evidence is to the effect that she assumed an almost end-on position and sank intact.

NO SUCTION.

The committee deems it of sufficient importance to call attention to the fact that as the ship disappeared under the water there was no apparent suction or unusual disturbance of the surface of the water. Testimony is abundant that while she was going down there was not sufficient suction to be manifest to any of the witnesses who were in the water or on the overturned collapsible boat or on the floating débris, or to the occupants of the lifeboats in the vicinity of the vessel, or to prevent those in the water, whether equipped with life belts or not, from easily swimming away from the ship's side while she was sinking.

CAPTAIN ROSTRON.

The committee invites your attention to the course followed by Captain Rostron, commanding the Carpathia. Immediately upon the receipt of the wireless call of distress Captain Rostron gave the order to turn the ship around and set a definite course toward the Titanic and instructed the chief engineer to call another watch of stokers and make all possible speed to that ship.

Realizing the possible presence of ice, because of the collision, Captain Rostron doubled his lookouts and exerted extra vigilance, putting an extra lookout on duty forward and having another officer on the bridge. The captain immediately instructed the first officer to "prepare all our lifeboats and have them all ready for turning outboard." He further sent for the heads of the different departments and issued the following order, which the committee deem of sufficient importance to quote in full:

English doctor, with assistants, to remain in first-class dining room.

Italian doctor, with assistants, to remain in second-class dining room.

Hungarian doctor, with assistants, to remain in third-class dining room.

Each doctor to have supplies of restoratives, stimulants, and everything to hand for immediate needs of probable wounded or sick.

Purser, with assistant purser and chief steward, to receive the passengers, etc., at different gangways, controlling our own stewards in assisting Titanic passengers to the dining rooms, etc.; also to get Christian and surnames of all survivors as soon as possible to send by wireless.

Inspector, steerage stewards, and master at arms to control our own steerage passengers and keep them out of the third-class dining hall, and also to keep them out of the way and off the deck to prevent confusion.

Chief steward: That all hands would be called and to have coffee, etc., ready to serve out to all our crew.

Have coffee, tea, soup, etc., in each saloon, blankets in saloons, at the gangways, and some for the boats.

To see all rescued cared for and immediate wants to be attended to.

My cabin and all officials' cabins to be given up. Smoke rooms, library, etc., dining rooms, would be utilized to accommodate the survivors.

All spare berths in steerage to be utilized for Titanic's passengers, and get all our own steerage passengers grouped together.

Stewards to be placed in each alleyway to reassure our own passengers, should they inquire about noise in getting our boats out, etc., or the working of engines.

To all I strictly enjoined the necessity for order, discipline, and quietness, and to avoid all confusion.

Chief and first officers: All the hands to be called, get coffee, etc. Prepare and swing out all boats.

All gangway doors to be opened.

Electric sprays in each gangway and over side.

A block with line rove hooked in each gangway.

A chair sling at each gangway for getting up sick or wounded.

Boatswains' chairs, pilot ladders, and canvas ash bags to be at each gangway, the canvas ash bags for children.

Cargo falls with both ends clear, bowlines in the ends and bights secured along ship's sides for boat ropes or to help the people up.

Heaving lines distributed along the ship's side and gaskets handy near gangways for lashing people in chairs, etc.

Forward derricks topped and rigged and steam on winches; also told off officers for different stations and for certain eventualities.

Ordered company's rockets to be fired at 2.45 a. m. and every quarter of an hour after to reassure Titanic.

The committee deems the course followed by Capt. Rostron of the Carpathia as deserving of the highest praise and worthy of especial recognition. Capt. Rostron fully realized all the risk involved. He doubled his lookouts, doubled his fireroom force, and notwithstanding such risk pushed his ship at her very highest limit of speed through the many dangers of the night to the relief of the stricken vessel. His detailed instructions issued in anticipation of the rescue of the Titanic are a marvel of systematic preparation and completeness, evincing such solicitude as calls for the highest commendation. The precautions he adopted enabled him to steer his course between and around icebergs until he stopped his engines at 4 o'clock in the morning in the vicinity of the accident, where he proceeded to pick up the Titanic's lifeboats with the survivors.

ON THE SCENE OF THE WRECK.

The first boat was picked up at 4.10 a. m. Monday, and the last of the survivors was on board by 8.30 a. m., after which Capt. Rostron made arrangements "to hold service, a short prayer of thankfulness for those rescued, and a short burial service for those who were lost."

Upon the arrival of the Californian upon the scene, about 8 o'clock in the morning, the captain of the Carpathia communicated with her commander, stating that all of the passengers had been rescued from the boats but that he thought one was still unaccounted for; and arrangements were made whereby the Californian made an exhaustive search in the vicinity for this missing boat.

Capt. Rostron stated that the Carpathia picked up 15 lifeboats and 2 collapsible boats. Evidence was given before the committee by at least one occupant of every lifeboat, satisfying the committee that the 16 lifeboats with which the Titanic was equipped were all accounted for. Thirteen of these lifeboats were hoisted on board and carried to New York by the Carpathia.

After arranging for a thorough search of the vicinity by the Californian, Capt. Rostron headed his vessel for New York, reporting immediately by wireless to the officials of his company in New York, as follows:

NEW YORK, latitude 41.45; longitude 50.20 west.—Am proceeding New York, unless otherwise ordered, with about 800, after having consulted with Mr. Ismay and considering the circumstances. With so much ice about consider New York best. Large number icebergs and 20 miles field ice with bergs amongst.

BODIES NOT VISIBLE.

The committee directs attention to the fact that Captain Rostron, of the Carpathia, although four hours in the vicinity of the accident, saw only one body, and that Captain Lord, of the Californian, who remained three hours in the vicinity of the wreckage, saw none. The failure of the captain of the Carpathia, of the captain of the Californian, and of the captain of the Mount Temple to find bodies floating in that vicinity in the early morning of the day following can only be accounted for on the theory that those who went down with the ship either did not rise to the surface or were carried away or hidden by the extensive ice floe which during the night came down over the spot where the ship disappeared, while those bodies which have been found remote from the place where the ship went down were probably carried away from the scene by the currents or by the movement of the ice.

WIRELESS SERVICE.

Numerous wireless messages of an official character were given to the operator on the Carpathia on Monday morning, April 15, with explicit instructions from the captain to send them immediately, and, if necessary, relay through other vessels.

Captain Rostron's testimony on this point before the committee on April 19, 1912, the day following his arrival in New York, is unqualified upon this point, and is as follows:

"From the very commencement I took charge of the whole thing and issued orders that every message sent would be sent under my authority, and no message was to be sent unless authorized by me. My orders were: First of all, the two official messages. The two official messages were to the Cunard Co. and the White Star Co., as regards the accident, telling them that I had gotten approximate number of passengers aboard and was returning to New York. That was to the White Star Co., and the other one was to our company, of course, telling them that I was proceeding to New York unless otherwise ordered, and considered New York the best for many considerations.

"After those two messages were sent, I sent a press message to the Associated Press, practically in the same words as I had sent to the companies, over my signature.

"Those were the three first messages that were sent. After these messages were sent, we began sending in the names of the first-class passengers. This was by the Olympic on Monday evening. We got the first, and, I think, all the second, off by the Olympic. Then we lost touch.

"I controlled the whole thing through my orders. I said I placed official messages first. After they had gone and the first press message, then the names of the passengers. After the names of the passengers and crew had been sent my orders were to send all private messages from the Titanic's passengers first in the order in which they were given in to the purser; no preference to any message."

The question having arisen as to the authority exercised over the operator of the Carpathia, the chairman of the subcommittee sent the following cablegram to Captain Rostron.

NEW YORK, May 4, 1912.

To Captain ROSTRON,
Cunard Steamship "Carpathia," Gibraltar:

Original wireless message sent by Bruce Ismay addressed Islefrank, New York City, immediately after he boarded Carpathia Monday morning, April 15, containing these words, "Deeply regret advise you Titanic sank this morning after collision iceberg, resulting serious loss life. Further particulars later," signed Bruce Ismay, is now in my possession. Ismay under oath waived secrecy, and I desire cable from you containing contents of that message and any memoranda thereon showing hour and date when sent by Carpathia operator and through what ship or shore station. Also whether relayed through other ship station. Also whether operator was forbidden by you to communicate such message or any other message via steamships Californian and Olympic. Also whether operator was prevented by you from sending this message or any other concerning accident. Cable answer collect to me, Washington.

WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Chairman Senate Subcommittee.

And received the following reply:

GIBRALTAR, May 18, 1912.

Senator WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Chairman Senate Subcommittee, Washington:

Ismay's telegram begins "Islefrank, New York; deeply regret advise you Titanic sunk this morning, 15th, after collision with iceberg, resulting serious loss of life; further particulars later. Bruce Ismay, Exe." (ends). Purser asked my permission to send it, which I granted. As it was official message, Ismay mentally very ill at time, our purser asked him to add last three words; now find sent through Sable Island 17th April. Message given to purser afternoon of 15th; purser took message to Operator Cottam personally and gave my permission to send early as possible. I did not forbid relaying message to any ship. On contrary, particularly mentioned doing all possible to get official messages, names of survivors, then survivors' messages away by most convenient means. By Olympic were sent my messages signed by self to Cunard, Liverpool, and New York, White Star, and press messages, Ismay's, almost identical with mine; worked Olympic as long as possible. Only messages I prevented sending were further press messages. I desire full investigation my actions.

ROSTRON.

10.40 p. m.

Notwithstanding the specific instructions of the captain to the wireless operator on the morning of April 15 regarding the transmission of Mr. Ismay's message to Mr. Franklin in New York, the evidence shows that the message in question was not received by Mr. Franklin until about 9 o'clock Wednesday morning, April 17. The original message, in the possession of the committee, shows that the message was transmitted from the Carpathia, April 17, via Halifax. Our investigation discloses the fact that the message was delivered to Mr. Franklin in New York promptly after its receipt by the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co.

The message in question is as follows:

STEAMSHIP CARPATHIA, April 17, 1912 (via Halifax).

ISLEFRANK, N. Y. C.:

Deeply regret advise you Titanic sank this morning, after collision iceberg, resulting serious loss life. Further particulars later.

BRUCE ISMAY.

This message was received by Mr. Franklin in New York about 9 a. m. April 17.

PUBLIC INFORMATION.

The record further discloses the first official information concerning the disaster communicated to the public by the officials of the White Star Line was received from Capt. Haddock, of the Olympic, at 6.16 p. m. Monday, April 15, as follows:

Carpathia reached Titanic's position at daybreak. Found boats and wreckage only. Titanic had foundered about 2.20 a. m. in 41.16 north, 50.14 west. All her boats accounted for. About 675 souls saved, crew and passengers, latter nearly all women and children. Leyland Line steamship Californian remaining and searching position of disaster. Carpathia returning to New York with survivors; please inform Cunard.

HADDOCK.

Notwithstanding this information in possession of the officials of that company, a telegram was sent to Representative J. A. HUGHES, Huntington, W. Va., dated New York, April 15, 1912, reading as follows:

Titanic proceeding to Halifax. Passengers will probably land there Wednesday all safe.

WHITE STAR LINE.

8.27 p. m.

The committee have been unable to fix the identity of the author of this telegram. We find, however, that this message was delivered to the Western Union branch office, in the same building as the offices of the White Star Line, 11 Broadway, at 7.51 p. m. on that day, but are left wholly in doubt as to the person who sent it or the purpose of the author in sending such a message. Whoever sent this message, under the circumstances, is guilty of the most reprehensible conduct.

INFORMATION WITHHELD.

The committee does not believe that the wireless operator on the Carpathia showed proper vigilance in handling the important work confided to his care after the accident. Information concerning an accident at sea had been used by a wireless operator prior to this accident for his own advantage. That such procedure had been permitted by the Marconi Co. may have had its effect on this occasion. The disposition of officials of the Marconi Co. to permit this practice and the fact of that company's representatives making the arrangements for the sale of the experiences of the operators of the Titanic and Carpathia subjects the participants to criticism, and the practice should be prohibited. The committee are pleased to note that Mr. Marconi approves of such prohibition.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

The committee finds that this accident clearly indicates the necessity of additional legislation to secure safety of life at sea.

By statute the United States accepts reciprocally the inspection certificates of foreign countries having inspection laws approximating those of the United States. Unless there is early revision of inspection laws of foreign countries along the lines laid down hereinafter, the committee deems it proper that such reciprocal arrangements be terminated, and that no vessel shall be licensed to carry passengers from ports of the United States until all regulations and requirements of the laws of the United States have been fully complied with.

The committee recommends that sections 4481 and 4488, Revised Statutes, be so amended as to definitely require sufficient lifeboats to accommodate every passenger and every member of the crew. That the importance of this feature is recognized by the steamship lines is indicated by the fact that on many lines steps are being taken to provide lifeboat capacity for every person on board, including crew; and the fact of such equipment is being widely advertised. The president of the International Mercantile Marine Co., Mr. Ismay, definitely stated to the committee (p. 985):

"We have issued instructions that none of the ships of our lines shall leave any port carrying more passengers and crew than they have capacity for in the lifeboats."

Not less than four members of the crew, skilled in handling boats, should be assigned to every boat. All members of the crew assigned to lifeboats should be drilled in lowering and rowing the boats not less than twice each month, and the practice of such drill or practice should be noted in the log.

The committee recommends the assignment of passengers and crew to lifeboats before sailing; that occupants of certain groups of staterooms and the stewards of such groups of rooms be assigned to certain boats most conveniently located with reference to the rooms in question; the assignment of boats and the shortest route from stateroom to boat to be posted in every stateroom.

The committee recommends that every ocean steamship carrying 100 or more passengers be required to carry 2 electric searchlights.

The committee finds that this catastrophe makes glaringly apparent the necessity for regulation of radiotelegraphy. There must be an operator on duty at all times, day and night, to insure the immediate receipt of all distress, warning, or other important calls. Direct communication either by clear-speaking telephone, voice tube, or messenger must be provided between the wireless room and the bridge, so that the operator does not have to leave his station. There must be definite legislation to prevent interference by amateurs and to secure secrecy of radiograms or wireless messages. There must be some source of auxiliary power, either storage battery or oil engine, to insure the operation of the wireless installation until the wireless room is submerged.

The committee recommends the early passage of S. 6412, already passed by the Senate and favorably reported by the House.

The committee recommends that the firing of rockets or candles on the high seas for any other purpose than as a signal of distress be made a misdemeanor.

The committee recommends that the following additional structural requirements be required as regards ocean-going passenger steamers the construction of which is begun after this date:

All steel ocean and coastwise seagoing ships carrying 100 or more passengers should have a water-tight skin inboard of the outside plating, extending not less than 10 per cent of the load draft above the full-load water line, either in the form of an inner bottom or of longitudinal water-tight bulkheads, and this construction should extend from the forward collision bulkhead over not less than two-thirds of the length of the ship.

All steel ocean and coastwise seagoing ships carrying 100 or more passengers should have bulkheads so spaced that any two adjacent compartments of the ship may be flooded without destroying the flotability or stability of the ship. Water-tight transverse bulkheads should extend from side to side of the ship, attaching to the outside shell. The transverse bulkheads forward and abaft the machinery spaces should be continued water-tight vertically to the uppermost continuous structural deck. The uppermost continuous structural deck should be fitted water-tight. Bulkheads within the limits of the machinery spaces should extend not less than 25 per cent of the draft of the ship above the load water line and should end at a water-tight deck. All water-tight bulkheads and decks should be proportioned to withstand, without material permanent deflection, a water pressure equal to 5 feet more than the full height of the bulkhead. Bulkheads of novel dimensions or scantlings should be tested by being subjected to actual water pressure.

Mr. NELSON. I make the request that the testimony taken by the committee be printed as a Senate document. (S. Doc. No. 726.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the testimony of witnesses taken in the hearings of the Titanic disaster inquiry be printed as a Senate document.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenues, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. BORAH. Is the unfinished business now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is now before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Richardson
Bailey	Culberson	Lea	Root
Bankhead	Cullom	Lodge	Sanders
Borah	Cummins	McLean	Simmons
Bourne	Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	du Pont	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Fall	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Bryan	Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Burton	Foster	Oliver	Smoot
Catron	Gallinger	Overman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Gardner	Page	Thornton
Chilton	Gronna	Perkins	Townsend
Clapp	Heyburn	Pomerene	Watson
Clark, Wyo.	Johnston, Ala.	Rayner	Williams

Mr. OLIVER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. PENROSE] is necessarily absent from the Chamber.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is necessarily detained from the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I send to the Secretary's desk an amendment intended to be proposed to the metal schedule bill. I will offer it when the time comes to offer amendments, and I understand that it will be accepted by the minority of the Finance Committee who have charge of the bill. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amend by changing the number of paragraph 73 to 74, by changing the number of paragraph 72 to 73, by changing the number of paragraph 71 to 72, and by increasing the free list by inserting the following as paragraph 71:

"Trace chains, plows, axes, spades, shovels, hoes, cane knives, briar hooks, rakes, scythes, sickles, pruning knives, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills, and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines and cotton gins, farm wagons and farm carts, whether in whole or in parts, including repair parts."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, before continuing my observations upon the amendment I have offered I desire to supply a word in paragraph 20, which was omitted either in writing the amendment or in printing it. I desire to insert the word "saw" after the word "steel," in line 5, on page 10.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will note the modification.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 5, in the proposed substitute, after the word "steel," insert the word "saw."

Mr. CUMMINS. The clause will then read:

And on steel circular-saw plates there shall be paid $3 per ton in addition to the rates provided herein for steel saw plates.

Reference to the comparative table prepared by the Finance Committee, I think, will show a very inadequate duty upon circular and steel saw plates, and the result in that comparison has been reached on account of the omission of the word I have just had inserted in the amendment.

I intend, Mr. President, to do what I think I have never done before in the discussion of any matter before the Senate; it is to ask that I be permitted to finish my remarks without interruption, for I have the greatest desire to speedily bring the debate to an end, and the subject is so vast that interruptions inevitably carry not only myself but those who engage in the colloquies into every part of the field we are examining.

The VICE PRESIDENT. So far as the Chair can, he will see that the Senator from Iowa is not interrupted.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt the Chair is in sympathy with the suggestion I have just made.

Last night, before adjournment, I was endeavoring to state concretely and briefly the basis of the amendment I have proposed. First, it is founded upon the assumption, which I believe to be sustained, and amply sustained, by the proof, that the average cost of making pig iron in this country is less, certainly not greater, than the cost of making pig iron in other countries of the world. Second, that with respect to all the heavier forms of iron and steel, ordinarily known as tonnage iron and steel, I have reached the duties which will be found in my amendment by assuming that the labor entering into the commodities, in whatever process is undertaken, from pig iron to the ultimate form, costs twice as much in this country as it costs in other countries.

Third, I have added to the duties in each instance an allowance that will fairly compensate for the additional capital involved in the production in America as compared with the production abroad. If I have faithfully complied with the rules that are involved in these three propositions it seems to me that the duties which will be found in my amendment must necessarily be protective, must preserve our market for our own producers, if our own producers are willing to occupy it with fair and reasonable profit.

It is said, especially by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], that the report of Mr. Pepper respecting the production of pig iron in Luxemburg, Germany, shows that it costs there less than it costs here. I believe it to be true that pig iron fit to be manufactured into steel can, in some parts of the Luxemburg district, be produced at less cost than such pig iron can be produced in some parts or in some mills of the United States. But we are endeavoring here to find an average cost, and I think therein lies the error into which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] was led, because he found one place in Germany in which pig iron could be manufactured a little more cheaply than the high cost in the United States. Taking Mr. Pepper's report as authentic and as reliable—and I am quite willing to do so—the Senator from North Dakota reached the conclusion that we ought to adjust our tariff duties with reference to that low cost. I do not think so; for if, as it seems to me, we take the lowest cost that can be found abroad and compare it with the highest cost that can be found in our own country, we will reach an end entirely unjustified by the doctrine itself or the interpretation which even my Republican friends put upon it.

We have found that the average cost in our country is less than the average cost in England. We have found with respect to part of the production in Germany that it is no less there than here. If we wanted to be entirely fair, we would compare the lowest cost in Germany with the lowest cost in the United States, and when we do we will discover that the United States Steel Corporation produced pig iron in 1910—that being the last year of which we have reliable information—more cheaply than, it is asserted by Mr. Schwab, by the Senator from North Dakota, or by Mr. Pepper, the same quality of pig iron can be produced for in the Luxemburg district; and to establish that I desire to refer again to the report of the Commissioner of Corporations.

On page 108 he submits a table know as Table No. 32. It is headed "Comparison of Steel Corporation's integration furnace cost per gross ton for Bessemer, northern basic, and southern pig iron, as shown by the records of the corporation, for 1910." The table itself discloses that there have been excluded the return upon the investment in any stage of the production from the mine to the furnace. The result is, as shown by the table, that in the examination of 6,269,534 tons of Bessemer steel the total was $9.71 per ton, and the southern pig iron, concerning which the investigation was carried over on a production of 585,273 tons, the cost was $8.57 per ton.

I instance this simply to show that if we are selecting in our country that place and that company in which and by which pig iron can be produced at its lowest cost, we will discover that we are doing quite as well as any blast furnace in the Luxemburg district.

In the same connection I desire at this time to indicate what the Steel Corporation was doing in the way of producing steel rails in 1910, and I refer to Table 38 of the report of the Commissioner of Corporations. This table is headed "Steel Corporation's mill cost per gross ton of heavy standard Bessemer rails, as shown by producing companies' cost sheets, approximate intercompany profits included therein, and integration mill cost, as shown by the records of the corporation, for 1910." The first item of the table shows a cost of $20.23. This includes all the intercompany profits. The last column of the table is headed thus: "Integration cost, exclusive of any return to investment on any anterior stage of production or transportation." And treating the production from that standpoint, the cost of producing steel rails to the United States Steel Corporation in 1910 was, per ton, $15.37, and I hazard this statement, that there is no other rail mill in the world, no matter where it is situated, that pretends to manufacture steel railway rails at a cost of $15.37 at the present time. I have mentioned these things in order to fortify my conclusion that upon the average we produce our pig iron as cheaply as it can possibly be produced abroad.

Now I come to the second paragraph of my general proposition. If what I have stated be true, what duty ought to be attached under the Republican doctrine upon steel rails? I have in my amendment named a duty of $2.50 per ton. The Democratic bill names a duty of 10 per cent. I refer to this table again in order to apply the rules that I have just suggested.

The labor cost in producing steel rails is $1.25 a ton. Steel rails from the ingots, the raw material, or all the material that enters into the production of a ton of steel rails, cost the average company in the United States $18.29. If I have shown anything in this somewhat extended discussion, I have shown that the raw material costs the company that manufactures it into steel rails a little less, I think very considerably less, than it costs any rail mill in Europe; and therefore we need no duty to compensate our manufacturers with respect to the cost of raw material, and in the raw material there is included the American labor standard or scale from the mine to the rail mill. If we credit the rail mill with raw material costing $18.29, we have already taken care of all the labor actually employed in the production of raw material, and by raw material I mean the form in which it is used in the rail mill. We have already seen that it costs in labor, upon the very same hypothesis, 61 cents to reduce the ore, the coke, and all other materials that enter into a ton of pig iron, and therefore we have the labor cost, and it is not asserted that there is any other cost greater in this country than abroad, save the capital cost, of which I spoke a few moments ago. We have a total labor cost for manufacturing a ton of steel rails from pig iron into the finished product of $1.86. There is no escape from that proposition. It can not, as it seems to me, be controverted by anyone who is willing to accept the investigation carried on by our own Government here and abroad.

I therefore apply the rule I have suggested: If our labor costs twice as much as the labor abroad for performing the same operation—and mark you I am only adding that for the purpose of meeting what I look upon as an unreasonable demand upon the part of my brother Republicans, for I do not believe the labor cost here is greater than the labor cost abroad, but I am assuming that it is—therefore it costs the foreign manufacturer one-half of $1.86, or 93 cents, in labor; and in order to equalize our own manufacturers it is necessary to attach a duty of 93 cents.

I mean to equalize the labor cost. I have attached a duty of $2.50 instead of 93 cents. I have done that because, first, I really wanted to satisfy my friends upon this side of the Chamber; second, because I do not want to approach the danger point; and third, because the capital employed in producing a ton of steel rails in the United States is somewhat larger than the capital invested in producing a ton of steel rails abroad. That is because it costs us more to build plants, our machinery costs us a little more, and I have, out of good measure, allowed the difference between the 93 cents a ton and $2.50 a ton to cover that contingency.

There is not a man in the Senate who, looking at it with a dispassionate mind, can establish the necessity for as high a duty as I have proposed. I am speaking of it now, of course, wholly from the standpoint of the duty required for protection and not for revenue. I do not believe there will be any considerable revenue at $2.50 a ton. If you wanted to get any revenue out of steel rails you would be compelled to reduce the duty to fifty cents a ton or a dollar a ton, and even then no very great quantity of this commodity would come into the United States.

I take now the next large item in the production of steel in this country—structural iron and steel—and referring to the same table it will be found that the raw material in a ton of structural steel costs $20.21. It costs no more here than abroad, and that again accounts for all the labor expended at the American wage scale in bringing the raw material into existence. The labor cost of structural steel is $2.15. That is all that labor does in turning a ton of ingots into structural steel. Now, adding to $2.15 the 61 cents for turning the pig iron into ingots, and we have a labor cost of $2.76. That is all. In every other respect we are upon equal terms with our rivals in other countries. But if it costs us more for labor than it does them, and if it costs us twice as much, then we ought to put a duty on structural steel of one-half of $2.76, or $1.38, a ton, and there is nobody anywhere who can vindicate or can justify a duty of more than $1.38 a ton except that we may compensate the additional capital.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Nebraska probably was not in the Chamber when I made the announcement that I hoped to pass through my speech without further interruption. My experience leads me to believe that if I do not follow a rule of that sort I will never get through.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa indicates that he does not wish to yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. However, I will yield at this time because the Senator from Nebraska was not in the Chamber at the time I made the announcement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have the Senator from Iowa reconcile in some way the difference between the labor cost, as he makes it out, in these finished products and the labor cost as made out by the Senator from Utah. I believe, of course, that the Senator from Iowa is much more accurate, but I can hardly reconcile the difference between the aggregate labor cost as made up by the two Senators.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did that last night. I do not know anything about the table used by the Senator from Utah. I have no reason, however, to doubt its accuracy. The reason that he does not reach the same result that I do is largely because he gives to labor in the antecedent forms or processes no credit for the cheapened material, for the cheapened transportation, as compared with our competitors in the other countries. For instance, when I say that the metallic mixture required to produce a ton of pig iron costs in this country $7.30, I have included in that all the labor expended in mining the ore and in transporting it, as well as the other material that is necessary to enter into the furnace with the iron ore.

Now, our iron ore costs us less than it costs abroad. Our coke costs us less than it costs abroad. Our coal is much cheaper, and the transportation is much less in most instances. I have not analyzed the table of the Senator from Utah, but I do not dispute it. I only know that the table that I have produced is the proof furnished by the Commissioner of Corporations upon this subject, and I intend to accept it.

Now, the duty on structural iron and steel ought to be but $1.38 a ton. I have put a duty of $3 a ton on it for less advanced forms, and $4 a ton upon the more advanced forms. I have doubled, as I said before, the amount necessary to furnish reasonably fair protection to this industry, and when anyone votes to maintain a duty upon structural steel of from $8 to $20 a ton, as the duties are under the present law, he votes to make the American people pay a price for this material which yields to the producer, where competition at home has been extinguished, an extortionate and indefensible profit.

In passing I may say that the duty placed upon this commodity by the Democratic bill is 15 per cent ad valorem. If the structural material is worth $30 abroad, the Democratic duty would be $4.50. If it is worth $40 abroad, the duty would be $6 a ton. So I think it can be said to be true that the specific duty which I have put upon structural iron and steel is somewhat lower than the duty named by the House of Representatives.

I now pass to the next great item of iron and steel, namely, merchant bars. The raw material in merchant bars costs us in this country $21.40 a ton. The labor of conversion is involved in three processes—first, from the pig iron into the ingot; second, from the ingot into what is known as sheet bars; and, third, into the bar itself. The first process involves labor of the value of 61 cents per ton, the second process of the value of 55 cents per ton, and the last of the value of $3.06 a ton, making a total labor cost for converting pig iron into merchant bars of $4.22.

This is again upon the hypothesis that our producers manufacture pig iron as cheaply as it can be manufactured anywhere in the world. If our labor cost was twice as much as it costs abroad for the same operations, we ought to put a duty upon merchant bars in order to just equalize that difference of $2.11. I have put a duty in my amendment upon bars of $3.50 for the larger bars, and $4.50 for the smaller bars. The Democratic bill attaches a duty on bars of 10 per cent. I think there is no material difference between the Democratic bill and my own in that respect, for merchant bars vary from $25 a ton to $50 a ton, and sometimes in very rare instances more; but I have added this additional duty solely to avoid approaching the danger point where we would be compelled to yield our markets to the other countries of the earth, and to compensate for the additional capital which we invest as compared with other countries.

I now pass to rods—wire rods—another very great article of commerce in this industry, the rods as shown by this table, and this is the table furnished by the Commissioner of Corporations. The material that makes a ton of rods costs our people $21.42. Again, there are three processes here—one in converting the pig iron into ingots; labor cost, 61 cents; then the ingot into bars, 55 cents; and again, the bars into rods, $1.53; making a total of $2.69 for all the labor—I mean the labor that we are trying to protect—involved in these three operations.

The duty therefore upon rods, to be mathematically accurate, should be $1.34½ a ton, and when we charge the importer $1.34½ a ton we have equalized the difference between the amount that we have paid for labor and the amount that he has paid for labor upon the hypothesis that ours has cost twice as much. I am proceeding upon that hypothesis, although I know it is not true in all instances. I think it is true that we pay double the wages that they pay abroad. I believe that is true, but with our greater production, with our more skillful operation, we are able to utilize, through machinery, labor in a way that they do not utilize it abroad, and we make it more efficient than they make it abroad in very many of the fields of industry.

But let us see what I have done. Although we need a duty of but $1.34 a ton, I have attached a duty of $4.25 a ton. I have done this, first, because there is a wide range in the cost of drawing rods or rolling rods. It depends somewhat upon the size of the rod. I have tried to name a duty that would protect the most expensive rod so far as cost is concerned, and in doing it I have put a duty upon the less expensive rods greater than the conditions of the trade require. Again, I have sought to keep our manufacturers free from unfair rivalry on account of the higher capital cost in our own country.

The Democratic duty upon rods is 10 per cent. I think it is somewhat lower than my duty, although I can not conceive that there would be any revenue derived under it.

The next article is wire. Wire, of course, comes from the rod, and therefore I will not go further back than the rod, as I have just been considering that article. I have found that the labor cost in a rod is $2.69 per ton. The cost of turning the rod into wire or drawing it, to use the technical expression, is $1.62 per ton according to the report we have before us. This, of course, does not include some of the finer wires that are used for pianos and other purposes, sometimes ornamental and sometimes useful. But the labor cost is $1.62 for the last operation, making a total labor cost for converting pig iron into coarse wire of $4.31 per ton. If England or Germany or France paid out half that much the labor cost there would be $2.16 a ton, and that is all the duty that under our platform could be attached to this article, except for the compensation of capital. I have put a duty upon this wire of from $5 to $8 a ton—more than double the amount required under the computation I have just made; and I have done it for the very same reason that I have given with respect to other commodities. I do not want the foreign manufacturer to be able to enter our markets. I want them all to be abundantly high to protect every interest at home, but I do not want them to be so high that our own manufacturer, freed from competition at home, can raise his price to any point his avarice may lead him.

I may say the Democratic bill puts a duty of 20 per cent upon wire.

The next item is what is known as sheet iron or iron and steel sheets. This is one of the principal commodities of the tonnage steel business. These sheets are, of course, taken first from the pig into the ingot, and then from the ingot or billet rolled into sheets, and there are three operations. The pig iron into the ingot costs 61 cents in labor. The ingot into the billet or the sheet bar costs 57 cents in labor. The bar into the sheet costs $10.39 in labor, making a total of $11.57 for turning pig iron into iron or steel. Upon the same hypothesis, our duty should be $5.75 per ton, and when we attach that duty we have equalized this difference of which our platform in 1908 speaks.

Now, mark what I have done. In my amendment I have attached a duty of $10 a ton upon the thicker sheets and $12 a ton upon the thinner sheets—almost double the amount necessary to measure the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the Senator would prefer to go on without interruption.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would rather go on and finish without interruption.

Mr. HEYBURN. I make the inquiry, because if we are going to vote on this amendment immediately upon the close of the Senator's remarks, some of the things will go out unanswered and the reading world may think there was no answer to them.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I will say that if after I have finished my remarks upon the subject any Senator desires to make any inquiry of me, I shall be very glad to answer it. I know that is not a very satisfactory way of debating, but as I remarked when the Senator from Idaho was out of the Chamber, I felt that unless I could go on without interruption I was likely, as a very distinguished lawyer in New York once said, to make my speech immortal by making it eternal.

Mr. HEYBURN. And unanswered.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not crave immortality of that sort.

Mr. HEYBURN. Would not the Senator also like to make it unanswerable rather than unanswered?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have no concern about that. I know that I am making it unanswerable. I am not so sure, however, that I can enjoy immunity from an answer.

I come now to another form of iron and steel that is well known by all true Americans, because it is intimately connected with what is known as the tin-plate industry. I mean black plate, a plate of steel prepared, gotten ready, made for the subsequent coating of tin or zinc or whatever may be put upon it. Black plate has the same process precisely that I have already instanced with regard to sheets, except the preparation of which I have spoken. The cost is first 61 cents from the pig into the ingot, 57 cents from the ingot into the sheet bar, and $14.19—now we are reaching labor, and a great deal of labor—$14.19 for converting it into the black plate. The total of these labor items is $15.37 per ton.

On the same assumption that we pay twice as much for doing this work as is paid abroad our duty upon black plate should be $7.64 per ton. Then we would be ready to start upon even terms, without regard to the transportation from the foreign country to our own, with the foreign producer.

But I have put a duty upon black plate of $12.25 a ton, before the acid or pickling process, in order to prepare it for the tin, and of $14.25 after being so prepared. I have again doubled, or substantially doubled, the difference in the cost of labor here and abroad, and it is impossible for me to conceive why anyone desires to maintain the duty which the Payne-Aldrich tariff law attaches to this commodity.

I have one other item and I shall have finished this review—universal plates. The universal plates are of course the cheaper form of plate iron and steel. The universal plates go through the same process practically—pig into ingots, ingots into billets, and then the billets into the plates. The total labor cost of performing those operations, as given by the Commissioner of Corporations, is $3.04, and a duty that will equalize us with the foreign countries, if we pay twice as much for labor as they pay abroad, would be $1.52 a ton. But I have put upon this commodity a duty on the cheaper forms of $4 a ton, and upon the higher-priced forms of 15 per cent.

Is there anyone here who will gainsay my proposition that this duty which I have named in the amendment covers the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, if I have established my proposition that the material itself costs no more here upon the average than it costs abroad?

Before passing, I will say that the Democratic bill puts a duty upon these plates of 15 per cent.

Now, Mr. President, I have finished my specific review of the heavier forms of iron and steel. I could pass through all the items of the schedule contained in the paragraphs which I have rewritten and could show, just as I have shown concerning the items I have already mentioned, that I have pursued a logical and, as I believe, a scientific method in reaching these duties. The duties have risen as the articles themselves have passed through various processes of manufacture, and the duty varies, as it should vary, with the labor that has been expended in production.

The remainder of this amendment is precisely like the dozen great items that I have already mentioned. There is no difference in principle. If what I have already passed over in detail is accepted as sound, then all these items which relate to the heavier forms of iron and steel are also sound, but I can not and must not take up each of these items for the purpose of performing, in the presence of the Senate, the mathematical operations through which the duties were reached.

I now come for a few minutes to consider those paragraphs in the amendment which cover an entirely different kind of commodities. Twenty-eight paragraphs in this schedule—I think I have named the right number—I have not rewritten at all; and the reason I could not vote for the bill passed by the House of Representatives is that, in my opinion, the duties upon these twenty-eight or more paragraphs are reduced in the House bill below the protective point. They cover high forms of production. They cover articles into which a very great deal of labor has entered. They cover forms in which the cost of the raw material is but a slight factor in the cost of the ultimate product.

I can understand perfectly how my Democratic friends, desiring to place duties at the point at which the maximum revenue will be derived upon their importation, have reduced the duties as they have, but they differ so entirely from the commodities I have just been considering, that from the protective standpoint the Democratic duties upon many of these things can not be said to be adequate and will not be efficient. Therefore it would be impossible for me, believing that we ought to award that full measure of protection of which I have been speaking, to consent to the reduction of duties shown in the House bill.

I have, however, in one or two instances reduced the duty even below the House bill. I mentioned one of them the other day. I have reduced the duty on automobiles from 45 per cent in the Payne-Aldrich law and from 35 per cent in the House bill to 25 per cent. I do not think there is any justification from the protective standpoint of assessing a duty upon automobiles of 45 per cent. What I said a moment ago applies to automobiles and the labor cost in them. I have no doubt we pay men and women, if there are any women employed in our automobile factories, more than they pay them abroad; but because our production is so great we are able to use men in the management or the conduct of machinery, so that the efficiency of a single man is much greater in this country than it is abroad.

I desire only to mention one or two facts with regard to this industry, of which Americans ought to be very proud. France makes about 30,000 automobiles. The value at the factory in France of the 30,000 cars is substantially $50,000,000. Germany makes about 10,000 cars, with a value at the factory of about $20,000,000. Great Britain builds about 15,000 cars, with a value of about $2,000 per car. Italy, Belgium, and Switzerland have scarcely entered the race.

The United States will make this year about 175,000 cars. We make more than two-thirds of all the cars that are used in the world. We export cars of the value of more than $20,000,000 per year. Our export of automobiles is of greater value than the total value of all the cars made by either England, Germany, Switzerland, Belgium, or Italy. There is but one country that makes as many cars as the United States exports. We export these cars not so much as we do many other things to neutral ports, but we export these cars to England, to France, and to Germany. We export them because we can build a cheap car better and for a lower price than any other country in the world can build it.

It is not wise, as it seems to me, for us to maintain a practically prohibitive duty upon automobiles, because, first, we shall engender the spirit of retaliation abroad and we may shortly be excluded from a market that we very greatly desire; and, second, because while we import about $2,000,000 in value of automobiles, we export about $21,000,000 in value of cars, and our imports are largely, if not altogether, of the very highest priced cars. The importations do not seriously interfere with our production at home, and, under the proof that has been submitted, it can not be said that with respect to our manufacture the other countries of the world have any advantage over us. It can not be alleged that it costs more to produce a car here than it costs to produce it in either England, Germany, or France, although I readily admit that you can select a particular kind of car that would cost us more to build than it would cost in Germany or France. For the reason I have given I have reduced the duty from 45 per cent to 25 per cent. So much for automobiles.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him, as he has investigated the question, what does he find to be the relative cost of the cheaper cars in the European factories and the American factories?

Mr. CUMMINS. I hardly dare venture upon much of the history or explanation of this business, but I have heard this about it: The cars we export cost about from $1,000 to $1,200 each, while the cars we import come here in an unfinished condition mainly; that is, we import the chassis, and we ourselves build on the body principally, because they do not abroad manufacture these cars in sufficient quantities to warrant them in equipping to construct metal bodies, and our cars are mainly constructed with metal bodies. They have a great many advantages over the wooden bodies, and, therefore, we have adopted that kind of construction to a very great degree. So the cars come in from Germany, France, and England, in so far as they come in at all, in the unfinished condition of which I have just spoken. I think the average-priced value of the car or that part of the car coming would be more than $3,000.

Mr. BACON. The particular point of the inquiry that I made of the Senator was this: I desired to know, if he had the information, what was the relative cost of manufacturing in Europe and in this country of the cheaper grades of cars such as are commonly used?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think, Mr. President, that no one questions the fact that we can make the cheaper cars at a lower cost than can any other country anywhere.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator think that reducing the duty to 25 per cent—and I am very frank to say I am in favor of that personally—would increase the importation of that grade of cars?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I do not. I do not think that there would be any of the cheaper cars imported under any duty, however low it might be, but there might be some of the higher grade of cars imported under the duty of 25 per cent.

Mr. BACON. That are not now imported?

Mr. CUMMINS. That are not now imported. I think it would be a very excellent corrective. I think 25 per cent will measure the difference between the cost of producing the higher-priced cars here and abroad, and that when we put a duty on of 45 per cent, we have put a wall so high that only extreme taste or fashion will ever mount it.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon one other question, the Senator spoke of the fact that the number of cars manufactured in Italy was almost negligible. Do they, or do they not, manufacture a very high-grade car in Italy?

Mr. CUMMINS. They manufacture one car anyway of a very high grade in Italy.

Mr. BACON. I knew nothing about the number they manufactured.

Mr. CUMMINS. The number manufactured is very small.

Mr. BACON. I had my attention called to the fact that they manufactured there a very high-grade car; but I did not know the fact that they manufacture very few of such cars.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true. France manufactures the greatest number of cars in Europe. France has the largest export trade in Europe.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume that the reason we can make cars such as the Senator has been speaking of at as low a cost probably as any other country, comes from the fact that we make so many that we standardize them——

Mr. CUMMINS. Unquestionably.

Mr. GALLINGER. As we are competing with the world successfully in the making of bridges, because we have standardized our bridges, in contradistinction to our handicap in building ships, for we hardly build any, especially for the foreign trade, while England perhaps will have a dozen ships under construction at the same time; and the fact that she standardizes that particular kind of a ship enables her to build it much cheaper than she could otherwise possibly build one or we could build one. That is my view of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from New Hampshire has stated the whole case, and it might be emphasized by reference to instances. A factory in Germany that turns out 2,000 cars, or even 1,200 cars, is regarded as a large enterprise. One man works upon all parts of each machine, and it requires a long time to build a machine, just as the old shoemaker worked on all parts of the shoe that he finally turned out. We have one enterprise in the United States, I am told, that will in the coming year build 70,000 cars. That enables the company to standardize every part of the car. The parts are all convertible, and each mechanic has his own particular thing to make, and he can employ machinery in making it. That multiplies his efficiency; and that is the reason we can build these cars cheaper than they can be built anywhere else.

I now come to another paragraph, concerning which I think I ought to call attention. My amendment differs very materially from the Democratic bill with respect to zinc and lead. The House bill attaches a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem on the lead contained in lead ore. It attaches no duty whatever, as I remember it, upon the zinc in zinc ore; that is made free. I do not think it is wise either from a revenue standpoint or from a protective standpoint. I have not changed the duty upon lead ore or upon zinc ore. I do not believe the duty on either ought to be changed.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is, from the present duties?

Mr. CUMMINS. From the present duties. And I will explain why, inasmuch as this constitutes one of the prominent phases of that part of the bill which I have not rewritten and which is, therefore, allowed to stand. Lead ore is precisely like wool in one respect. The Tariff Board has reported that the cost of wool in this country varies all the way from less than nothing, paradoxical as that may seem, to 10 cents per pound.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is from a loss to a profit.

Mr. CUMMINS. And just so with lead. The cost of producing lead or lead ore differs quite as largely and as radically as does the cost of producing wool. The cost of producing lead in the Idaho district is one sum; the cost of producing lead in the Colorado district is another sum; the cost of producing lead in the Missouri district or the southeastern Kansas district is another sum. I pause for a moment to say that the present duty on lead no more than compensates the difference between the cost of producing lead in some of these mines, for instance, in the Idaho district. I do not believe that a cent and a half a pound, which is now the duty on lead in lead ore, is any more than the difference between the cost of producing the lead in Idaho and the cost of producing it in Mexico. The duty of a cent and a half a pound is a little more, in my opinion, than the difference between the cost of producing lead in Colorado and the cost of producing it in Mexico. So, if we reduce the duty on lead ore, the result necessarily is, that we close some of the mines that are now producing lead, for they can not continue to operate if the price is materially reduced. We do not produce more lead than we ought to produce and, therefore, viewing it from a protective standpoint, it seems to me that, inasmuch as we are not producing a surplus of lead, it would be contrary to the protective doctrine to reduce the duty on lead ore.

My remark with regard to lead ore is applicable as well to zinc ore. We can not produce zinc ore or zinc in this country as cheaply as it can be produced abroad; and the result of reducing the duty would, in my opinion, be the closing of many of our mines, which now are running to produce this commodity. So, therefore, I have not reduced these duties at all. I have not changed them.

But we pass now to the next stage. I have reduced the duty in my amendment upon lead bullion and pig lead and the like from 2⅛ cents per pound to 1⅞ cents per pound. I have reduced it because I do not believe that the differential can be defended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware that the Senator said at the beginning of his remarks that he did not wish to be interrupted, and if he still objects, I will not interrupt him.

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, I would rather the Senator from Utah would wait until I finish, and then I will be very glad to answer any question that he may propound to me. I want to make this part of my argument as concise as possible, because I have undertaken the very difficult task of convincing the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] that I have done right in reducing the duty on lead bullion and pig lead from 2⅛ cents per pound to 1⅞ cents per pound.

Again I introduce the parallel of the wool schedule. We put a certain duty on wool, and then, when we come to ascertain what duty ought to be placed upon the manufactures of wool, we endeavor to compensate the manufacturers for the increase, hypothetical or real, as the case may be, in his raw material occasioned by the duty upon it. So we ought to do with the lead manufacturer. I have put a duty of a cent and a half a pound on the lead in the ore, precisely as it is now in the law. Then, I give to the manufacturer or the smelter, first, the cent and a half a pound, which I have already put upon the raw material, namely, the lead in the ore, and, then, I have to ascertain the difference between the cost of reducing lead ore in this country and reducing lead ores in other countries. Our Republican platform requires us to give to that smelter just the difference between the cost of doing his work here and what it costs abroad. We have given him under the Payne-Aldrich tariff law the difference between a cent and a half a pound and 2⅛ cents a pound, or five-eighths of a cent per pound, for the purpose of compensating him for his increased labor charge. What does that mean? It means that the smelter for his protective duty—not compensatory duty, for I have already given him that in the cent and a half—but for his protective duty he is given an advantage of $12.50 a ton. That is more than it costs in the United States to reduce lead ore to lead bullion or pig lead. It is more than the smelter pays all told—I mean in labor—for doing that work.

Therefore I have reduced that differential, as I called it a few moments ago, or protective duty, as I had better call it, from five-eighths of a cent per pound to three-eighths of a cent per pound. Three-eighths of a cent per pound means $7.50 per ton, and I do not believe that it will ever be contended here or anywhere else that it costs the lead smelters in this country $7.50 per ton more than it costs the lead smelters in other countries to take ore and convert it into lead bullion or pig lead.

What I have said with regard to the lead smelter applies also to the zinc smelter, for I have pursued precisely the same policy, and I have adjusted the rates in the case of zinc in the same way that I have the rates for the lead smelter.

Mr. President, I fear that some errors which have crept into the comparative statement, to which I have referred more than once, may have made an impression on some Members of the Senate, especially upon this side. I called the attention of the Senator from Utah several days ago to the utter inaccuracy of attempting to reduce specific duties to ad valorem duties where the specific duties cover the same article with a wide range of prices or values. You will find in this comparative statement, I think, two or three articles on which it appears I have reduced the duties to an abnormally low point—covering only two or three articles, however—to a point of 4 or 5 per cent ad valorem. I have not the time, and I will not take the time, to analyze those items. I only ask that if any one of you has happened to take them up for the purpose of judging of the merits of my amendment, you will not forget to trace the article to its place, not only in the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, but in the amendment I have proposed, and you will find that in these two or three articles—they cover not very important items, it is true—the whole error lies in attempting to group commodities that vary from 1 cent a pound to 10 cents a pound in a single bracket and in reducing specific duties to ad valorem duties covering that tremendous range of values.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question with reference to his lead schedule?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wondered if the Senator had ascertained that the vast quantity of lead ores produced in this country are of low grade, while a very large proportion of the lead ores in Mexico are of high grade, and if so, whether he has taken that fact into consideration in fixing the differential of three-eighths of a cent per pound?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In other words, if I may illustrate my question, it will cost more to extract a pound of lead from a ton of low-grade ore than it will to extract a pound of lead from a ton of high-grade ore.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah has stated a fact with which, I am sure, we will all agree. Ordinarily it does cost more to extract a ton of lead from low-grade ore than a ton of lead from high-grade ore, and I have taken that into full consideration, because I have attached a differential of $7.50 a ton, and I do not believe there is a smelter in the United States in which the cost is $7.50 a ton for converting our own grade of lead ore into lead. I have attempted to draw as far away as possible from the danger point upon that item as I have upon all others.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I understand, in the Missouri lead-ore districts the lead ores contains no silver, or comparatively little silver, while the Mexican ores are silver-lead ores, sometimes containing a very large amount of silver. I desire to ask whether or not the Senator has taken that into consideration in making his schedule?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I have not taken that into consideration, because that would pertain to the duty on lead ore, and I have not changed the duty on lead ore; it remains at 1½ cents per pound as it is under the present law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The point to which I wanted to direct the Senator's attention was that the lead in Mexican ores, which contain a high percentage of silver, might be regarded as a by-product and the cost of extracting the lead would be little or nothing, because the silver in the ores themselves would justify the smelting, while in the Missouri districts, there being no silver, the lead is not a by-product, but is the very thing which the miner is after and which the smelter is after in reducing the ore.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah has stated, of course, a very difficult question. He has instanced a case in which it is utterly impossible mathematically or accurately to apply the Republican doctrine of protection, namely, to ascertain and enforce the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad. The Tariff Board, in dealing with wool, has assumed that everything but wool is a by-product, and if it applied the same principle to a silver mine in Mexico it would treat the lead as a by-product, and would probably come to the conclusion that it would probably cost nothing at all either to produce lead ore in Mexico or to produce lead bullion; but it is impossible to make any law covering all those disparities.

Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to one other item which I have changed radically among the 28 paragraphs not rewritten. Under the present law we levy a duty upon monazite sand and upon thorium and upon thorite, with its oxides and its salts, levying the same duty upon the latter as we levy upon the gas mantles, to make which the thorium is mined and manufactured. We have no hope, in my opinion, in this country of manufacturing or producing thorium. There is some monazite sand, it is said, in North Carolina that contains some thorium, but not in sufficient quantities to warrant its development. The United Gas Improvement Co., I think, tried hard to establish an industry there to produce its own thorium from American sand. I think its experiment was a failure, for it long since abandoned the effort, and it, the largest manufacturer of gas mantles in this country, imports its monazite sand from Brazil.

Now, I have rewritten this section on the assumption that it was our business to manufacture gas mantles, if we could, against the whole world, and inasmuch as we must import the raw material out of which they are made, it ought to be allowed to come into the country with as little burden as possible. I have, therefore, rewritten the section, taking the duty from monazite sand and from thorium and from gas-mantle scrap and retaining the duty of 30 per cent upon gas mantles. They are the real products in the manufacture of which American capital and American industry are now engaged. I hope earnestly that this change will meet the approval of the Senate, because I regard it as essential to the best interests of this industry. It is one of the infant industries. It is one of the enterprises which really needs the encouragement and support of our tariff law.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a case of second childhood. It was a great industry, and it languished, and now it is starting anew in life.

Mr. CUMMINS. The production of thorium in our country has never been a great industry and apparently never will be. If the Senator means that the production of gas mantles is a great industry, he is quite right, but he is not right in assuming it is in its second childhood. It is now in its superb manhood.

The difficulty it encounters—and we might as well speak frankly about it—is that a great corporation imports the monazite sands from Brazil and makes thorium for itself. It makes no thorium for sale. It would, I assume, if it could, exclude every other manufacturer of gas mantles in the country, but the independent manufacturers of gas mantles can not import monazite sands, because they do not do their business upon a sufficient scale to warrant it. But they are compelled to import thorium or the oxide of thorium and use that in the manufacture of gas mantles, and they ought to be given a chance fairly to compete with the large manufacturer by getting their raw material free, especially as there is no reasonable hope that we will be able to furnish that raw material for many years to come, if ever.

One other section I have added to these 28 paragraphs of which I have spoken. I have made a new paragraph for metal molds—for the pattern maker in metal. He is not sufficiently protected now. The metal pattern is allowed to go with the other forms—the merchantable forms of iron and steel. The metal pattern is not for sale. It is not in common use. It is made in order that there may be a casting made from it. It has to be most carefully, most skillfully fashioned in order to accomplish its purpose, which is to receive the molten iron or steel and then turn it out without injury or damage. I have added a new paragraph in order that the industry may be sufficiently protected. I hope that that also will commend itself to the protective patriotism of the Republican Senators.

Senators, I have completed a review of my amendment. I, of course, have not gone over every item. I can not do that, but I will be very glad to do it, in so far as I may be able, if anyone is interested in any particular paragraph.

With some exceptions, a part of which I have noted, I have reduced these 28 paragraphs 20 per cent as compared with the Payne-Aldrich law, and I believe that is all they ought to be reduced in order to furnish fair and reasonable protection to the manufactures of this country.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from Iowa what is the relative percentage of reduction made by these two bills that are presented to us?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no such thing as a relative percentage.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What is the percentage, then?

Mr. CUMMINS. These averages with which the Senate has been deluded so often have no meaning whatsoever. My bill in a general way is as low as the House bill upon the heavier forms of iron and steel. I think, upon the whole, it is as low. It is not so low, it is very much higher than the House bill, upon these more intricate forms and more highly developed forms of manufacture into which a great deal of labor has entered and in which the raw material is but a small proportion of the ultimate value. But it is utterly impossible to compare them by percentages. The House bill is an ad valorem bill throughout. My bill is a specific bill, so far as that principle can be applied without injustice.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say to the Senator that I have heard it alleged that the Payne-Aldrich bill fixes an average duty of about 35 per cent, the Cummins bill an average duty of about 22½ per cent, and the Democratic bill, or the House bill, an average of about 19 per cent. Would the Senator regard that as fairly accurate?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not. I do not believe that it means anything at all as applied to the business of the country. Of course it is accurate mathematically as applied to these figures——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator another question, and that is, in view of his experience in the Senate during the last four years in endeavoring to accomplish tariff reductions, whether he thinks the method we have been pursuing thus far has been a satisfactory method of reducing the tariff.

Mr. CUMMINS. I say with the utmost frankness it has not been satisfactory to me, if the Senator means the result.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state what I mean. Undoubtedly the majority of this body favor tariff reduction, but they favor it on differing principles, the Republican Party having regard to the difference in the cost of production here and abroad, with a fair profit to the manufacturer added, and the Democratic Party having regard to a gradual reduction of the duty toward a revenue basis. Now, the country expects a reduction, and the sentiment of both Houses—the majority—is favorable to a reduction. Can not the Senator suggest some method by which we could practically accomplish that reduction at this session?

Mr. CUMMINS. I can. If the Senator from Nevada and his associates will vote for this amendment, I think it will became the law of the land. Will the Senator from Nevada do it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is that the only suggestion?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is the only suggestion at this moment. I believe this amendment which I have offered proposes a fair and reasonable reduction of the duties on iron and steel; that it is logical, with some claim to scientific adjustment.

I understand what the Senator from Nevada is thinking about just as well as he does. If my friends the Democrats succeed in passing their bill, it will not become a law. Therefore we will have no reduction. That is, we are told it will not become a law. If, however, the Democrats will vote for the amendment that I have now proposed by way of a substitute, and we pass that, while I will not assure the Senator from Nevada that it will become a law, it has a better chance of becoming a statute of the United States than has the House bill.

Therefore, will the Senator from Nevada come to the aid of a somewhat perplexed progressive at this moment and secure the passage of this amendment?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say, Mr. President, that if the Democratic measure fails to receive the signature of the President I shall be glad to vote for the measure presented by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Ah! Then the Senator never will know whether it will receive the approval of the President or not unless he votes for it and thus enables it to become an act of Congress.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Undoubtedly we can remain here until the Senator's bill becomes a law, in the contingency of the refusal of the President to sign the Democratic measure.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I for one would be glad to have the Senator explain more fully the reasons why the Democratic bill would not be signed and why his bill would be signed. It might aid us in coming to a conclusion as to what is our duty in the matter.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will be very glad to do that. The Democratic bill is declared to be a purely revenue measure, and that there has been eliminated from it all of the protection that could be eliminated from it having regard to the revenue that is desired. The President of the United States is a Republican, and it would be easier for him to be persuaded that there is no protection or not sufficient protection in the House bill than it would be to persuade him that there is not sufficient protection in the amendment I have offered. I will be perfectly frank with the Senator. That is the reason I think if the House bill is passed there may be rocks upon which it may founder before it becomes a law.

Inasmuch as it is seen how recalcitrant a body of men I have to deal with on the other side of the Chamber, I want to address a word or two to my Republican friends. You are about to vote upon this amendment. I know that some of you do not believe that it is sufficiently protective, but I want to know whether there is a single one of you who will assert that it is not more protective than the bill which passed the House. I want to know if there is a single Republican who will dare challenge the bill in comparison with the bill that passed the House?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. I assume the Senator wants a reply.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Neither is protective. They do not sufficiently reach the word "protective."

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. I know the standards of the Senator from Idaho. I assume it does not fulfill his expectations as to protection, but the amendment I have proposed is more protective, even from his point of view, than the bill which passed the House and which is now before the Senate subject to amendment. The duties are higher in the bill I have proposed upon all the great forms of steel and iron—I mean the real manufactures of steel and iron—than in the House bill.

Mr. HEYBURN rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. You can not span a 20-foot chasm with an 18-foot bridge any better than you can with a 15-foot bridge. Neither of them will span the chasm. The Senator's amendment does not treat lead more fairly than the House bill. He dropped into one mistake. He made sufficient provision—that is, a satisfactory one—for the protection of certain classes—lead in the ores, for instance—and then permitted the lead to be mined and smelted outside of our country, at outside wages, and brought in in competition with our labor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course I know that an 18-foot bridge will not enable one to successfully cover a 20-foot chasm, but is it not true that it is easier to step from the end of an 18-foot bridge to the solid ground than it is to step from the end of a 15-foot bridge to the ground?

Mr. HEYBURN. If a man could not cover the 2 feet at all, he is just as far from his destination as if there were no bridge.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure the Senator from Idaho will have no difficulty in covering this negligible difference, even measured by his own standard. But I appeal from him, then, to the other Republican Senators, whose views may not be so rigid. The Senator from Utah and the Senator from Pennsylvania have both reviewed my bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania came near suggesting that I had busied myself with this bill largely for the purpose of doing something, and that really I had not decreased the duties seriously enough to occasion alarm.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to say to the Senator that I have no recollection of ever having intimated anything of the kind.

Mr. CUMMINS. I listened to the Senator from Pennsylvania, and that is the way I understood him, although I am frank to say that when his speech was published in the RECORD the intimation did not appear.

Mr. OLIVER. I said nothing that was not published in the RECORD.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well. I suppose as I grow older my ears mislead me and deceive me more and more.

Mr. OLIVER. Very likely.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I very distinctly caught that general notion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I speak of it in a gratified sense. I am using it as a compliment to the Senator from Pennsylvania, because if I may infer his real belief with regard to this subject from the speech that he made—and a very able and very interesting speech it was—he himself believes that there are many articles upon which the duties of the Payne-Aldrich law could be reduced without injury to the producers of iron and steel and to the great benefit of the general public.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], whose knowledge upon the details of the metal schedule—and I may broaden that to include every schedule of the tariff—is surpassed by that of no Senator either now or at any time in the past, who has been over the whole subject with a comprehensiveness of learning and a keenness of analysis which has never been excelled, was of the opinion that while some of the duties in the amendment I have proposed were too low, yet they are at least in the direction of protection; whereas the House bill was headed straight for the port of free trade.

I only instance these things, not to express a hope that either the Senator from Idaho or the Senator from Utah or the Senator from Pennsylvania would as a separate proposition vote for this amendment if it were in the form of an independent bill. I mention it for the purpose of appealing to them and to all the Republican Senators to vote for it as against the bill for which it is offered as a substitute.

What defense has any Republican here for voting against the amendment I have proposed when the question upon that vote is whether it is better legislation than the House bill? You are not expressing your opinion with regard to the wisdom of this measure; you are not saying to the country you believe the duties here imposed are sufficiently and adequately protective; you are simply saying that, as between a bill which is formed along the lines of protection—and which I believe is completely and fully protective—and a bill organized upon the doctrine of a tariff for revenue alone, you think this is the better bill. If you will vote your real consciences and your real judgments, I shall be entirely satisfied, no matter what the vote on the amendment may ultimately be; but what you intend to do, as I have been informed, is to vote against the protective amendment and in favor of the free-trade bill. What you intend to do is to refuse to substitute the bill I have offered for the revenue bill, because you think there would be less danger of the Chief Executive of the United States signing the revenue bill than of signing the protective bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. An objection which I entertain to the Senator's amendment or the substitute, whichever it may be termed, is that it is drawn or framed upon the hypothesis that no other business than that now established needs consideration or is entitled to it; upon the hypothesis that no new concerns, be they manufacturers of iron or steel or any of the articles enumerated in his bill; that no others are to follow; that the machinery and the buildings will last forever; and the men who are engaged in them will live forever.

Now, that is not the true spirit of protection. The spirit of protection is not only to maintain that which we have, but to make it possible for other similar enterprises to be born, to have their growth and others after them, and so on, forever. That is protection. But the Senator's schedule does not include the consideration of that proposition.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not claim that it does; and therein lies, possibly, the fundamental difference between the Senator from Idaho and myself. He desires—and I grant his absolute sincerity in the position—duties levied upon iron and steel upon the hypothesis that there has never been a mine opened; that there has never been a blast furnace erected or a rail mill established; that this whole country is a virgin continent yet to be explored and still to be developed; and he desires duties that would, under those circumstances, enlist capital in the work of exploration and production.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I do, as the Senator suggests, regard the opportunities of life in the business world in this country as absolutely virgin soil to the generations not yet launched in the business. To those who have not established business it is as virgin as ever, and that element constitutes the opportunity upon which the future greatness and wealth of the country must rest. If it rested only on the present generation, with present established business, with the existing capital, it would be only a question of a lifetime when it would pass out, or the men would pass out. But the true policy of protection goes as far as I have expressed it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the issue is clearly made between the Senator from Idaho and myself. If anyone believes that the duties upon iron and steel should be fixed upon the hypothesis that there had been no iron discovered, no furnaces erected, no railroads built, no rolling mills constructed, and that we were about to invite capital into this unexplored region, a country fertile and rich in its resources—if that were the situation, then the duties which I have proposed in my amendment are not sufficient. But if we are to take the country as it is, with mines of greater extent and greater richness than the mines of any other country in the world, with a railroad system that measures in its extent about one-half of all the railway mileage in the world, with rolling mills and furnaces and factories in full and complete operation, with a capacity to produce more iron and steel than any other country in the world now produces or has ever produced, then the duties which I have proposed will be found to be ample for the protection of a condition of that sort, and that is the condition which actually exists.

Now choose between the senior Senator from Idaho and myself. He is honestly of his opinion; I am honestly of mine. Speaking to the Republican Senators of this body, I want it published to the world whether you believe in the doctrine which he has so emphatically stated, or whether you believe in the doctrine which I have attempted to assert. If you vote with me and for my amendment the country will accept that vote as indicating an opinion on your part that the duties should be adjusted with reference to existing conditions. If you vote against my amendment, while I do not say it will necessarily be true, there will be much reason for the country to believe that you insist on retaining duties measured by the standard just asserted by the senior Senator from Idaho. One more word and I shall conclude.

We Republicans were taunted yesterday or the day before by a distinguished Senator on the other side of the Chamber with the statement that you, or enough of you to be effective, upon the final vote upon this measure, intend to absent yourselves and allow, by your absence and your silence, the House bill to receive a majority of the votes in this Chamber, although it is known by every Republican here and elsewhere that it does not embody the Republican doctrine. I was never so humiliated as a Republican in all my public life as to hear a taunt of that sort with no indignant response from the men to whom it was directed.

Tell me what you intend to do with regard to this amendment so far as that charge is concerned. Do you intend to allow a bill which does not pretend to meet your economic opinions and which is contrary to your fundamental beliefs to pass the Senate by refusing to vote simply in order to give the President of the United States a better opportunity, from his standpoint, to veto the measure? I do not believe that Senators will dare to repeat what was done a year ago upon the same subject covered by the measure now before you.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. A taunt is not to be taken very seriously when it comes from the opposition. The fair presumption is that the Republicans will vote for the principle of a protective tariff, and in my judgment—and I set myself up as the censor of no other man's principles—to refrain from voting your principles is as bad as to vote against them.

Speaking for myself, and I assume to speak for no other, there will be no absenteeism if I am in good health and able to be here when the vote comes; and I shall not vote for the House bill. I shall do what I can within legitimate means to prevent it from coming to a vote. I am not going to filibuster, and if it comes to a vote I shall vote against it. I shall expect the senior Senator from Iowa to do the same thing, because he does not believe—he has stated to-day and yesterday that he does not believe—in the justice of the tariff schedules sent here by another body and supported by the other side. I know the Senator well enough to believe that he, not believing, will not support.

Now, where are the votes to come from on this side of the Chamber to pass the Democratic measure, for—I dislike to use different words in describing Republicans—I will say the Republicans of this side must, in justice to the principles they profess, support the Republican measure and vote against the Democratic measure at any and all times. How can the minority's tariff measure pass this body, that being the case?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, of course it could not pass the body if all the Republicans were moved by the same sense of duty which actuates the senior Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. We are bound to assume that they are.

Mr. CUMMINS. I never dreamed that he would attempt to pass the House bill by refraining from voting. He did not a year ago.

But I reply now to the senior Senator from Idaho in respect to my attitude toward the House bill. If the House bill were confined to a reduction of the duties, as they are reduced in it, to the heavier forms of iron and steel, I would vote for it in a moment, because I believe it to be fully protective from our standpoint. But inasmuch as it reduces the duties upon the more highly organized manufactured forms of iron and steel to a point which I believe is not protective, I can not vote for the House bill, and I do not intend to vote for it. So there need be no uncertainty with regard to that particular matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa one single question. Does the Senator from Iowa think that the House bill is better or worse than the existing Payne-Aldrich law?

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe that the House bill, as applied to the iron and steel industry, is not so good as the Payne-Aldrich tariff law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked the Senator from Iowa that question, because there has been a great deal of discussion in the magazines and a great deal upon the floor of the Senate coming from the school of politics to which he belongs in denunciation of the Payne-Aldrich metal schedule, and I had hoped that even though the bill came from the Democratic Party he could find it within his heart to recognize that some good might come out of Nazareth; and as he has been contending for a reduction of duties, I had hoped that even though our scheme of reduction was not precisely his scheme—not exactly the scheme but very close to it—he might find it in his heart to vote in behalf of the great consuming public of America, in behalf of whom he has delivered very many very eloquent speeches.

I had rather hoped that we were both prepared to serve the people rather than our parties. I am. If the Democratic bill should fail, I would vote for the bill offered by the Senator from Iowa, because while I do not think it goes sufficiently far in reducing taxes upon the American people it is infinitely better than the Payne-Aldrich law, and I would be reduced to a choice between the Payne-Aldrich law and his bill. I had hoped that when he was reduced to a choice between the Democratic bill and the Payne-Aldrich law he would follow in the lines of his utterances.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I believed the Senator from Mississippi held the opinion that might be fairly inferred from the utterance he has just made, it would greatly concern me. But I have too high a regard for his capacity and understanding to make the inference which one might be inclined to draw.

I can not vote for the House bill, because I believe that upon a great many things it reduces the duty below the protective point. As I have said a great many times, being a protectionist, if I am forced to decide whether a duty shall be above or below the protective point, I must choose the higher point.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. Be calm. I would do so for the reason that if the duty does not come to the protective point it ceases to answer in any degree the protective principle. I believe the House bill applied to these heavier forms of iron and steel is not a revenue bill at all. I believe you are deluding yourselves upon that subject. I do not believe it is a revenue bill, because,

I do not think that the duties are low enough to invite any considerable importations of those commodities. I would therefore vote for that part of the House bill if I were driven to a choice between it and similar paragraphs in the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. It matters not to me whether the law or bill originates with the Democratic Party or with the Republican Party. I am not held so close to the hearts of our friends upon this side of the Chamber that I can refuse the kindly offices of sympathy from my friends upon the other side. I will vote for any measure, no matter from whence it comes, that will reduce the duties upon the Payne-Aldrich law, provided they do not reduce them below the point which will furnish fair and reasonable protection for our own people.

The difficulty with the House bill, as I have said, from my standpoint—it is perfect from your standpoint—is that with regard to the 28 or 30 paragraphs which embrace the advanced forms of manufacture of the Payne-Aldrich law, in my opinion you fall below, and in many instances far below, the level of protection.

If I were to vote to put those paragraphs of the House bill into the law and so expose the producers who are protected by them to the unfair competition or rivalry from abroad, I would be compelled to abandon a principle that I have held so long as I have known anything of political economy or of national politics, whereas the Senator from Mississippi, on the other hand, is not so situated. He believes in a tariff for revenue. Really I think he believes in free trade, and that is not disparaging, because if it were not for protection, as I said the other day, I would not raise the revenue of this country at the customhouses. But he believes in a tariff for revenue. Our tariff is higher than a revenue tariff, and any reduction on any duty is an approach toward the principle which he so ably and so eloquently espouses and advocates. Therefore he can, without any inconsistency whatever, vote for any reduction in the tariff duties and he will be entirely in harmony with the views that he has held his whole life long. But it is not so with one who views the economic question from the standpoint I have occupied.

Therefore I am sure the Senator from Mississippi will see that my earnestness for tariff reduction or the sincerity of my efforts for tariff reduction is not challenged by the fact that I can not, must not, will not go below that point which I believe furnishes the people of this country a protection which they can justly demand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa further yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield again to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Iowa has made a mistake when he says that I would vote for any reduction. I would not. I recognize that there confronts the American people a condition to which I would not apply my theory ruthlessly, or overnight, as the Germans say. I am not criticizing the Senator from Iowa. I have the highest regard for his sincerity. I believe him to be intellectually honest, and that is a very high compliment to pay to a man. I believe that he has intellectual integrity. I have not attempted to attack his sincerity or his integrity at all. I would be false to myself if I had attempted it. But it does seem to me that in his remarks to-day he has put himself outside the pale of those who differ with other men upon a question of principle, and has put himself in the pale of those who differ with them only upon a question of percentages.

The Senator from Iowa speaks of the "protective point." What is the protective point? If there be any real protective point it is the point of prohibition of foreign imports. Wherever a protective duty fails to keep out of competition with American producers the entire foreign production, whatever it may be, fails to any extent whatsoever, it fails just to that extent in being a protective duty.

Now, I have hitherto understood that the Senator from Iowa wanted a sufficient importation of foreign production to compete with American production to the extent, at any rate, of making the American producer treat the American consumer fairly. If I am mistaken about that I have mistaken the Senator from Iowa clear through. I have understood the difference between a protective prohibitionist, a reasonable protectionist, and a man who believes in a tariff for revenue. I do not understand what the Senator from Iowa means by the protective point.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Mississippi want me to explain now?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would be glad to understand it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have explained it a great many times, but possibly not in the hearing of the Senator from Mississippi. The protective point is that point at which the domestic producer can supply the entire domestic market.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah!

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. Theoretically I have stated the protective point. If the domestic price is raised above a fair one from the American standpoint, then the importation comes in. If the domestic price is kept at or below the American level, the importation does not come in, again theoretically. When, however, we are ascertaining or fixing the protective point, it being impossible to do it with absolute and mathematical accuracy, if it be fixed along the lines I have already stated, there will be in the very nature of things a certain importation. In order to exclude all importations the wall must be raised so high that it would be far above the protective point. If it is fixed as nearly as we can fix it at a protective point, trade and commerce, with their ebb and flow, will pass over the barrier and there will be a reasonable importation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, if I understand the Senator from Iowa, and I think probably I do, the protective point is the point of the tariff duties at which the American producer can supply the entire American market at a satisfactory profit.

I think that is a summary of what the Senator from Iowa has said. Where are we left when that definition is given? We have thousands of schedules, and the protective point is the point of tariff levy at which—and I am using now, in the first three words, the Senator's own words—the entire American market will be the field for the American producer at a satisfactory profit. The words "at a satisfactory profit" are mine, not his. Who is going to determine what the "satisfactory profit" is? How is it to be determined? Upon what basis? By whom? Are we to be left forever to determine this very important point by hearing the so-called testimony of so-called witnesses who appear in behalf of their own pocketbooks in order to make the best showing that they possibly can for themselves and against the public to the American national legislators? What will constitute a satisfactory or, as the Republican platform calls it, a reasonable profit? Who is to determine when it exists? Who is to determine when it is exceeded? Who is to determine what percentage constitutes it?

I come back to what I said. I think the Senator has extirpated all points of difference in principle between him and the Senator from Idaho. If the Senator from Idaho were called upon to testify as to what he thought was the protective point, he would say it was the point at which the duty was so high that the foreigner could not compete. If the Senator from Utah chief apostle in the church of protectionism, were called upon to define what he considered a satisfactory protective duty, he would define it in exactly the same way—that it was the rate of duty which gave to the American producer the American market, regardless of the American consumer.

The Senator from Idaho has said we are all consumers and we are all producers. With regard to any particular schedule we are not. Not 1 per cent of the American people are engaged either with their capital or their labor in making metal, and the other 99 per cent are engaged every now and then to some slight extent, more or less, in buying these numerous products. The trouble with the Senator's statement is that he has forgotten what he has sometimes previously dwelt upon so eloquently, to wit, the fact that the American consumer, the American buyer, has some rights. The negro upon my plantation who looks at the rear elevation of a mule day after day while he plows cotton and corn has some rights in this country when it comes to economical arrangements, though he does not make steel, though he does not manufacture wool nor cotton, and has nothing to do with the manufacture of those things

Mr. President, this brings me back to the Republican platform, and then I am through.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not inject a long speech into mine; but I have no objection to——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon second thought, Mr. President—I forgot myself—I have injected too much already, and I will leave off even the other sentence that I intended to put in now, but I could not well keep my seat in face of the last explanation of the Senator from Iowa. Before I take my seat, however, I want to say that I have just about as much confidence in the political integrity and the intellectual integrity of the Senator from Iowa as I have in my own, which last confidence is absolute, but I think he is making a great strategic mistake.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I never listen to the Senator from Mississippi without feeling a little better than before he began to speak. He has the faculty of lifting one up somewhat even while he criticizes him. I think I would rather have the compliment that he has just bestowed upon me than any honor that is likely to befall me. I do not agree with the Senator from Mississippi. I do not see that I have stated my belief in any other terms or in any other form than I have often heretofore stated it. I can not plead guilty to the accusation that in my estimate of the tariff the consumer is forgotten. On the contrary, as I said the other day, the difference between the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] and myself is that I always begin the consideration of a tariff schedule by thinking of the consumer and then of the producer, while others reverse the process of reflection.

I now feel, however, before I say the final word, which I must say in a moment, that I should yield to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who claimed my attention some time ago.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, referring to the legislative situation, I want to say merely a few words. I find myself in the position that I can not vote for the pending Democratic bill, and I do not want to vote for the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. There are many rates in the substitute I could approve, but, taken as a whole, it would be impossible for me to vote for it. What am I to do? Am I to vote for his amendment believing that if I did so it would become a law?

Mr. BAILEY. You mean the President would approve it?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know what the President would do. I can not say as to that.

Mr. BAILEY. It could not become a law unless he did approve it.

Mr. SMOOT. Or am I to vote against it and allow the Democratic bill to pass?

Let us look at the history of tariff legislation at our last session. The Republicans in this Chamber voted against an amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to the Democratic wool bill; they voted against the Democratic wool bill; and as soon as both of these bills were defeated, a Democrat immediately arose, asked for the reconsideration of the bill, and then the Democrats voted with a few Republican Senators, and the bill was passed. I may, on second thought, be mistaken as to the Senator who asked for a reconsideration. It may have been a Republican who asked for that reconsideration, but, be that as it may, every Democrat voted for the bill that they had a few minutes before voted against. We are told now that that shall again be the program; that if we vote against the Democratic bill and if we vote against the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa, as soon as that is done some Senator will ask for a reconsideration, and the Cummins amendment will be passed.

What am I to do, Mr. President, as a Senator believing in the principles of protection? Am I to allow this thing to happen, knowing that that is the program? I do not believe that it would be proper or right; I do not believe that the American people, when they understand the situation, will say that a Senator who believes in protection should sit here and allow a program of that kind to be carried out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. I want to ask him to do an exceedingly difficult thing for the Senator from Utah; I want to ask him to put himself in my place for the nonce with regard to the answer that he will make to the question I am about to ask him—that is awfully difficult, I know—but suppose he were a Democrat and in favor of reducing tariff taxes, and suppose that he had failed in getting through a bill which reduced them, say, 50 per cent, just for an illustration, and suppose he then had an opportunity to vote for a bill that reduced them 20 per cent, does he not understand that it would be absolutely impossible for him in our place to be true to himself and pursue any other course than that of supporting the next best bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I say, just as the Senator from Iowa has stated, that the Senator from Mississippi perhaps is consistent in his position and statement, but that is not all there is in this proposition. We know what the program is; and, as was stated by the Senator from Iowa, we were taunted with it by a Democratic Senator only yesterday. So far as that is concerned, it did not trouble me in the least, because I know the Senator who taunted the Republicans knew that that would be the program, and he will help to carry it out. Therefore, Mr. President, the Republican Members who believe in protection and in all that the word "protection" implies, unless a bill can be provided that all the Republicans can agree upon, I believe are justified in doing the very best they can to defeat a bill that they do not believe would be amply protective to the industries of this country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator from Utah sits down——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator from Utah sits down I should like to ask him one question. I do not know whether I understood him or misunderstood him; but I gathered from his speech the other day that he admitted that some of the duties in the metal schedule were too high.

Mr. SMOOT. I called attention to the fact that the rate on tin plate could be reduced, based upon the testimony of the men who make it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, having secured that confirmation of my recollection, or, rather, of my hearing, I want to ask the Senator a question: He is, of course, a great Republican constructive statesman, as all Republican statesmen are, and why is it that the Senator from Utah has not introduced a bill reducing those duties where they are too high even from his standpoint?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will not make his answer to that question long. I really think it is not quite fair to inject two such prominent figures as the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Utah in the foreground of my speech.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, the Senator from Utah——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa submit to interruption by another important character? [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINS. I do; I think, now that these two eminent gentlemen are grouped together, I might as well admit another.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, I wanted to make plain what the Senator from Utah intends for the initiated to understand, and that is, he is serving notice on you that Republicans like him intend to refrain from voting and let us pass the Democratic bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I understand that. He is not, however, serving notice upon me, but is really answering the charge that I made a few moments ago against him and those who are with him, that they were about to do that thing.

Mr. BAILEY. It is not often they can do so good a thing.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was trying to convince them that they ought not to do it.

Mr. SMOOT. That has been the burden of the Senator's speech here for the last half hour.

Mr. CUMMINS. Surely; and I think I have made a step in advance when they feel compelled to explain and defend.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They were forced into an experience meeting at any rate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes. Mr. President, as the Senator from Utah was describing that rather tortuous way which led him finally to the conclusion that he ought to pass a measure in which he did not believe at all in order to defeat a measure in which he believed partly, I could not help thinking of those lines which run something like this:

> Oh what a tangled web we weave
> When first we practice to deceive.

You are deceiving yourselves. Why do you not take on some of the candor and the courage displayed by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]? He will not flee this Chamber when the House bill is to be voted upon; he will sit here and record his judgment with respect to that bill; and I simply want all Republican Senators to accept him as a model in this respect—as an example—upon the vote about to be had. I do not ask the Senator from Utah to vote for a measure in which he does not believe; but I do ask—and I believe the country will ask presently—that Republican Senators shall sit here and record their honest beliefs respecting the subject, and not refrain from voting so as to send a bill to the President in order that he may veto it because it is a Democratic bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Iowa if he intends to insist upon the use of the word "first" in his quotation?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that was a mere act of memory, and I may not have correctly quoted the passage. It has been many years since I have had any occasion to apply it to anybody, and I therefore may have misquoted it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator quoted it correctly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any disposition on the part of any Republican to try to deceive anybody. I do not believe that there is any disposition on the part of the Democrats to deceive the Republicans or themselves. I think the program is known by every Democrat in the Chamber, and I think they have agreed to it time and time again.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. OLIVER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To whom does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I must insist on finishing my observations, and then the whole subject will be open for discussion. Indeed, I had finished——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I intended from the beginning that my last word should be a word of adjuration, of appeal to my Republican associates to stand up and be counted upon this subject.

You know that my bill is a better bill from the protective standpoint than the Democratic bill. Therefore I am entitled to your affirmative votes in order to substitute it for the House bill, and when it is substituted for the House bill, if you are not convinced that it is a better bill than the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, then record your votes against it. In that way the record of the Senate will be written with sincerity, with courage, and with some comprehension of our responsibility in the performance of our public duties; but do not, for conscience sake, permit any amendment or any bill to pass or to be defeated in order that an ulterior purpose or object may be accomplished.

Mr. President, I have finished.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator just one question. It is this: In all the tariff legislation from the beginning of tariff legislation in this country, does the Senator remember a time, with the exception of the last Congress, where bills were introduced and all of them voted down, and then the Democratic Party voted for the bill that they voted against and it was passed by the solid vote of the Democratic Party and a few votes on the Republican side of the Chamber?

Mr. CUMMINS. My experience in the Senate has been brief. The Senator from Utah knows much more about the history of the Senate and what has occurred here than I do. Therefore I will not attempt to answer his question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not true that hardly ever a measure is passed where some one does not vote against some amendment but does vote for the bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is not the question.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is the same principle.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, the appeal of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to his Republican associates to vote in favor of his amendment as against the Democratic bill is a very fair sample of that plausible but very fallacious kind of argument in which the Senator from Iowa is an adept. When a tariff bill similar in nature to this was before the Senate last year, the Democratic Senators and a section of the Republican Senators laid a trap for the other Republican Senators, and it succeeded. When another bill of the same nature came before the Senate, Republican Senators refused to be led into this trap.

Now, as between the bill as it came from the House and the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa, I will say that both are objectionable to the protectionists of the Senate. The House bill is a revenue measure. The substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa is insufficiently protective. I am against both measures, and I propose, as a Senator performing my duty as one of the representatives of my State, to do everything I can, either by voting or refraining from voting, to prevent the adoption of either of these measures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I am informed that that Senator is absent from the city on important public business. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. CRAWFORD'S name was called). I have been requested to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], but I am released on this vote, and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GORE (when Mr. OWEN'S name was called). My colleague, the Senator from Oklahoma, is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. I transfer the pair to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I am informed that if he were present and voting he would vote against the pending amendment. As I am of the same mind, I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BAILEY. I have a pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] and therefore withhold my vote. I desire this announcement to stand not only for to-day, but until the conclusion of the work in which he is now engaged.

I also desire the announcement to stand as an explanation of why I have not voted on some other roll calls.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Chamber on public business.

Mr. LODGE. My colleague [Mr. CRANE] has a standing pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 60, as follows:

YEAS—12.

Borah	Clapp	Jones	Poindexter
Bourne	Cummins	Nelson	Townsend
Bristow	Gronna	Page	Works

NAYS—60.

Ashurst	Dillingham	McCumber	Sanders
Bacon	du Pont	McLean	Shively
Bankhead	Fall	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Bradley	Fletcher	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Foster	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Burnham	Gore	Oliver	Smoot
Burton	Guggenheim	Overman	Stephenson
Catron	Heyburn	Paynter	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Percy	Swanson
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Pomerene	Tillman
Culberson	Lea	Rayner	Watson
Cullom	Lippitt	Richardson	Wetmore
Curtis	Lodge	Root	Williams

NOT VOTING—23.

Bailey	Davis	La Follette	Reed
Briggs	Dixon	Lorimer	Smith, Md.
Brown	Gamble	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Clark, Wyo.	Gardner	Nixon	Stone
Crane	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Warren
Crawford	Kenyon	Penrose

So the substitute of Mr. CUMMINS was rejected.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest that it is rather late in the day, and the Senate is not ready to vote upon the pending bill. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Senate is evidently in an industrious mood and desires to further consider the measure before the Senate. The zeal of Senators is rather unusual, but very gratifying. No greater mistake could be indulged in than to think that this measure has received that consideration which it will receive or must receive before being sent out to the country as an enactment, so far as the Senate is concerned.

I was engaged at a very interesting point to the Republicans when this matter was last before the Senate. I know that the Democrats take very little interest in a Republican platform. I know that Republicans are presumably very greatly interested in the principles of their party. I am going to test it, because my remarks will be addressed to the Republicans for a few moments. Then if the Democrats are still in evidence I will address some remarks to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Meanwhile will the Senate be in order? Will Senators please refrain from conversing in audible tones—those other than the one entitled to the floor?

Mr. HEYBURN. In support of the suggestion of the Chair I will say that I will undertake to do all the talking that is indulged in while I have the floor. I do not mean by that that I am not ready to be interrupted, but there will be some talk going on.

Yesterday I was calling the attention of the Republican Members to the promises they had made and declarations of principles that are as binding upon them to-day as they were when they were announced. The principles of a Government do not change. The declarations of principles are to be respected.

Mr. President, I would inquire if the rules permit me to stroll back where I can be close to those who are present. These Senators did not wish to adjourn. I assume that they had some reason for not desiring to adjourn. I am going to talk rather plainly about it. They will either pass on the motion to adjourn with reasonable frequency or they will make it unnecessary. They certainly do not imagine that I am going to refrain from discussing this question in the Senate Chamber because they do not care to hear it. They never were more mistaken if they do.

I am going to call the attention of Senators to what the Republican Party told the people it stood for in 1884, and that is not very far back. Most Senators were then actively engaged or interested, at least, in the affairs of the Government. This is the declaration, and it is as much a part of the Republican policy and principles to-day as it was when it was published by the convention in 1884:

It is the first duty of a good government to protect the rights and promote the interests of its own people.

The largest diversity of industry is most productive of general prosperity and of the comfort and independence of the people.

We therefore demand that the imposition of duties on foreign imports shall be made not "for revenue only," but that in raising the requisite revenues for the Government such duties shall be so levied as to afford security—

Bear that word in mind; I will revert to it directly—security to our diversified industries and protection to the rights and wages of the laborer, to the end that active and intelligent labor, as well as capital, may have its just reward and the laboring man his full share in the national prosperity.

Against the so-called economic system of the Democratic Party, which would degrade our labor to the foreign standard, we enter our earnest protest.

* * * * * * *

The Republican Party pledges itself to corrrect the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus.

Now, the first part of that platform, the protective part of it, was good Republican doctrine, and it would have won the election for the Republican Party in that year. But the Democrats were making the campaign upon the cry of surplus. They made nearly as much noise about it as they now make on the tariff question, and some—enough—of the members of the committee that framed this platform were deceived by that noise, because they were charged with the iniquitous crime of so conducting the affairs of the Government as to produce a surplus that they immediately took to the woods and promised they would not do it again. The result was the American people said, "Well, if you are not for protection and the fruits of protection, we will give you a chance to think it over," and they elected a Democrat President of the United States.

So what they did—and this is a warning against giving heed to the cry of those who have it in mind to scare you away from the principles which they fear—the committee went on and said:

The Republican Party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus.

The Republican Party, running before the charge made against them by Democrats ambitious for power and office, retreated and lost out to the Democrats. You ought to be very careful that that lesson is not repeated.

I read that platform and emphasized it particularly because we repeated that mistake in 1892. We apologized for being Republicans. We asserted the doctrine of Republicanism, asserted the benefits that had been derived from it, and then, because the Democrats were making so much noise that some of the people thought there must be something in their cry, we retreated from it and apologized and said we would not do it again. So the Democrats came in, and they got rid of the surplus. That is their strong point. No one ever charges the Democratic Party with so administering the affairs of the Government as to create a surplus. That is one thing they are not guilty of.

In that platform, however, shifting as it was, we declared specifically for the duty on wool. The Republican Party said:

We recognize the importance of sheep husbandry in the United States, the serious depression which it is now experiencing, and the danger threatening its future prosperity; and we therefore respect the demands of the representatives of this important agricultural interest for a readjustment of duties upon foreign wool.

They had that in mind, but they promised a change. Well, the people had put them in power because of what they were, what they stood for, and the people expected them to remain hitched, but because somebody gave a long yapping at their heels they broke loose and ran away. We have seen that kind of thing happen not only in conventions but elsewhere.

Now I come to a platform that commended the Republican Party to the people, the next one, in 1888. We learned some sense from the chastisement that we got in 1884, and we quit apologizing for being Republicans.

I have heard some discussion here in connection with these tariff schedules where I think, without realizing just exactly the effect of the words, there has been some apology for Republican legislation and a tacit promise to undo it. I am not in sympathy with that kind of talk or action.

Now I beg your attention to the platform that speaks Republicanism, that of 1888, when we nominated Benjamin Harrison for President of the United States on a real Republican platform. This is it:

We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection; we protest against its destruction as proposed by the President—and his party. They serve the interests of Europe; we will support the interests of America. We accept the issue and confidently appeal to the people for their judgment. The protective system must be maintained. Its abandonment has always been followed by general disaster to all interests except those of the usurer and the sheriff.

They had gotten a little Republican vigor into them by that time, and they realized the effect of their declarations of apology. The usurer and the sheriff came pretty soon afterwards, when we did have a Republican administration.

We condemn the proposition of the Democratic Party to place wool on the free list—

And yet we hear men in this body, in this Congress and in the last Congress, on the Republican side of this Chamber, who are willing to compromise for free wool or its equivalent. They stand here and engage in cheeseparing and quibbling and refining of figures to try to prove that we could possibly live if we did not have what we are entitled to. Bear that declaration in mind when we come to consider the woolen schedule—and we insist that the duties thereon shall be adjusted and maintained so as to furnish full and adequate protection to that industry throughout the United States.

The Republican Party would effect all needed reduction of the national revenue by repealing the taxes upon tobacco, which are an annoyance and burden to agriculture, and the tax upon spirits used in the arts and for mechanical purposes.

We have already legislated that last declaration into law.

Upon that platform we elected our President, and we entered upon an era of prosperity. During that administration we enacted the McKinley tariff bill. In 1888 both parties boasted of their prosperity.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. Does not the Senator think that at this time of the day we ought to have a quorum?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think there is a quorum here, probably. There are many here who had better be at home in their household, but they like to be here. I think they like to hear me talk.

Mr. JONES. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	Lodge	Sanders
Bailey	Cummins	McCumber	Shively
Borah	Curtis	McLean	Simmons
Bourne	du Pont	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Bradley	Fall	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Fletcher	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Smoot
Bryan	Gore	Oliver	Swanson
Burnham	Gronna	Page	Tillman
Burton	Heyburn	Paynter	Townsend
Catron	Hitchcock	Percy	Watson
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Williams
Clapp	Jones	Poindexter	Works
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Pomerene
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Richardson
Culberson	Lippitt	Root

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from Idaho if he will yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, no Senator is more anxious to complete the work of the present session than I am, but there are certain things that we can not do, as is well known to every Senator who has had much experience here. Yesterday, as a matter of courtesy to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], the Senate adjourned perhaps a few minutes later than to-day, but we had been in session only from 12 o'clock on yesterday. We have been in session to-day continuously from 11 o'clock.

The Senator from Idaho is not in robust health and he wishes to discuss this question. I think he ought to be given a fair opportunity to do it when the Senators are in their seats and when they are not tired with the arduous duties of a long legislative day. Desiring to extend the same courtesy to the Senator from Idaho that was extended to other Senators, I now move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator withhold his motion?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly, I withhold it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator if he will not withhold his motion for a few minutes that some amendments may be offered?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then there will be no opposition to an adjournment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has the floor, however, if the Senate continues in session.

Mr. HEYBURN. I yielded to the Senator from New Hampshire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield for the purpose of having amendments considered?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I sent to the Secretary's desk an amendment which I desire to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by changing the number of paragraph 73 to 74, by changing the number of paragraph 72 to 73, by changing the number of paragraph 71 to 72, and by increasing the free list by inserting the following as paragraph 71:

Trace chains, plows, axes, spades, shovels, hoes, cane knives, briar hooks, rakes, scythes, sickles, pruning knives, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills, and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines and cotton gins, farm wagons and farm carts, whether in whole or in parts, including repair parts.

Mr. GALLINGER. I inquire if there are other amendments to be offered?

Mr. SIMMONS. On behalf of the minority members of the committee in charge of the House bill, I accept the amendment just offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator desired it to lie over, did he not? The Senator did not wish action upon his amendment this evening, as I understand?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I offered the amendment this morning. Our purpose was to perfect such amendments to the minority report this evening as the committee agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is manifest that we can not consider and vote upon that amendment this evening. It will be discussed, I think, somewhat.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not suppose, Mr. President, that a vote would be asked upon the amendment this evening; I supposed it would simply be offered, and that I would state for the minority that we would accept the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. SIMMONS. When we next consider the bill we can vote upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be considered as the pending amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now renew my motion to adjourn.

Mr. SIMMONS. There are one or two other amendments yet to be offered, I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well. I withhold the motion.

Mr. POMERENE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it an amendment to the amendment or a new amendment?

Mr. POMERENE. It is a new amendment; it is to a different paragraph of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is one amendment now pending.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the amendment might be read for information, and be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 21, after the semicolon, it is proposed to insert: Machine tools, 20 per cent ad valorem.

And on page 22, line 9, to strike out the words "machine tools."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFCER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to state that, on behalf of the minority members of the Finance Committee, we will accept that amendment. I understand there is one other amendment to be presented.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read, for the information of the Senate only, as it is not in order at this time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Do I understand that the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is accepted by the minority members of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina simply expressed a willingness to that effect. The amendment can not be accepted; it will have to be voted on in its regular order.

The Chair desires to inform the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] that his proposed amendment has already been read; that it is now on the table, and as it is not in order nothing further can be done with it at this time.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood that the Senator from Nevada wished to make some statement as to his purpose with respect to that amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not yield for a speech from any Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. He does not intend to make a speech.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state that I can make the explanation in a few words to-morrow morning.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certain Senators have expressed a wish to have an executive session. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 29, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 28, 1912.

SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS.

Joshua L. Chamberlain to be surveyor of customs in the district of Portland and Falmouth, in the State of Maine.

PROMOTION IN THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Cadet Gustavus Urban Stewart to be third lieutenant.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

Henry L. Fassett to be United States marshal for the western district of New York.

Guy Murchie to be United States marshal for the district of Massachusetts.

POSTMASTERS.

Malcolm S. Graham, Forest.
Sidney M. Jordan, Louisville.
Lewis M. Joyner, Agricultural College.
Andrew M. Patterson, jr., Como.
Wade H. Phyfer, New Albany.
James M. Tyler, Bogue Chitto.

OHIO.

Charles H. Huffman, Richwood.

PENNSYLVANIA.

John F. Fenstermacher, Mount Joy.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 28, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in whom we live and move and have our being, make us conscious of Thy presence by quickening our minds and conscience, that we may walk in the light of Thy countenance, and, without taking ourselves too seriously, do the work Thou hast given us to do in humility, yet with courage and fortitude, in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] rise?

Mr. HEFLIN. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee will be pending while the gentleman from Alabama rises to a question of personal privilege. The gentleman from Alabama will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] in referring to me said:

> Now, my friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has undertaken, I think, to do something that does not become him, and, in view of the record of his own State, is indefensible.

In another place he says:

> Mr. Chairman, in substantiation of what I have read, in response to what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has said in his assaults on the North and labor conditions there, and to the shame of the State of Alabama, I want to show you the evidence of the inhumanity, brutality, and cruelty of his State.

This is a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, and reflects upon me and my service here, and charges something that is not true, namely, that I had assaulted the North, and I desire to address the House upon the question of personal privilege.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman has not stated any question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not hear distinctly what the matter was. The gentleman from Alabama will read the passage on which he claims he has the right to rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am reading from the RECORD of yesterday, Mr. Speaker, page 7265. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said:

> I want, Mr. Chairman, to read a few lines from a letter written by a friend of mine who resides near his [my] home, and I think, possibly, in his district.

And in that letter, Mr. Speaker, there is a reflection not only upon my district, but the entire State.

The SPEAKER. But read what is in the letter.

Mr. HEFLIN. Of course, the letter itself, Mr. Speaker, does not refer to me, but what the gentleman himself said does. He said in another place:

> Mr. Chairman, in substantiation of what I have read, in response to what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has said in his assaults on the North and labor conditions there, and to the shame of the State of Alabama, I want to show you the evidence of the inhumanity, brutality, and cruelty of his State—greater than the camps of Siberia and Russia.

Now, the other question of privilege. When I arose and asked unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] objected.

The SPEAKER. Where is that?

Mr. HEFLIN. It it on page 7266, near the center of the second column. I said:

> Does the gentleman from Iowa wish to deny me the opportunity to reply to the assault made upon my State by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?
> Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Alabama has already invited all the attacks that he has received.

I had made no statement in my speech that invited any such attack; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeded undisturbed; no one objected upon this side of the House; and when I rose, after this slanderous assault had been made upon my people——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will suspend. What is the point that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] made?

Mr. DALZELL. That the gentleman has not stated any question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that that point is well taken. Of course, men might stand up here and abuse Alabama or Missouri or any other State until they were black in the face without laying the foundation for a question of personal privilege. The rule is that the question of privilege rests upon something that affects a man injuriously or scandalously in his representative capacity.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is exactly what I am trying to get at. My grounds, as stated, constitute a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. Now, what part of this is it that the gentleman claims appertains to him in his legislative capacity?

Mr. HEFLIN. The rule says, "The rights, reputation, and conduct of Members, individually, in their representative capacity," and so forth, constitute a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly it, and it is a very narrow question, too.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, it reflects upon me, Mr. Speaker. He says that this man who writes the letter about the conditions in Alabama lives near my home, lives, he thinks, in the district that I represent, and that I can not stand here and make a speech upon these other questions because these conditions that he talks about exist down there; that my position is indefensible; that I have attacked the North, which is not true, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. That part of it, if it is considered scandalous or affecting the gentleman in his representative capacity, would lay the foundation. The Chair can understand very well how the gentleman from Alabama would feel outraged in his feelings if somebody assaults the State of Alabama, but that does not make a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says:

> Mr. HEFLIN has undertaken, I think, to do something that does not become him——

The SPEAKER. That was the gentleman's opinion about it.

Mr. HEFLIN (continuing)—

> And, in view of the record of his own State, is indefensible.

The SPEAKER. Well, that was just simply in that gentleman's opinion.

Mr. HEFLIN. It forms a basis, Mr. Speaker, to my mind, for a question of personal privilege. I am convinced of that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if my colleague will yield to me for a moment, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] shall proceed for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that his colleague be allowed to proceed for 20 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, in my speech yesterday with reference to the unemployed of this country and the dreadful conditions obtaining under the high protective tariff system of the Republican Party, I reflected upon no particular State, upon no particular Member. I simply arraigned the Republican Party, and stated that for 16 years the Republican Party had been in power and that we had been trying to obtain remedial legislation for the laboring people of the United States and had failed. After I had discussed some of the things that have oppressed the laboring men of America, Mr. FOCHT, of Pennsylvania, arose and reflected upon me and delivered a slanderous assault against my State. The gentleman read a letter—and where it comes from, God only knows; no post mark, no date, no particular convict camp was referred to, and yet it contains a charge against an officer of the State of Alabama with reference to his treatment of a convict. It names no place; it names no man, and yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania calls the writer of this mysterious, slanderous letter a friend of his.

Where is that convict camp where the gentleman says they whipped a black man in the presence of a northern man? There is no truth in that statement. The State that I have the honor in part to represent has a reformatory for young criminals, both white and black, and Alabama stands well with reference to her humane treatment of convicts within her borders. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, Alabama has a law which forbids and punishes cruel treatment of convicts. We have State inspectors, whose duties are to report on the health, sanitary condition, and general treatment of convicts. I do not claim that conditions are perfect in the convict system of Alabama, but I do resent the false and slanderous charge contained in the letter read in this House yesterday regarding that system.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] by his attack on me and on my State yesterday is responsible for my speech this morning. As evidence of that fact I quote from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], a Republican. On yesterday, when I tried to obtain unanimous consent to reply to the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

FOCHT], Mr. GOOD, a Republican, objected, and here is what Mr. AUSTIN said:

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of appealing to my colleague from Iowa to withdraw his objection. This attack upon the State of Alabama came from the Republican side, and I ask in all justice and fair play as a Republican that the gentleman from Alabama have the opportunity to be heard in answer. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the point was not made against the gentleman from Pennsylvania, when he read his letter, from this side, and it is unfair for this side to object to the gentleman from Alabama having an opportunity to reply to it.

So, Mr. Speaker, what I shall say now I feel justified in saying on account of what was said here yesterday by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying that "those who live in glass houses should not throw stones." For the benefit of the gentleman from Pennsylvania I desire to read from the hearings before the Rules Committee regarding the treatment of free labor in Pennsylvania:

Mr. FEEHAN. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I understand you have but little time to listen to the numerous arguments that we intended to present, and I will be as brief as possible.

I want to state that we are desirous of this investigation, and expect to prove, as Mr. WILSON stated—

Mr. WILSON is one of the honored Democratic Representatives from Pennsyvania and a true and tried friend of the laboring man.

That there is peonage—

What!

That there is peonage—

Where? In Pennsylvania. [Applause]—

that the coal companies have erected stockades, and that they have resorted to other methods to compel the mine workers and others who are not mine workers, whom they have imported into their mine localities, to work in the mines, keeping them there against their will. I know from experience hundreds of cases where men have escaped, got over what they call the "dead line," where deputies employed by the coal companies are stationed to patrol the outer edges of the company's property. They have some privileges, liberties, inside of the company's property, but if they attempt to get out at any time they are restrained from doing so, and frequently threatened, and often beaten and driven back in.

Where is this? It is in Pennsylvania. No such condition exists in Alabama—not anywhere in the State of Alabama. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If they get over what the imported men call the "dead line" and are captured again, they are taken back forcibly, and in many instances men who have escaped from these stockades in the mining localities have come into the miners' headquarters to obtain information as to how they could get away from the place and to get financial assistance.

Listen. Taken back by force for what? For trying to escape from the clutches of the cruel industrial slavery of the State of Pennsylvania under Republican rule. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

They have been sometimes badly wounded; many of them had their heads cut; some of them even shot and otherwise disfigured—

What a fearful condition!

That is the condition that prevails, and the citizens of Westmoreland County know that condition and have known of it in a general way since the strike was inaugurated. We expect that a Federal investigation will put a stop to this. We expect to prove on investigation that men, in order to go to church on Sunday morning, were required to get a pass out from the officials of the coal company or the deputies.

Think of that. These men are not convicts, and yet they are not permitted to go out and worship God on Sunday unless the industrial boss gives them a written pass, and this in the gentleman's State of Pennsylvania.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the black slave in Alabama in the old slave days was treated a thousand times better than were these poor white industrial slaves in Pennsylvania under the reign of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Men guarded in a camp, not permitted to get out, hounded by guards and deputies, lashed and shot and driven back; human beings held in the remorseless grasp of the most despotic industrial slavery in the world! [Applause.] And yet the gentleman [Mr. FOCHT] gets up and talks about a letter that some mysterious fellow, one Ben Phillips, has written. He did not give his name yesterday. If he did, I did not hear it. It was an anonymous letter then so far as this House knew. The letter speaks of punishing a convict in Alabama. Why, I suppose in all the convict camps in the United States they have some discipline; they have some means of punishment for wrongdoing and violated rules; but, as I said before, we have a statute against cruel treatment of convicts in my State.

Mr. Speaker, the condition recited here by this leader of organized labor in Pennsylvania, Mr. Feehan, could not exist in Alabama for one hour. [Applause on Democratic side.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] says that in my speech yesterday I assaulted the North. Why did the gentleman make that statement? What was his purpose in making it? I have made no assault upon the North. Not one word can be found in that speech that can in any way be construed into an assault on the North. Some of my best friends in this House are northern men. I claim among my friends here some clever Republicans from the North. I have made no assault upon the North, and why did the gentleman from Pennsylvania do me the injustice to say that I had assaulted the North? I want to say to him, and those like him, the time for that kind of political buncombe is past. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. PALMER. If the gentleman will permit me, I have no doubt that everything the gentleman says about industrial conditions in Pennsylvania is absolutely true; but, in justice to the fair name of our State, I want to call his attention to the fact that very recently Pennsylvania has seen the light, and both of the great political parties have driven out of power the leaders of the organizations in those parties that have been responsible for legislative conditions which have made these horrible things possible in the industrial centers of the State. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And as the promises of these new organizations in Pennsylvania will doubtless be carried out, we hope the future will be able to show conditions which will not justify any such criticism. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, my good friend knows that I would have made no reference to these conditions had it not been for the attack on me and on my State by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT]. I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] made the statement that he did.

Now, then, let me read a sentence from the letter which was read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] yesterday. Listen:

If what I have written you is not what you want, kindly let me know just what you want and I can give you more details.

[Laughter.]

In other words, Mr. Speaker, if this picture of the weeping convict is not strong enough for political purposes drop me a note, and I will fix the next one to suit your purpose. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, when wages have been reduced below a living wage and the laboring man can not get justice from his employer, what else can he do but use his power as an organization and strike? It is often his only remedy, and he has a right to exercise it. Many a time he has been wrong and many a time he has been right, and right is right as God is God. [Applause.] When they struck in Pennsylvania some time ago, what happened to them? They were cruelly treated. Some were beaten with clubs, some were shot, and some were murdered, and we are told that innocent women and children were murdered. Black policemen, it is said, with their clubs struck down women of the white race, American mothers, struck them down and murdered them in Pennsylvania during that strike. Did the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] have this horrible condition in mind when he assaulted my State without foundation of fact [applause on the Democratic side] when he read the mysterious letter from one Ben Phillips, who promised to write any kind of letter if they would just let him know what kind of letter they wanted?

Mr. Speaker, I do not care to detain the House longer now. I regret the necessity that called forth these remarks from me. I made them in obedience to a sense of duty to my State, myself, and the truth of the matters involved.

Mr. Speaker, the issues of this campaign are going to be fought out before the American people, and they are not going to allow anyone to inject in immaterial issues or cause them to lose sight of the greatest of all evils, the high protective tariff system of the Republican Party. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the House understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] has not been present during the speech just delivered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. I do not know what the wishes of the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be in the matter, but I think that the House ought to know that the speech was made in his absence.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the RECORD on the Military Academy bill, as I shall be necessarily absent when that bill is considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the RECORD on the Military Academy bill (H. R. 24450). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. J. Res. 319. Joint resolution making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1912, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6479. An act to authorize the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. to repair, alter, or rebuild certain bridges in the State of Arkansas.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 6479. An act to authorize the St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. to repair, alter, or rebuild certain bridges in the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, pending the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that the Speaker lay before the House House joint resolution 319.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that, pending the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, the House consider the resolution of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 319, making appropriations to supply deficiencies for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1912, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The title to the joint resolution was amended.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 24565), with Mr. HULL in the chair.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 6 of the bill, line 7, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to return to page 6 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, let us see what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be reported for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "rank," in line 7, page 6, as follows: "Provided further, That the service of a midshipman at the United States Naval Academy or of a cadet at the United States Military Academy, who shall hereafter be appointed, shall not be counted in computing for any purpose the length of service of any officer of the Navy: Provided further, That so much of the act approved March 3, 1899, entitled 'An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States,' as contained in section 13 of said act relating to five years' constructive service for officers and warrant officers entering the Navy from civil life, which reads as follows: 'That all officers, including warrant officers, who have been or may be appointed to the Navy from civil life shall, on the date of appointment, be credited for computing their pay with five years' service,' shall not apply to officers and warrant officers appointed to the Navy after the date of the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. I object. I know nothing at all about it, and therefore I object.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to reserve his objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the objection, but I am going to object to going back to this paragraph. Here is a provision of law that I have never seen and know nothing about.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for an opportunity to explain to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I think he will withdraw his objection. The present law provides that the time these young men are attending the Naval Academy at the expense of the Government of the United States shall be counted as service actually rendered, when the fact is that the period of time spent at the naval school is spent for the purpose of training the young men to render service afterwards when they do actually enter the Navy. As is well known, it costs the United States Government nearly $20,000 to give a young man four years' schooling at this academy. I submit to the gentleman that this four-year period is not service and should not be counted as such.

When the Army bill was before the committee the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. HAY, chairman of that committee, introduced, as an amendment coming from the committee, a similar amendment to the one I offer, and it passed the House. I see no reason why this four years' time should be counted as service, when it is not. Further, under the present law, as I understand it, when one enters the staff service from civil life he is, instanter, credited with five years' actual service, or five years' service, so to speak. This amendment eliminates that feature. I am told that this will effect a saving of something over $400,000 annually. It does not apply to those in the school to-day, but it applies to those who enter on and after the passage of this bill. That is the proposition.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENSLEY. Yes.

Mr. KOPP. Has this matter been submitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. HENSLEY. Not to the committee, but it has been submitted to the members of the committee.

Mr. KOPP. Does the gentleman think that it is quite fair to the committee to ask that we pass on such an important matter as this is without the opportunity of any consideration by that committee?

Mr. HENSLEY. I will confess to the gentleman that the matter was not called to my attention in time to have it brought before the Committee on Naval Affairs, or I should have done so.

Mr. KOPP. I might add that it appeals to me as being a sensible amendment, yet it changes a law of long standing and is very far-reaching in its results. It does seem to me we ought to give it careful consideration and not adopt it on a few minutes' discussion in the House.

Mr. LEWIS. May I interrupt the gentleman——

Mr. HENSLEY. Let me answer just one thing. I would have gladly submitted this amendment, which I prepared only yesterday morning—though it was offered in another form on Saturday—to the gentleman from Wisconsin, but I had no opportunity to do so; but I did submit it to the chairman of the committee and, as I understand, he thinks it is right and is ready to support it now.

Mr. BOWMAN. Does not the gentleman think that amounts to a reduction in wages; that this change which he proposes amounts to a reduction in the wages of these cadets?

Mr. HENSLEY. No.

Mr. BOWMAN. If they are reduced in rank, it certainly will amount to a reduction in salary.

Mr. HENSLEY. But they are not reduced in rank.

Mr. BOWMAN. But they are placed at a disadvantage with those who preceded them.

Mr. HENSLEY. It only applies to the future.

Mr. BOWMAN. I think it places them at a disadvantage in relation to those who have gone before. In view of the fact that the cost of living has increased, does the gentleman think it right to reduce these wages when we are asking everybody else to advance them?

Mr. HENSLEY. This House did it in relation to the military bill, and it is identical with the amendment which was then agreed to in that bill. What I am asking is that the House have a chance to pass on it. I am only asking now to return to that section of the bill that makes this proper, and then let the House pass upon this proposition. If a majority of the Members of this House see fit to vote against this amendment, that is their privilege.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, we have the second navy on earth. It is a necessary arm of defense. There is difficulty in securing sufficient officers, difficulty and more difficulty in securing sufficient seamen to man these great engines of war for our national defense. The law is now that a young man who goes to the Naval Academy commences his service. There is no more strenuous discipline and service anywhere in the Navy than at the Naval Academy.

Mr. BURLESON. It is the hardest period in his whole career.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the request that the gentleman may have two minutes more in order to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks that the gentleman from Illinois may have two minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HENSLEY. Does the gentleman from Illinois believe that if these institutions, the academies at West Point and Annapolis, were thrown open to the young men of the country who measure up to the standard physically, mentally, and morally, they would not be willing to pay their own expenses in receiving the necessary training to qualify them in entering the Government service?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman asks a question. I reply that it is my experience that it is almost impossible to get competent boys to enter the Naval and Military Academies. There are better rewards outside. For two years from my district it has gone without representation at West Point because there was no one desiring to go. At last I think I have a young man who passes up in G who will go.

Now, I want to say these boys are subject to this discipline. These boys are liable to be called out of the academy into active service. They have been heretofore and may again. I am for protecting these boys. Oh, there is not a great many of them, and they do not vote, and the gentleman feels free to attack them, because there is nobody to defend them——

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. I am not speaking of the gentleman personally.

Mr. HENSLEY. I never have attacked these boys. Let me ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can get a little time of his own. I am here to say that I stand by the Army and stand by the Navy, and I am ready to vote a marked increase in the pay of seamen and of the minor officers. I am ready to refuse my consent or vote to make two classes of men in the Navy. I wondered the gentleman said it was not called to his attention. We all know of the strife for promotion—length of service—that exists in the Army and Navy. I imagine that it exists because the human animal that is of any account in civilization, resting upon the unit, wants to climb and better his condition. I do not know what the far-reaching effect of this provision might be, but on the merits I am against it; and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not object, I will. If the law is to be amended, let it be done after consideration by the Naval Committee, reported to the House, and passed by the House after consideration. I do not approve of tying this legislation on this great appropriation bill as a rider.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman will object if he ever gets the chance.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. I object for two reasons—first, that I do not want to return; secondly, I know nothing whatever of the subject and was never talked to about it. I exercise the right I have, and I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That for the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed the following vessels:

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, after line 10, insert, as a separate paragraph:

"Two first-class battleships, each carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class; to have the highest practicable speed and the greatest practicable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $6,000,000 each."

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I presume the members of the committee will desire more or less discussion on this battleship provision. I would like to see if some arrangement for time can not be made with the chairman of the committee. I will state for the benefit of the chairman that, while he was absent from his seat, I think a cog has been slipped from the understanding of last evening, and the battleship provision is now before the committee. The suggestion I make is that some arrangement be made for discussion of the battleship provision.

Mr. PADGETT. I was called out for just a moment to meet a party who was talking to me about another bill. I supposed that the debate would proceed for a minute or two until I got back.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I understood from the chairman last evening the matters that had been passed over during the discussion of the bill would be taken up before we got on to the increase in the Navy, but the Clerk began reading the bill under "Increase of the Navy," and came to a point where the battleship amendment should be offered and I had no other course but to offer it. Now, if the chairman desires to go back and take up the matters that were passed over before we take up the increase, I ask unanimous consent that we return to that portion of the bill and that my amendment be held as pending.

Mr. PADGETT. I would be glad to do that and dispose of matters back of that with the exception of the question of the eight-hour amendment. I stated to the committee the other day when the amendments were offered that I did not think it was good legislation to inject all through the bill provisions with reference to the eight-hour law and that I was going to ask unanimous consent at the appropriate place under the provision for the increase in the Navy to incorporate the bill that was passed by this House by a large majority of both sides of the House at the present session and is now pending in the Senate reported by the committee without amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent that the motion just offered by me be considered as pending and that the chairman of the committee be permitted to go back to such portions of the bill as he wishes to have disposed of before we take up the increase in the Navy.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, if my colleague will yield——

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I yield for a question.

Mr. McCALL. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is proposing to offer an amendment to the amendment of my colleague, and I simply wish to have his right saved.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. There will be a long debate over the coal provision first——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the amendment just offered by him be considered as pending and that the committee return to unconsidered portions of the bill and take them up for consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say this in reference to the matter of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY]. I said the other day when he offered the amendment that there should be some amendments to his amendment in order to put it in proper shape and that it should be withdrawn and that he should put it in shape, and I further said to him so far as I was concerned that I was perfectly willing that they should return and each have an opportunity to offer his amendment, which he did this morning. Of course I had no right to bind anybody except myself.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] desires that I should ask unanimous consent to return to the provision.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me? Has the gentleman prepared the amendment of which he speaks?

Mr. PADGETT. I am speaking of the one offered by the gentleman awhile ago.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman prepared the amendment he thought ought to be made?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; he has prepared the one he indicated to me that he wanted to prepare along those lines.

Mr. CANNON. It meets the gentleman's approval, does it?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; personally I have no objection to it.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. This is legislation?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman have any fear that his committee would not report that bill for consideration?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know what the feelings of the committee are. I have not talked with the members of the committee. I do not know the feeling of any member of the committee except the gentleman who offered the matter.

Mr. BUTLER. We had no hearing on it?

Mr. PADGETT. None whatever.

Mr. CANNON. My objection to it is twofold: First, on the merits; and, second, it ought to be considered and passed upon its merits as a separate act of legislation and not fastened on this great money bill.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that this matter might well be considered by the committee in connection with the personnel bill, on which we are now having hearings and to which it very properly relates.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Tennessee and all the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs that, as I understood the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, there would be no question about returning to this portion of this bill, so that I should be permitted to offer this amendment at this time. I had no idea but that the House would be given an opportunity to pass upon the merits of the amendment. Now, whether I misunderstood the gentleman from Tennessee or not I am unable to say, but I submit that to me it appears unfair to have the situation that is presented here at this time.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, there can be no misunderstanding whatever as to the position of myself in the House. It is of record, and it speaks for itself and is known of all who were here. The gentleman asked unanimous consent on the floor to return to this point and offer an amendment. Pending the question of unanimous consent, and before unanimous consent was granted, while the discussion was going on pro and con, I suggested to him that his amendment was not in proper form and should be amended to be in proper shape, and then the matter was withdrawn. I said to him that, so far as I was concerned, he should have an opportunity to ask to return to this place and offer his amendment. I have granted that opportunity this morning. He has returned. He has submitted his request, and it has been declined. I am not responsible for that in any way, and I did not mislead him, for I simply stated to him that he could have opportunity to return.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further discussion the Clerk will report the first item passed over unfinished.

Mr. PADGETT. Let us return to the question of coal transportation, on page 26.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 7, after the word "dollars," insert:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in time of peace for transporting coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans for the use of naval vessels or navy yards on the Pacific Ocean, except this limitation shall not apply to vessels crossing the Pacific Ocean or stationed in the Hawaiian Islands or in the Philippine Islands, or to navy yards situated in these islands."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman from Washington, the author of the amendment, if we can not agree upon time for closing debate on this amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think so. What time would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. PADGETT. I suggest that 30 minutes will be ample.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Thirty minutes on a side?

Mr. PADGETT. No; all told.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. We never have disposed of it heretofore in 30 minutes. On a question of this importance I do not think that is long enough.

Mr. PADGETT. It has been debated over and over again.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman is willing to confess that my amendment ought to pass, I would be willing to limit the time.

Mr. PADGETT. I never would confess that if I had the reasoning faculties that I have now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Which did not agree with the authorities before.

Mr. PADGETT. Then I will agree to 20 minutes to a side.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I think the gentleman ought to allow 30 minutes on a side, because this is one of the most important features in the bill. I would rather proceed under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman may control one-half the time or the Chair can control it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Why not make it 30 minutes on a side?

Mr. PADGETT. That is too long a time.

Mr. SIMS. Members will get up and leave the Hall.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Why not proceed under the five-minute rule?

Mr. PADGETT. I wish to serve notice now that at the end of 40 minutes I shall move to close debate under the five-minute rule on this paragraph and all amendments to it.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Do it now.

Mr. PADGETT. I move to close debate on this paragraph and the pending amendment, and all amendments, at the end of 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that a motion to close debate is not in order at this time.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true, as there has been no debate upon it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Why does not the gentleman ask unanimous consent?

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent that at the end of 40 minutes debate be closed upon this paragraph and all amendments, and that one half the time be controlled by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] and the other half by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to 40 minutes, and that one half the time be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]. Is there objection?

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHARP. Does the gentleman mean to include in this 40 minutes any amendment that may be offered to the subsequent portion of the bill?

Mr. PADGETT. This is the only paragraph to which it applies. We have read all of the bill except this, down to the increase of the Navy.

Mr. SHARP. But this does not apply to the increase of the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. It does not apply to it in any way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the request, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the members of the committee I think it might be well to give a brief history of this proposed amendment. Two years ago it was offered by me at the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and a vote was taken upon it after a limited discussion, and it was defeated in the committee by one vote.

A year ago I offered a similar amendment, and after debate it was agreed to in the Committee of the Whole by a 3 to 1 vote. It went over to the Senate, and at about 2 o'clock on the morning of the 4th of March the conferees came to me and said that if it was insisted upon it might defeat the entire naval appropriation bill. So, under those circumstances, as the one who had offered the amendment, I did not urge that it be retained.

One would think from these expressions of the sentiment of this House, gentlemen on that side of the aisle having voted almost unanimously in favor of it, some attention would have been given to it by the Navy Department, but such has not been the fact.

I have attempted, without any success whatever, to induce the Navy Department to make use of the coal upon the Pacific coast for some purposes.

Now, it costs to-day to take a ton of Pocahontas coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean between $6 and $6.50 a ton. The Pacific coast coal laid down at the Bremerton Navy Yard costs $4 a ton. In other words, the freight upon the Pocahontas coal costs from $2 to $2.50 more than the entire cost of the coal from the Pacific coast laid down at the navy yard.

The objection has been raised that the Pacific coast coal is not equal to the Pocahontas coal, and that is true to a limited extent, but it only varies from 6 per cent to 10 per cent, according to how it is used. But I call the attention of the committee to this fact, that it costs the Government from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 a year additional to send this coal around to the Pacific coast, and that when war comes, if it ever does come, we will be compelled to use the Pacific coast coal, because we have no means of transporting Pocahontas coal rapidly, and when it is taken over there and stored it soon becomes of less value than the Pacific coast coal. So I ask this question of this House: If we are compelled, as we would be, to use Pacific coast coal in time of war, why should we continue, at an expense of one to two million dollars a year, to use this high-priced coal in time of peace?

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Has the gentleman presented this argument before the committee, and is there anything in the hearings on this proposition?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I did not, because the committee was familiar with it; it has been argued on the floor of this House, and it passed the House by a vote of 3 to 1 a year ago, and the committee was familiar with all the facts.

Mr. GOOD. Did any of the officers of the Navy appear before the committee?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They did not appear before the committee, so far as I know. We had a hearing in the Navy Department on January 24, 1912, in which this matter was thoroughly discussed—gone into fully.

Mr. GOOD. Then there is nothing in the hearings?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; there is not in regard to this matter, so far as I know.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Navy Department would spend the same amount of money that it costs extra for Pocahontas coal for two or three years they could develop the coal fields of Alaska and get a better coal than the Pocahontas. I am not going to make the charge that there is any collusion between the Navy Department and the Pocahontas Coal Co., but such statements have been made by high authority, and insinuations have been made on the floor of the House that such is the case. I want to read a few words from a speech made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] on this question when it was up a year ago. He said:

Mr. Chairman, I agree thoroughly with the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Washington. The closest corporation in this country is the combination between the Pocahontas coal people and the Navy Department, and it has been so for 20 years. I know that during the Spanish-American War, when Alabama coals that were perfectly good for steaming purposes were offered to the Navy Department for $3.25 a ton over the ship's rail at Mobile, only a night's sail from Tampa, the Navy Department bought Pocahontas coal and shipped it by rail to Tampa at an expense of $9.60, and that proposition has been kept up ever since.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, continuing, said:

There is no reason in time of peace why these Pacific coals could not be used for our Navy. They are absolutely as good steaming coals as the Pocahontas coal. They are the same class of coals as the Alabama grades of coal, and 20 years ago, when Mr. Herbert was Secretary of the Navy, he sent out the battleships Montgomery and Mobile to test the Alabama coals, and the only difference between them and the Pocahontas coal was not that they did not produce as much steam power or that they did not have as great a steaming radius per ton per mile as the Pocahontas coal, but that they produced a little more smoke and clogged the flues a little sooner, a few hours sooner in a 40-hour trial. Now, what have these men got to do but clean the flues?

Then he added these words of warning, that I want to call to the attention of gentlemen on that side of the aisle, on February 21, 1911:

This business of making the Navy Department a close corporation, bound in here between the Allegheny Mountains and the Potomac River, has got to stop, or you will raise a prejudice against the Navy in this country that will bring more injury to it than anything else you can do. You want to build all your battleships on the eastern coast line. You want to buy all your supplies on the eastern coast line. You want all the navy yards there. You do not want the people of the United States to have any share in this Navy except in a few States. You might as well make up your minds, if you want a big navy and a navy that will be popular with the people of the United States, you have got to stop this, and you had better stop it right now by voting for the amendment of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman comment on this statement, found on page 314 of the hearings before the Naval Committee, in which Admiral Cowie says:

This question of coal supply on the Pacific has been one so vexing on account of its vital importance to our fleet for its maintenance in the Pacific that, with the opportunity confronting us whereby high-grade fuel could be obtained, the bureau believes that every possible effort should be made by the department to cause Congress to take advantage of this opportunity to solve this problem and provide for the safety of the country by making the necessary appropriation for mining and operating these fields, whose product alone will insure the safety of our fleets in the Pacific.

Will the gentleman state whether or not there is any foundation in fact for that statement?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will answer it by saying that they have never made a fair test of the Pacific coast coal. They have been promising to make tests ever since I have been a Member of this House. I asked them to make the test and report here so that it could be used two years ago, but they failed to do it, and I also repeated that a year ago and they also failed. They are still making tests on the Pacific coast coal or promising to do it.

In the hearing that we had before the Navy Department last January they ended the hearing by promising to make a fair and full test of the coal of the Pacific coast, but they have never done so.

Now, I want to read one more statement from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], who has more knowledge upon this subject than any man in this House. He says:

I wish to register here a complaint that the Navy Department is not encouraging the development of appliances so that it can use the other coals. When it found, for instance, that the coal in Alabama approximated to the needs of the Navy it would have been in the line of economy and the best interests of the Government to have undertaken to develop smoke-consuming devices and other devices, so that the department could then use Alabama coal.

The same applies to the Pacific coast coal, not only that mined on the mainland but that in Alaska, and the Navy Department has not shown great interest in developing additional sources of supply that would prove of great, if not vital, importance in time of war, and we are put to millions of dollars of expense, perhaps, unnecessarily.

So the whole question is, Are we going to pay one or two million dollars a year unnecessarily for Pocahontas coal and permit the Navy Department to make no effort whatever to learn the use of other coals that they will have to use in the time of war?

No gentleman on the floor of this House and no man representing the Navy Department can say that in case of war they will not be compelled to use these Pacific coast coals. Had they not better get accustomed to them in time of peace? Would it not be better for this Government, instead of spending this one or two million dollars extra each year, to compel the Navy Department to experiment with Pacific coast coals, become accustomed to their use, and have some mines developed out there that would be ready to furnish fuel to them in time of emergency?

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the essence of this whole matter is to prohibit the Government from getting the benefit of the open market and the best terms that can be had in the purchase of its coal, and the best coal, and to limit the Government to a restricted area. It is nothing more or less than a proposition to create a coal trust for the benefit of some coal miners in the State of Washington. We may just as well understand fully and frankly what it is. That is all that it is.

With reference to the question of tests, the Navy Department has repeatedly made tests. The Bureau of Mines of the Government, a different department, has made several tests, and every single one of these tests, without exception, has shown that the coal was not suited and was not fit for use in the vessels of the Navy. I have here memoranda of various tests that have been made by the departments of the Government. The department, through the Bureau of Steam Engineering, made tests of Washington State coals and various other coals—British Columbia coal, and coal from Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, and New Mexico—giving the names of the mines, et cetera.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Is there any evidence of any test having been made of Alaska coal?

Mr. PADGETT. Alaska coal is not available. The Matanuska coal fields are 120 miles from a railroad, and the Naval Committee has had up at this session, not in a formal way, but we have been gathering evidence and having communications, and have submitted the matter to the Navy Department, the matter of Alaskan coal, and there is a reference on page 313 of the hearings to the Alaska coals, with a view of getting them. There are in Alaska, at Matanuska, fields of coal that are of sufficient grade and test, but that coal is not available. Two gentlemen who were interested in the development of those fields were to see me, and I said to them that we would gladly cooperate with them to secure the coal whenever they put a railroad to it. They intimated to me that they wanted the Government to guarantee their bonds. I said to them that I was not willing to advocate that proposition, but for the reservation of the lands and for making contracts and all of that I was willing to cooperate.

Mr. KAHN. I understand that there was a test made of Alaska coal, and that it showed that it had 1,000 British thermal units more than any other coal that is mined in this country.

Mr. PADGETT. No; it does not show that much. It is referred to in the hearings. I think it shows a total of something like fifteen thousand and odd.

Mr. KAHN. More thermal units?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; here it is:

From the reports of analyses made from samples recently obtained by the Director Bureau of Mines, while in Alaska, from the Matanuska and Bering fields, it is shown that these coals are exceptionally low in ash and sulphur, and exceedingly high in heating value, the British thermal units in some cases running as high as 15,400 as received, while the best eastern coals average a little under 14,800 British thermal units.

Mr. KAHN. That is what I had reference to. Does not the gentleman think, in view of the fact that these coal fields in Alaska have not been developed, it would be a good thing on the part of the Government to open them up for the use of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. I have indicated that I was perfectly willing to do it and would be glad to cooperate, but I am not willing to forbid the Government getting the benefit of the best coal as long as these fields are 120 miles from a railroad.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman from Tennessee believe that it is well to pursue the policy that we have pursued, namely, that the Government should not guarantee the bonds or encourage the building of the roads, and should continue to make it impossible for private capital to develop those coal fields and get the transportation? Upon the whole, is it not better that we should do without the Alaska coal for this and perhaps many other generations, and keep it there stored, as it always has been, for the benefit of a remote posterity?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I am not willing to go that length. I am not willing to adopt that policy. Now, Mr. Chairman, in my time I am going to ask that the Clerk shall read this memoranda furnished by the Paymaster of the Navy, that is a complete answer to this proposition, and I ask the attention of the committee to the reading of that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS,
Washington, D. C., May 27, 1912.

MEMORANDUM RE COAL, PACIFIC COAST.

NAVY YARD, MARE ISLAND, CAL.—COAL FOR YARD USE.

1. After a full investigation of western-coast coals available for use at the navy yard, Mare Island, it is found that only one company at San Francisco was able to furnish western-coast coal—Black Diamond coal from State of Washington, cost $6.75 per ton on barges alongside sea wall, Mare Island, and $6 per ton on Navy barges at company's bunker. Cost of eastern coal at yard, $8.19 per ton.

2. Efficiency reports of Pocahontas and western-coast coals prove that for the same work as would be obtained from one ton of Pocahontas coal the cost of Black Diamond coal (State of Washington coal) would be between $10 and $11, showing an increased cost of western-coast coals where used, or between $2 and $3 over the cost of Pocahontas coal.

3. The Navy Department issued orders during the latter part of 1911 for commandants at Mare Island and Puget Sound to use western-coast coals for yard and yard craft, provided same could be done at not greater cost than the use of eastern coals. From the reports from the navy yard, Puget Sound, on the use of western-coast coals for yard craft, it has been noted that coal used aboard tugs does not furnish sufficient steam, and does not give satisfaction. It requires constant use of jet, and when tugs are handling large ships it is almost impossible to hear signals from the bridge of the ship when jet is going. The coal does not give sufficient steam for tugs to handle large ships in safety. Coal gives 80 per cent ashes and fires have to be cleaned every hour. The coal used is one of the best State of Washington coals, and coal was washed to be cleared of impurities before being received. The boiler house of the U. S. S. Philadelphia, station ship, at Puget Sound, used about 10 tons a day of western coal, when an average of only 2.94 tons of eastern coal had been used heretofore. The present cost of eastern coal at Puget Sound is about $7.59, and the cost of western coal is between $3.66 and $4, which price is a low figure for western coal.

4. Naval officers who are responsible under the department for the efficiency of our ships have uniformly taken the ground that our ships of war should use only the highest grade of coal. In foreign ports only the best grade of Welch coal from the admiralty list are purchased, except in such of these ports where the best American coals can be had at satisfactory prices. In our own ports, Pocahontas, New River, and Georges Creek coals are procured. It has been found from experience that the best coal is cheaper as it contains a greater heating efficiency, and a still more important fact, that it is not as subject to spontaneous combustion, and therefore will stand storage in coal piles, and in bunkers of ships of war for a much longer period than inferior coals.

5. The main source of supply of coals for the Navy is at present obtained from the largest producers of the best grades of Pocahontas, New River, and Georges Creek coals. The purchase of coal for the Navy has been made a matter of deep and careful study, and the department now feels assured at all times of a sufficient supply of coal to meet any needs from the mines producing the highest grades of steaming coals in this country and at the lowest market rates.

6. The coal supply for the Navy in the Pacific has become a matter of great national importance. The department in its endeavor to provide for a satisfactory quality of coal for the Pacific has caused careful investigation to be made under the direction of the Bureau of Mines of all the principal coals in the western coast States, as well as in British Columbia. Nine of the best of these coals have been tested under the boilers of some of our largest vessels in the Pacific, and the results of these tests have shown that these coals do not possess the required characteristics for naval fuel, the following objections being most noticeable:

Excessive smoke.

Increased consumption of coal, making a corresponding reduction in the steaming radius of the fleet.

An increase in the number of colliers to supply coal.

Deteriorating effects on the boilers.

Increase of labor in handling coal and ashes in the fireroom.

BRITISH COLUMBIA COAL—PRICE AT SAN DIEGO, CAL.

7. During the summer of 1911, while the Pacific Fleet was at San Diego, Cal., there was somewhat of a shortage of coal for the fleet. An inquiry as to the available fuel suppliers at that port was made, and it was found that 2,000 tons of Nainaimo coal (British Columbia) could be purchased at $8.75 per ton. Roughly speaking, it takes 2 tons of Nainaimo coal to do the same work as 1 ton of Pocahontas—Pocahontas coal at that time costing on the Pacific coast, at Mare Island, about $8.50 per ton, including transportation. In other words, the department was called upon to pay $17.50 for $8.50 worth of work, not to mention ill effects of western coal on boilers, etc., and reduction of steaming radius.

8. The best British Columbia coal (Crows Nest Pass or Fernie) costs at Seattle, including duty (about 50 cents per ton), about $7.55 per long ton. This coal is less efficient than eastern coal and costs but a fraction less.

9. Shipments to Pacific coast, 1906–1911, inclusive, for past six years:

Number of tons of eastern coal shipped	676,000
Cost for transportation	$3,476,000
Cost for both the coal and transportation	$5,359,000

Issues of coal at Mare Island and Puget Sound (tons).

1907	38,419.00
1908	142,943.47
1909	95,228.39
1910	73,273.44
1911	89,484.48
Total tons issued during the past 5 years	439,348.78

Shipments to Pacific coast, fiscal year 1911.

Shipments.	Tons.	Cost of coal.	Transportation.	Average per ton.
				Coal.	Transportation.	Coal and transportation.
Foreign	124,087	$327,347.10	$660,409.02	$2.64	$5.29	$7.96
American	34,756	93,841.20	223,514.59	2.70	6.43	9.13
Total	158,843	421,188.30	883,923.61	2.65	5.56	8.85

10. The department has made 7 tests of Washington State coals, 3 tests of British Columbia coal, and on June 4 a test of 900 tons of Primero coal, from the State of Colorado, will be started on the armored cruiser Maryland, this coal costing $9.50 per ton on lighters in San Francisco Harbor. The prices of Washington State coal in Seattle for test have ranged from $4.10 to $5.40 a ton; the cost of British Columbia coal at Vancouver has ranged from $5.80 to $5.85 per ton. None of the coals so far tested has been found economical or satisfactory for naval use. With the battleship fleet operating in the Pacific it is estimated that 500,000 tons of eastern coal will be required on that coast, and by the use of western coast coals so far tested the consumption would be 45 per cent more than Pocahontas coal, so it will be seen that the requirements of Washington State coal would be about 725,000 tons a year. The department is doing everything in its power to procure satisfactory west-coast coal, and will continue tests with that end in view.

T. J. COWIE.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield that to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE].

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that I have not more time. I simply want to say to this House that there is the official statement you have heard read from one of the important bureaus of our Government, a Government which every patriotic man ought and does love. This statement shows that if we let the conditions alone as they are now everything is all right and all will be well. If this amendment is adopted, as the statement shows, it means that it will cost the Government 45 per cent more for the coal which this amendment seeks to force upon this Government than the present cost. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington on the 21st day of February, 1911, when it seemed there were five Republican Congressmen here from West Virginia, not one of whom, according to the RECORD, opened his mouth in opposition to the same, and on this account it did pass this House by the great majority the gentleman mentioned, is found on page 3228 of the RECORD, and reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to transport coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.

Had I then been a Member of this House, the amendment should not have passed without the same exposition then I have been endeavoring to make during the past two days of the amendment under consideration, which reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the time of peace for transporting coal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans for the use of the naval vessels or the navy yards on the Pacific Ocean, except this limitation shall not apply to the vessels crossing the Pacific or stationed in the Hawaiian Islands or in the Philippine Islands or to navy yards situated on those islands.

The same amendment as of a year ago on a much larger scale and much greater importance to us all and to this Republic.

Mr. Chairman, I submit for the candid consideration of this House the following reliable information, as it comes to me from a thoroughly reliable source, and I impart it to my brother Congressmen in absolute good faith, and trust you will give it credence with the belief upon your part that I am faithfully endeavoring to treat this important matter with candor and with perfect fairness and frankness when I say this amendment is in the interest of the Pacific slope or the western coal combine:

In other words, the department was called upon to pay $17.50 for $8.50 worth of work, not to mention ill effects of western coal on boilers, etc., and the reduction of steaming radius.

8. The best British Columbia coal (Crow's Nest Pass or Fernie) costs at Seattle, including duty—about 50 cents per ton—about $7.55 per long ton. This coal is less efficient than eastern coal and costs but a fraction less.

9. Shipments to Pacific coast, 1906–1911 inclusive, for past six years:

Number of tons of eastern coal shipped	676,000
Cost for transportation	$3,476,000
Cost for both the coal and transportation	$5,359,000

Issues of coal at Mare Island and Puget Sound (tons).

1907	38,419.00
1908	142,943.47
1909	95,228.39
1910	73,273.44
1911	80,484.48
Total issued during the past five years	430,348.78

Shipments to Pacific coast, fiscal year 1911.

Shipments.	Tons.	Cost of coal.	Transportation.	Average per ton.
				Coal.	Transportation.	Coal and transportation.

10. The department has made seven tests of Washington State coals, three tests of British Columbia coal, and on June 4 a test of 900 tons of Primero coal from the State of Colorado will be started on the armored cruiser Maryland—this coal costing $9.50 per ton on lighters, in San Francisco harbor. The prices of Washington State coal in Seattle for test have ranged from $4.10 to $5.40 a ton; the cost of British Columbia coal at Vancouver has ranged from $5.80 to $5.85 per ton. None of the coals so far tested have been found economical or satisfactory for naval use. With the battleship fleet operating in the Pacific, it is estimated that 500,000 tons of eastern coal will be required on that coast, and by the use of western coast coal so far tested the consumption would be 45 per cent more than Pocahontas coal, so it will be seen that the requirements of Washington State coal would be about 725,000 tons a year.

Now, let me say to you in addition to the foregoing that a saving of 45 per cent in the cost of coaling the ships, and especially with the best steam coal on earth, is a matter of vital importance to the Treasury Department of the Government, much less of vital importance to the Government in having the best coal to be procured on the continent; and I have no hesitancy in saying to the American people, through this Congress, that in West Virginia is to be found the finest coking and steam coal there is to be found anywhere on this earth. We are very proud of our natural wealth in West Virginia; we are very proud of our coal miners who mine the coal; we are very proud of our operators who have invested their life's savings in the development of our coal mines; who have come with their families away from the cities and builded their homes, in many instances, in the woodland, near their mines, where they can be with their property day and night, in order to facilitate in every way possible the supply of their products to the markets of the country.

I want to give you here an analysis of the New River smokeless coal, some of which the Navy Department of the Government is using. My distinguished friend Mr. HUMPHREY, from the great State of Washington, has made a great fight upon the floor of this House to protect and promote the material interests of those engaged in the mining of coal beyond the Rockies and along the Pacific slope. He has quoted from a speech made by Mr. UNDERWOOD, a very distinguished Member of this House and one of the most lovable characters in American politics, which speech was made some time ago—before I came here—and in which, he says, Mr. UNDERWOOD intimated that there was a combination and conspiracy between the Navy Department and the Pocahontas coal operators. Mr. UNDERWOOD will not say this now.

While my district in West Virginia does not include the Pocahontas region, which is a very wealthy part of my sister State, Virginia, I know the majority of the men engaged in the coal industry there, and there is no better class of men on this continent than the men engaged in the coal business in the Pocahontas region. They went into that rugged wilderness country, bought the land, built railroads, constructed houses, built tipples, opened up coal mines, and spent vast fortunes of money in getting in position to realize something upon their heavy investments. They are solvent, reliable, patriotic, and they are just as honest as the day is long, and God Almighty has never created better people than those dwelling within the Commonwealth of West Virginia; and I here resent any improper imputations sought now or heretofore by any man in or out of this Congress to impugn bad motives upon the part of these splendid men.

Very many of them do not agree with me in politics, but they are among the people of my State, and I am proud to be in position here to proclaim in this magnificent presence that they are of our best people.

This is my Government and my people's Government, and for any man to intimate there has been improper dealings between the Navy Department of this Government at any time and the men engaged in the coal industry in the Pocahontas region, or anywhere within the confines of West Virginia, I say again, I am here to resent it and proclaim to the world that there is no foundation in fact that will justify any such insinuation coming from any man. My people have the coal; they bought the land and own it; they have it for sale; their production is in the market. I am proud of them and proud of the coal we have in my State—apparently an inexhaustible amount of coal, oil, and gas—and if you people want to get rich and receive better treatment than you have ever received anywhere on this earth, come with your money into the hills of West Virginia, make your investments, take care of them as our people have, grow up with our State, and take pride in our State's institutions, and you will all lay by a competency for old age. We have churches, Sunday schools, schoolhouses, courthouses, and, above all, our people are the most generous and hospitable anywhere to be found on the American Continent. Climatic conditions are of the very best, and it is a fruitful field for investors to visit. We have no use for stragglers. When people come among us we want them to know that so long as they are law-abiding, liberty loving, and respect the rights of others, look after and take care of their own rights, we invite them to dwell with us.

Now, in this connection I submit for your consideration an analysis of the New River smokeless coal, to be found in my district, in a region of country traversed by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, one of the very best railroad companies doing business in the United States, and which analysis was finally completed on June 3, 1910:

Moisture	1.18
Fixed carbon	71.80
Volatile	22.54
Ash	4.48
	100.00
Sulphur	.89
B. T. U.	15,040
B. T. U. (dry basis)	15,220

Is it any wonder that the Government of the United States, and especially the Navy Department, is exceedingly anxious to have such coal? It does not leave clinkers in the furnaces, nor does it leave cinders; and while I do not desire to embarrass my friend from the State of Washington, nor would I say anything derogatory of the coal mined on the Pacific slope, but from what I understand from the analysis of that coal in history and the history thereof, and from what information I can get, I understand that it will produce heat and leaves the furnaces practically full of cinders and clinkers, requiring most of the time of the firemen to pull them out, and such a coal will burn out furnaces quicker than any other coal produced. There is much difference between cinders and clinkers and a soft white ash. The coal the Government is using from West Virginia, as it burns out leaves no clinkers, no cinders, and nothing but white ashes or dust.

This amendment ought to be defeated, and it will be defeated, because there are so many men in this Congress, every one of whom is an intelligent man, and I believe every one of whom is honestly inclined, a great majority of whom are men of affairs, business experience, and therefore broad minded; and they know that if it requires practically 2 tons of the western or Pacific slope coal to produce as much steam as 1 ton of the West Virginia coal will produce, and if there is from one to three dollars difference in the price of the coal per ton, every one of you men know that it is a money-saving proposition to this Government to continue the use of the West Virginia coal. The Secretary of the Navy wants it done, and insists that it shall be done. He does not want to cripple the Navy; he wants to get along as cheaply as he can and make the best record he can—that is, a record of economy—and when the information comes from that office that to continue the use of the West Virginia coal means a saving of, in round numbers, 45 per cent in the cost of the coal to the Government, I say to you that the patriotism of the men of this House, the moral desire to do right is such that this amendment can never pass this House.

I do from the bottom of my heart thank my Democratic friends all over the East of this country and from the Southland and those of you who reside in the Middle West for the very great interest you have taken in this matter. Let the vote come; let men show their colors; and when the final count is had this desperate amendment will be defeated.

I have no word of complaint against my brother Congressman from the State of Washington for waging the fight he has, as he is necessarily anxious to do what he can for the people of his western clime. And while it is true, as stated by him, this amendment has heretofore passed this Congress, I am here to-day to tell you that it has never been resisted until this contest began, nor have the facts relative to this important matter been placed before the American Congress until within the last few days.

If I have been instrumental in doing the Government a service in this matter, if I have been instrumental in saving the Government a vast amount of money, if I have been instrumental in properly presenting the cause of the business men of my State, defending the rights of the operators, and protecting the interests of the miners of my State, I am content and proud of the opportunity to do so. Let justice be done, it matters not where the chips fall. Let us look at this matter from a thoroughly business standpoint, from the standpoint of dollars and cents, and if you do I am sure the Government will not be harassed by the incorporation of this unmeritorious, if not deceptive, amendment to this important naval bill.

I have been carefully watching this amendment from the moment it was first introduced, nor have I lost a minute's time from this House while in session, as I was anxious in the discussion of this amendment to do this House a service and let the country know that the West Virginia coal operators are giving value received for every single penny they are receiving from the Government of the United States for their coal.

My friend from Washington has intimated that the Government is paying to my people $6.50 a ton for the coal delivered along the coast of the Pacific slope. Nearly all of this money is absorbed by railroad companies and steamship companies which have to haul and float the coal to the market. They give employment to hundreds of railroad men and seamen. The fact is, our operators are making very little profit on their coal. I wish they could make $6.50 a ton profit and that it was economical upon the part of the Government to pay that price.

My friend has also intimated that 2,000,000 tons of the eastern coal per annum was being shipped to the Pacific slope. So far as I am individually concerned, I hope it all comes from West Virginia, as that would mean a trade to my people of at least $12,000,000. I hope he is right in his assumption, and I wish it was $112,000,000 that the coal operators in West Virginia were getting annually for their coal, and that the consumers of the coal could make use of it, as that would give employment to hundreds and thousands of idle men and give them fair prices for their labor and good conditions under which to labor.

I love to see and deal with broadgauged men. Let us demonstrate to the American people that we are broadgauged, capable of ignoring little things in life in order to accomplish the more important matters.

Mr. Chairman, let the vote come; we are ready. This Congress is ready, and as Representatives of the American people, they are for one time, at least, in dealing with this important subject, conscientiously prepared to act. Their verdict will be the verdict of the people; their judgment will be the judgment of the American people, and when it has been explained and they have acted, all will be well with my people.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington will be adopted. There is, in my opinion, no question but what it is in the interest of economy. There is no question but what in time of peace, and the provision applies only to times of peace, our Navy will be supplied with a fuel in every way as satisfactory as it is supplied by shipping the Pocahontas and other Chesapeake coals around the Horn. I have another reason for favoring this amendment. In my opinion, if the Navy had been using Pacific coast coals for the last three or four years we would have found much less difficulty in settling the question of opening the Alaskan coal fields. In my mind there is no question at all but what certain influences emanating from localities where the Chesapeake coals are mined and controlled have made it more difficult to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the Alaskan coal situation. So long as the Navy uses Chesapeake coals, so long as those industries and the carrying industries which carry the coal are interested in preventing the development of the Alaskan coal fields, so long it will be more difficult than it would be otherwise to open those fields to development; and if the Navy is compelled to use Pacific coast coals, we will have an added influence in favor of a reasonable development on the Pacific coast. There are coals on the Pacific coast that are just as satisfactory in every way for naval use as the Chesapeake coals, except that perhaps they do not contain quite as many steam units in the same space, but that is a matter of entire indifference except under the stress of war.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. Under the stress of war it is absolutely essential that we shall have the greatest number of steam units in a given cargo space, but that is a matter of entire indifference in times of peace. The land service and the tender service do not need the most intensely condensed fuel in the world for efficient use——

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. PADGETT. The statement I have here shows from official tests made that the western coals cost $17 and for the same heat in eastern coals it costs $8.50, and there is a difference of not less than 45 per cent.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has figures which, in the opinion of certain people, prove that.

Mr. PADGETT. No; that is the official test made by the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. MONDELL. I have investigated this question of steaming coals, I know something about it myself, and I do know——

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). That there have been many tests which show that there are Pacific-coast coals that have very nearly the same steaming efficiency as the Pocahontas coals.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. And I am of the opinion that the amendment is in the interest of economy.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I think that if there is any place connected with the Government service where they ought to put the soft pedal on monopoly it is in the case of the Pocahontas coal proposition and the Navy. They practically limit their purchase to that one company.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; I will not yield. Of all the millions of tons of coal that they have sent to the Pacific Ocean, it all comes from the Pocahontas mine, so far as I know.

Mr. PADGETT. No; there are three of them.

Mr. BUTLER. Four companies.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Four companies.

Mr. BUTLER. There are four companies—the Pennsylvania, the Georges Creek, the New River, and Pocahontas.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They never get any coal except right up here in our little part of the country. So far as monopolies are concerned, there are more than six different mines in the State of Washington that I know; there are several mines in British Columbia and one mine down in Oregon. Nobody wants to limit this coal to any particular State or mine. Now, to show you how unfair the gentleman's statement is, that the Pocahontas coal is 45 per cent better—and I have here a copy of the hearings before the Navy Department—that was only when they were running under forced draft; the Bureau of Mines says there is only 6 to 8 per cent difference in efficiency in the Washington coal and the Pocahontas.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will not, because the gentleman insisted on limiting the time. It makes a difference, because the Navy does not know how to use western coal and does not want to learn. And in that particular test to which the gentleman [Mr. PADGETT] refers, let me show you the unfairness of the proposition. They refused to take freshly mined coal, although those interested offered to furnish it to them without cost. I have here a copy of the hearings in which the man who represented the coal company, Mr. Huston, made the charge, in talking to the Secretary of the Navy, that the tests had not been fair, and he admitted it and said they would give him a further test.

Now, to show you the unfairness of that long recital that was just read, they ended up by saying it would take 725,000 tons of western coal per year. For what? For the entire fleet, not for the vessels that are on the Pacific Ocean. I want to say to this committee now that there is but one vessel out on the Pacific coast, except in the reserve fleet, and that is a third-class cruiser, and the reserve fleet has only a lot of old, secondhand, dilapidated, antiquated vessels, and the Navy Department wants you to think that they ought to have high-priced coal to run them at a high rate of speed up and down that coast in time of peace.

The truth about it is it is only a question of convenience, that is all, whether or not you are going to have a little more smoke and a little more coal. I want to ask again: Are you going to pay one or two million dollars a year in order that these men who are out on the Pacific coast, in time of peace, may have a coal that makes a little too much smoke? That is the whole question.

Now, this coal is good enough for the great merchant vessels that run on the Pacific. It is used by the Pacific Mail, which has among the finest vessels in the world, and it is used by the great Hill vessel, and it is used by the Revenue Cutter Service. It is used by the merchant vessels which run from that country to Europe—foreign vessels—it is good enough for everyone, in fact, except the Navy. But the Navy wants you to buy this high-priced coal, and pay from one to two million dollars a year extra for it to be used on vessels that stay on Puget Sound or run up and down the coast to San Francisco. What is the use of running vessels in time of peace at a high rate of speed? The Navy experts even say the difference is not over 10 per cent in ordinary speed. As the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] says, when you compel them to use this coal, they will learn how to get rid of the smoke. And let me again call your attention to this fact: That when we had that hearing at the department, Mr. Huston, representing one of the coal companies, said to the Secretary of the Navy, "In time of war you would be compelled to use Pacific coal. Do you not think you had better get accustomed to it in time of peace?" The Secretary of the Navy admitted that this was the most serious question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 26, line 7, by adding at the end of the line the following proviso:

"Provided, That the coal purchased by the Government shall be mined by labor that is employed not exceeding eight hours a day."

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order at this time.

Mr. PADGETT. I would like to have the amendment read again.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 6 for the purpose of offering a proviso by way of amendment; a proviso to the amendment which was adopted last Saturday, I believe.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. What page?

Mr. PADGETT. Page 6.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire as to the purport of the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. I will state that the amendment that was adopted the other day repealed the provision passed in 1910, relative to bureau officers, and I have this amendment:

Provided, That no officer who has received his commission under the provision of said act shall be deprived of said commission or the rank, title, or emoluments thereof by virtue of this repeal.

That is the usual clause that is inserted to save the repealing clause.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for information, without objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of the amendment, the following proviso:

"Provided, That no officer who has received his commission under the provisions of said act shall be deprived of said commission or the rank, title, or emoluments thereof by virtue of this repeal."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman, while we are on that page, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman's motion would require unanimous consent.

Mr. HENSLEY. We are on that page now.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent was given only to return to this page for the purpose of offering the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent to return to that page in order that the gentleman may offer the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that the same amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next unfinished amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, this disposes of all the matters that were passed over for consideration except the amendments relative to the eight-hour provisions. I am going to ask that they remain in abeyance until we take up the question of the eight-hour provisions under the "Increase of the Navy."

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I want to suggest to the Chairman that perhaps he is in error in saying that we have disposed of all the amendments. If I am not mistaken, my colleague, Mr. MURRAY, from Boston, has an amendment which was passed over.

Mr. PADGETT. That is included.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. That is not an eight-hour provision.

Mr. PADGETT. That is connected with the labor question.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I do not want to imperil my colleague's rights.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no. Then suppose we return to page 59, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment pending.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PADGETT. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, was not the gentleman's amendment offered on page 59?

The CHAIRMAN. On page 45, as the Chair is informed.

Mr. MURRAY. I think it was on page 45, at the end of that portion of the bill in regard to the Bureau of Construction and Repair, at line 5, page 45.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 45, line 5, by striking out the period and inserting the following:

"Provided, That no part of any money appropriated in this act shall be used for construction or repair of vessels at navy yards or naval stations in the United States by enlisted men of the Navy."

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to substitute for the pending amendment an amendment which is to the same effect but which is phrased in language that is more satisfactory to the men who are affected in the navy yards by the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] asks unanimous consent to substitute for his amendment the following.

Mr. PADGETT. Let the Clerk report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 45, line 5, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriations authorized by this act shall be expended for the pay of enlisted men or seamen, not including officers, while doing repair work belonging to any recognized trade on battleships or other vessels of the Navy when such battleships or vessels are docked or laid up at any navy yard for repairs. This provision shall not apply to such ordinary duties as are engaged in by the crew while at sea, except the dismantling and assembling of armament for the purpose of repairs."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the objection and also the point of order. It is clearly subject to a point of order, because it is not limited to this paragraph, but it says "this act."

Mr. MURRAY. I will withdraw it and offer it at a later place. As it relates to the same subject matter, however, I thought we might save time by offering it here.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the matter ought to come before the committee for settlement, I suggest that my colleague Mr. MURRAY be allowed to offer his amendment as a new paragraph, on page 63, line 6, just before the increase of the Navy.

Mr. MURRAY. I had in mind to offer it at page 65, line 6.

Mr. PADGETT. Then the gentleman will not have to ask unanimous consent for that.

Mr. MURRAY. I wanted to offer it now, so that we might clean up the whole matter.

Mr. PADGETT. We will take it up when we reach it.

Mr. MURRAY. Very well, then I withdraw the amendment at this time.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, we reach the question of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] relative to the battleships.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I should like to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MURRAY. Do I understand that the gentleman from Missouri has an amendment to my amendment or to the amendment of my colleague Mr. ROBERTS?

The CHAIRMAN. He offers his amendment to the amendment of the gentleman's colleague Mr. ROBERTS. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "two first-class battleships," and the word "each" wherever it occurs, and insert in lieu thereof the words "one first-class battleship."

Mr. PADGETT. Before we get to that, let me ask the gentleman [Mr. MURRAY] what became of the amendment he offered, for which he asked to substitute this other one, and then stated that he would bring it up on page 65. Do I understand that the gentleman withdraws the amendment on page 45 for the purpose of introducing the other one at page 65?

Mr. MURRAY. No, Mr. Chairman, I desire to have my rights on the original amendment that I offered on page 45.

Mr. PADGETT. Then we had better dispose of that.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. May I ask my colleague if he intends to offer both amendments?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes; I want this one to this paragraph as to the Bureau of Construction and Repair. I would rather have this other one that I have in my hand, but I do not want to lose my opportunity to insist on both of them.

Mr. PADGETT. We have to come back anyway, so suppose we wait until we get to page 65.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. As I understand, if the later amendment of my colleague is adopted, his first amendment will not be necessary, and will not be pressed.

Mr. MURRAY. That is it. That is why I wanted first consideration of this subsequent one; but that was objected to.

Mr. PADGETT. We will consider it when we reach page 65.

Mr. MURRAY. I suppose we might reach an agreement——

Mr. PADGETT. It can be offered then. I do not want to make any agreement now, because it may be subject to a point of order.

Mr. MURRAY. I do not believe it is.

Mr. PADGETT. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] if we can arrive at an agreement as to the debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I think so, Mr. Chairman. I do not know how many Members who favor battleships desire to speak at this time. I assume there will be several of them. Personally I do not propose to take much time, perhaps not over five minutes. What does the gentleman from Tennessee suggest as a reasonable time for this debate?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I suggest an equal division of time between those who desire one and two battleships, and no battleship.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know about that.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, it is not very clear what amendment is being referred to here. Is it the battleship proposition?

Mr. PADGETT. The battleship proposition.

Mr. BARTLETT. We have had a game of battledore and shuttlecock, and I wanted to find out what was pending.

Mr. PADGETT. It occurs to me that under the existing conditions an hour's debate on this question will be ample, 30 minutes on a side. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] some of my time.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I would suggest 40 minutes on a side, in view of the magnitude of the proposition.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Can not the gentleman make it 30 minutes for each proposition?

Mr. PADGETT. Then those against all battleships would claim half of the time, because the one battleship is a battleship proposition. The one-ship men can get recognition with the two-ship men. I think one hour's debate will satisfy everyone.

Mr. CANNON. Of course, the bill will be read. This is general debate, I take it, that the gentleman is fixing the time for?

Mr. PADGETT. No; this is under the five-minute rule, and at the end of the hour debate will be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the power to move to close debate under the five-minute rule at any time, and, after all, that is the most valuable debate. If the gentlemen desire more than five minutes, I have no objection to the hour being divided as the gentleman suggests, but this is a large committee and it is a short paragraph. The gentleman from Tennessee, on the reading of the paragraph, can close debate at any time under the five-minute rule, if the majority desire.

Mr. PADGETT. I will state that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] and myself discussed the matter, and after looking over the field it occurred to us that with the information we had before us an hour would be sufficient time.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know that I shall want any time, and still I might want five minutes, and I apprehend that that is the case with many gentlemen on this side.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will state that we will proceed under the five-minute rule for the present, but gentlemen may expect that after about an hour there will be a motion to close debate if it is not arranged otherwise.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this is the first time since the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress when the Naval Committee has reported a bill that did not carry battleships. During all that time the Naval Committee has consistently reported two battleships for each session of Congress, and each session of Congress has enacted into law a provision for two battleships. Now, however, we have before us a naval program that omits battleships entirely.

The program heretofore has not been one of increase of battleships of the American Navy; it has been a program to keep an effective fighting force of the size we then had. The additions of each year have not been for the purpose of building up an enormous Navy, but they have been made for the purpose of placing in commission effective fighting vessels to take the place of those becoming obsolete by reason of age or by reason of the rapid strides in naval architecture and the development of fighting vessels.

The effect of the program which has been carried on thus far has been to place the United States to-day second among the list of naval powers of the world, second in the amount of tonnage already constructed.

And while the United States has been carrying on this moderate and sensible program, some of the other nations of the earth have been carrying on a larger program, a more elaborate construction of ships, so that, when the ships already authorized by the United States are constructed and the ships that are authorized by other nations are constructed, the United States will drop to third place among the naval powers of the world.

But if at this session the Congress stops the program of building battleships, it immediately drops the United States not merely from second to third, but down into the fifth position among the naval powers of the world. Is that something the people of this country want to see done? The letters, petitions, and memorials that are being received by scores by Members of this body, and by the Committee on Naval Affairs, lead me to believe that the American people do not look upon such a policy with any degree of approval. If there is any one institution in this country of which the American people are proud it is their Navy; and they want to see it maintained on its present plane of efficiency. [Applause.]

And I say to our Democratic friends on the other side that if they imagine they are making a popular move by stopping this increase of our Navy and preventing the building of battleships to take the place of those that are becoming obsolete, they are making the greatest of mistakes, as they will learn later. The Navy of the United States appeals to the patriotism of the people.

There is no institution in this country more popular among the people than the Navy; and they want to see that Navy maintained as an efficient fighting unit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by my colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. ROBERTS. In spite of the action of the Democratic caucus on a recent occasion, I rise at this time as much a Democrat as any man in this Chamber to support that amendment. I said in that caucus that I believe the Democratic Party would make a grave and serious mistake if they adjourned this Congress without carrying out the pledge of the Denver platform—to enact such laws as would give the United States an adequate Navy.

I tried to point out to my colleagues in that caucus that with a Nation which has to-day the annual wealth of more than $125,000,000,000, a restricted naval program that provided for no battleships at a time when the naval appropriation was $125,000,000 was a short-sighted policy of national defense.

I have tried to show that, in spite of the arguments as to the expenditures against the Navy, the naval appropriation is about one-tenth of 1 per cent of the annual wealth of the American people. [Applause.]

It is a fundamental of the business management of to-day that insurance against risk and loss must be paid for and accounted as a fixed charge on the business. Men may try to get insurance on their lives and property at low rates, but in the last analysis they are pretty sure to get that insurance at any rate.

I believe that it is wise from the point of view of protecting the national wealth against possible loss from causes that seem now most unlikely to arise, but causes that may come upon us at a most unlikely time, to appropriate a comparatively small amount which well may be charged up to insurance. The total expenditure of $125,000,000 a year for the Navy is a tax of 1 and a small fraction of 1 per cent of the total of capitalized industries in the country. Such an appropriation represents an actual per capita tax of about $1.30, which is small indeed when it is compared with the per capita income of $590. It is shown that the Spanish War cost the United States $500,000,000. We had a Navy in that war that was splendidly efficient [applause]; but if we had had a Navy that included then four more Oregons than the one we did have, it is certain there would have been no war. [Applause.] The cost of these additional ships would have been, to be sure, approximately $30,000,000. An investment, therefore, of 6 per cent of the money the war cost would have saved half a billion of dollars and hundreds of lives. [Applause.]

I said a few moments ago to one of my very good friends, the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Judge ADAMSON, of Georgia, that I was in favor of two battleships. He asked me if I was in favor of a navy to comprise 100 battleships. Of course, I am not and so I told him. The judge wondered what I believed an adequate navy to be, and I am glad that he asked me the question.

Mr. Chairman, I believe it is wise to quote from the remarks of the gentleman whose duty it is in this connection to advise this legislative body. I refer to the head of the great Navy Department, and I find at page 36 of the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Navy an expression of what may be accepted as an adequate American Navy. That statement gives not only the opinion of the Secretary himself, but also the consensus of opinion of the best men in the Navy and out of it who have given consideration to this subject. You may readily see by an examination of the accompanying tables the sea strength of the navies of the world as of December 1, 1911.

SEA STRENGTH.

Tables showing the relative strength of the Navy and its importance in comparison with foreign navies December 1, 1911. Vessels undergoing trials are considered as completed. The following vessels are not included in the tables: Those over 20 years old, unless they have been reconstructed and rearmed since 1905; transports, colliers, repair ships, converted merchant vessels, or any other auxiliaries; vessels of less than 1,000 tons, except torpedo craft; torpedo craft of less than 50 tons.

[1] Battleships having a main battery of all big guns (11 inches or more in caliber).
[2] Battleships, first class, are those of (about) 10,000 tons or more displacement.
[3] Armored cruisers having guns of largest caliber in main battery and capable of taking their place in line of battle with the battleships. They have an increase of speed at the expense of carrying fewer guns in main battery and a decrease in armor protection; also called battleship cruisers.
[4] Includes all unarmored cruising vessels above 1,000 tons displacement.
[5] Includes smaller battleships and monitors. No more vessels of this class are being proposed or built by the great powers.
[6] Includes vessels of colonies.

Now, we do not propose to rival England and Germany and Japan in the matter of a building program for the Navy. But we do believe that the annual appropriation should be such that it will provide for the future of our Nation a fleet of at least 20 ships in the first line and 20 ships in the second line of the Navy. The present strength of the Navy is 37 battleships, of which 28 may be considered as worthy of a place in the first line and the remaining 9 as second-line ships. Sixteen of those 28 are pre-Dreadnaughts and their qualifications of the first line is indeed doubtful; certainly three years from now they can not be so qualified, and the first fleet has been reduced to 12 ships—new ships are added to it. Four of the nine ships classed now in the second line will reach the limit of the recognized life of a battleship in 1915–16. They must be removed, therefore, from the second fleet and relegated to the line of harbor defenses.

The ships that we may provide for at this time can not be ready for at least three years, and we must legislate at this time with the thought in mind as to what the condition of our Navy may be in the year 1915–16.

There is a splendid page of our American history that tells the story of how Perry and his men on Lake Erie in the War of 1812 hastily built a navy and with it swept England from the seas. It is only matched by that page of American history which shows that with undaunted courage the "embattled farmer" stood in Massachusetts and in other places and made a great fight for constitutional Government for equality and liberty. [Applause.]

That courage can be exampled at any time by American soldiers and sailors; but present-day conditions are such that a navy can not be hastily put together. If we permit this Congress and future Congresses to go by without making the appropriations necessary to maintain an adequate navy, the time may come, and I for one am afraid that it will come, when we shall wish that we had made this appropriation.

I listened with great interest the other day to my colleague from Massachusetts, Judge HARRIS, as he told of the great work that his illustrious father did as his share in contributing to the building of the original American Navy. I felt a reasonable and just pride as I listened to his recital of that story, and I shall never forget his recital of what that father said to him when he brought to him the news of Dewey's victory at Manila. "Well, boy," said the father, "it seems now after many years that eight years of hard work and strife has finally been of some service to the country." I wonder whether or not it will ever again be necessary to repeat the victory of Manila Bay. If such a necessity does arise, the economy of to-day will be looked upon as a foolhardy policy, in view of any such contingency, and it is because I feel this way that I am pledged to step out of the ranks of my Democratic colleagues and to urge this House to support the amendment of my colleague, Mr. ROBERTS, even though it comes from a Republican member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I protest that this bill is not a political measure. I protest that when it comes to the matter of the American Navy we should not be Republicans, Democrats, nor partisans of any class, but we should give to the consideration of the matter the best opinion and political judgment that we can, in order that there may be a true and right solution of the great problem that confronts us. [Applause.]

It has been only 14 years since the Spanish War, and we all remember the great work the battleship Oregon did when she made her great triumphant world tour from Manila to Santiago. We all know what splendid work that ship did at that time, and it is hard for some to realize that the time has come when the Oregon must be retired from the first line of fighting ships in the Navy; but the fact is, as is contained in the Secretary's report and as given to us by the Navy experts of the country, that not only the Oregon, but the Indiana, the Iowa, the Massachusetts must soon be retired from the first line. We are not asking to do anything more than to maintain the Navy at its present standard of efficiency when we ask to have the resolution for two battleships appropriated.

Now, I have no fears of the danger of war. I have no thoughts of impending disaster; but I want to help in every way that I may to maintain an adequate Navy, particularly at this time when the Panama Canal, at an expenditure of $400,000,000 of American money, is about to be completed. I want our Navy to be of such strength that it may be able to maintain its high place among the navies of the world. And in urging this thought upon this House I am trying to reflect the sentiment of that great water-front district in the city of Boston that has honored me by sending me as its Representative to this House.

If you believe that this is a sectional question, however, let me call your attention to the editorial comments of the newspapers of the country, regardless of their political affiliations, on the days just after the caucus that we Democrats had on this matter of a building program for the Navy. If you believe that this is a sectional question, let me assure you that men who have campaigned throughout our country bear testimony to the fact that mere mention of the glorious work of the American Navy always touches a responsive chord in the breasts of the American citizens. I hope, therefore, that, regardless of party and regardless of the section of the country from which they may come, a sufficient number of the Members of this House may support this amendment for two battleships to insure an appropriation by this House. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, during the general debate I took occasion to say that the battleship question does not cause the usual excitement this year. The reason probably is that everyone knows what the final disposition of the question will be. The Democratic majority of the House will vote for no battleships. The Senate will insist on at least one, and the House will finally yield to a program so wisely limited in order to keep the Navy at its present state of efficiency. [Applause.] I have consistently voted for the last 8 or 10 years for one battleship. Way down deep in my heart I am frank to say that I am for no battleships. [Applause.] I do not think we would incur any risk whatsoever if none were provided this year. But so it may not be said that those of us who are favoring arbitration are willing to go to the extent of denying to the country such means of defense as seem, unfortunately, still necessary, under present conditions I am willing to vote for one, which means a vote not for an increase of the Navy, but for the maintenance of the Navy at its present strength. No matter what position a man may take on the question of battleships, there may be and are great differences among us, but there is no difference as to one paramount proposition, and that is we are all in favor of the absolute security of our country. [Applause.] Now, that security might be achieved in two different ways. It might be achieved according to the old system, which unfortunately is still in vogue, of building battleship after battleship and thereby taxing the resources of all the nations to their utmost.

Or it might be done in the same way that civilized nations are now guarding their domestic peace, namely, by law, or, speaking in an international sense, by the perfection of the necessary legal machinery to adjust and settle international difficulties in a peaceful way. And along this line I wish to call the attention of the Members to the fact that this legal machinery is no longer a mere dream of theorists, inasmuch as The Hague conferences, the first as well as the second, have unanimously agreed upon the creation of a high court of nations, which is to decide all questions of an international character that might be brought before it. That high court of nations was established in 1899 at the first Hague conference. At the second conference the court was perfected. In order to secure a real judicial tribunal The Hague conference agreed on a court of arbitral justice, and the motion to establish such was carried unanimously by all the nations represented at that conference—44 in number. Only the mooted question of how the judges should be distributed among the different nations and how many judges should be appointed is the cause of its not having been put in execution so far. But all signs point to the probability that at the next Hague conference in 1915 that court will be established.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And in connection with that court, the nations will agree on general arbitration treaties such as have been proposed by President Taft recently. We are going to have them in spite of the Senate of the United States, because the time is very close at hand when that great body will have to do the bidding of the will of the American people regarding this great question. And after we have arbitration treaties with all great powers these powers among themselves will negotiate similar ones, so that the civilized world will be one great net of arbitration treaties. And the next question will be a code of international law to be sanctioned by all the parliaments and to be applied in all cases that may be brought before that court.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a substitute for your battleships, more humane and much more economical and much more in accordance with modern civilization than your method of force. And that substitute, I hope, will be supported even by those who are now supporting the policy of battleships. I think we ought to all join hands if we can for a substitute such as that which will relieve the people of this country and other countries of a well-nigh unbearable burden of taxation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KONIG, Mr. SAUNDERS, and Mr. TURNBULL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TURNBULL] is recognized.

Mr. TURNBULL. Mr. Chairman, if I had been given the power to fix the battleship program in the bill under consideration, I think I should have included therein one battleship or one fast armored cruiser, as that has been the policy heretofore advocated by the Democrats. But when a majority of my colleagues on this side of the House, after due consideration, determined otherwise, I abided by the decision, as I always expect to do.

I am a highland man, if I may use that expression, and prior to becoming a member of the Naval Committee had given very little attention to the character of the ships to be built or of the needs of our Navy along that line. I am in favor of having a Navy sufficient to protect our rapidly increasing foreign commerce, to protect our seacoasts in time of war, and to give assurance of protection to our citizens in whatever country they may desire to do business. I attended the naval review in New York in October, 1911, and was justly proud of our 7-mile line of battleships exhibited on that occasion, and I am doubly proud of the officers in command and of the men behind the guns, for I believe the same spirit now exists among those men that animated and permeated the hearts of the brave men who manned our ships and helped so materially in giving life to our Nation and liberty to our people in the beginning. I am satisfied that as a fighting force they have no equal in any of the nations of the earth. [Applause.]

Since I have become a member of the Naval Committee I have studied the subject of the needs of our Navy in every way I possibly could, and have listened carefully to the testimony taken before the committee on the subject, and the more I try to study and consider the question from a common-sense business standpoint the more I doubt the expediency or wisdom of the construction of any more battleships of the Dreadnought type, such as those we are now building or have already in commission.

Let us look at the history of and effect of this battleship building. When the Merrimac and the Monitor had the engagement in Hampton Roads, our ships were wooden vessels and our guns were smooth bore and of short range. When we began to armor plate the ships, we began to improve the type of the guns, and they were changed from smooth bores to rifles. As the thickness of the armor plate was increased, the size and length of the guns were increased. As the size of the guns was increased of course the size, character, and destructiveness of the projectiles were increased.

We invented the torpedo, which is a projectile loaded with high explosives that are fired out of tubes, and when started they propel themselves, and it is admitted that when one of these strikes one of our Dreadnoughts it ends the life of the ship, it matters not what is the thickness of the armor plate. Then the submarine boats were invented so that they can travel under water and fire these torpedoes with the same accuracy, almost, as if they were upon the surface of the water. This necessitated the building of torpedo-boat destroyers to try and prevent the deadly effect of the torpedo boats, and now it is claimed that each one of these Dreadnoughts should have to protect it five torpedo boats and two destroyers. In addition to what I have stated, a torpedo shell has been invented that can be fired out of the same guns as the steel projectiles with nearly the same range, and it is admitted that if one of these shells strikes the ship or strikes and explodes in the water within from 40 to 100 feet of the ship that it will destroy it.

Now, then, what do we deduce from this state of facts? We build a battleship of the Dreadnought type that costs not less than $12,000,000, armored with the heaviest armor plate and equipped with the best guns known, and this ship can be destroyed, first, by a steel projectile fired out of a 14-inch rifle, which it is claimed will pierce the armor and destroy the ship certainly at a distance of 10,000 yards; second, by a torpedo fired out of a torpedo tube; third, by a torpedo shell fired out of a 14-inch gun; fourth, by a mine that may be put in any harbor.

When I consider these facts, I ask myself the question, What good is the armor if the projectile will pierce it? What superior advantage does a large ship have over a smaller one if it can be sunk by a torpedo, torpedo shell, or mine as readily as a smaller ship? We all know, whether we have any common sense or not, that a large ship can be hit more readily than a smaller one. If what I have said is true, the fighting capacity of our ships has not advanced one inch beyond the ships in which Decatur and Perry won their victories. These large ships are of slow speed and can travel only in very deep water. The ships do not do the fighting, but it is done by the men with the guns, and I can not help but feel that three ships built at the same cost that one of these big ships costs now, and with a greater rate of speed and manned by the same men and with the same character of guns will be more effective than the one big ship. This is certainly true if there is anything in the tactics of the great generals that the way to win a battle is to get there first with the most men.

In my judgment we are putting too many eggs in one basket. We are expending our revenues faster than we gather them in. Think of the great expense and ask yourself the question, Where are we drifting? We are simply aping foreign nations, with no fixed policy of our own. Have we made any progress? Yes; but principally in the facility with which we spend the people's money, wrung from them, it is claimed, by unjust taxation; for the cost of the Navy has increased in the last 20 years from about thirty millions to one hundred and thirty millions of dollars. It is easy to expand, but it is hard to contract, and it looks as if we are using greater efforts to find new subjects of taxation than we are to reduce the burdens now resting upon us.

Mr. Chairman, there is great unrest among the people all over the country. It looks as if the wealth of the country continues to accumulate in the hands of a few, and the burdens of the people who do the work and receive the wages are becoming greater as the days go by. If we would win battles in the future we must so act as to keep the men behind the guns contented and happy. Let the people at home become discontented and poverty stricken, and then patriotism and love of country will vanish and the big ships and the big guns will become useless. [Applause.]

Mr. KONIG. Mr. Chairman, it will take me but a few minutes to express my views on the subject now under discussion. I am a Democrat, and a party man at that, and, thank God, since I have been a Member of this House I have never had to vote against my party organization. The question of the size of the American Navy is not now and never has been a party question; and, moreover, whatever the caucus may have done in respect to this bill, I am not bound by it, for I remained away from the caucus.

Just exactly how many battleships or how many cruisers or how many torpedo boats we have, I confess I do not know as well, perhaps, as I ought to, and I also confess I do not know just exactly how our Navy compares in strength with that of France or of England or of Germany. But I do know, Mr. Chairman, that there are other navies far larger and far better equipped than ours. And I also know, Mr. Chairman, that the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Navy have urged Congress to make an appropriation for two additional battleships. These officials are in the possession of the information that makes them experts; and in any event I would rather follow their judgment and be guilty of an extravagance than to refuse to follow it and suffer the disastrous consequences that must attend upon a false economy in so important a matter as the strength of our Navy.

The American Nation, whether wisely or unwisely, has become a world power; our interests are no longer confined to the North American Continent. We have become an empire, with possessions in all corners of the world; we have those gold bricks within the shadow of the shores of Japan—the Philippine Islands; we have Hawaii to watch over, and also Porto Rico, and we must not forget our foster child, Cuba. The Panama Canal represents an investment of hundreds of millions of dollars and the best engineering genius of all time. If the American flag is ever to come down in any of these possessions or dependencies, it must come down of our own freely given consent. We can not let ourselves be put in the position where we may be forced to lower the flag.

These considerations and the consideration that a fellow who can take care of himself seldom has to fight compel me as a lover of peace to vote for the building of additional battleships. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL and Mr. MARTIN of Colorado rose.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I do not care about shutting off that side altogether. I am willing to follow the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Colorado. I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] for one battleship. [Applause.] And I shall support it with some reservation, because, as a matter of fact, I had fully made up my mind not to vote for any battleships this year. It is not often that that side of the House does a really good thing, but I think they did a very excellent thing when the caucus decided against battleships, not that I think the caucus decision will stand as a final decision of the Congress, because I think that ultimately we shall provide for one battleship. But I think it was a most excellent thing to challenge the attention of the country to the mad race of the world in competition in the building of enormous and costly ships of war, ships of a character that never have been tried out in actual warfare, and ships that, at the very best we can hope for them, will within a decade be useless and valueless. England, Germany, and France, and to a lesser extent Japan and Russia, each feels it can not afford to be too far distanced in this race for military preparedness.

We are the only nation in the world that can safely halt our naval program, for there is not a man under the flag who knows his country and understands the condition of the world that has the slightest notion that there would be any danger whatever to our country, its honor, or its people if we did not build a battleship in the next 20 years. [Applause.] Not that I believe we should wholly neglect this arm of defense. On the contrary, I have always believed that we should adopt and steadily maintain a decent and reasonable naval program, that we should have such a Navy as will form a reasonable first line of defense in the very improbable event of a great war.

We are in a position now to do the world a mighty service in calling to the attention of the civilized world the fact that we are not being carried away by this naval madness that seems now to control all the courts of Europe and the Orient—a naval madness that is well-nigh rushing into bankruptcy the greatest nations of the world. Let us stop and think how rapidly these naval expenditures have been increasing, the world over, in the past few years, and how certainly they must lead to the bankruptcy of the nations if they are to be continued in the same ratio for a few years longer. There must be a halt in this tremendous increase of naval armaments, and we are in such a position that we can show all the world that we are not carried away by this desire to have more and larger ships than any other nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not one of those who look for the speedy coming of the millenium. I am not one of those who believe that wars will ever wholly cease. But I am one of those who look forward with hopeful anticipation toward the day when most of the differences between the nations shall be settled by courts of arbitration. I think we have seen more than the dawning of that day. I think we are well within it, and I sincerely hope that generations will pass before there shall be another great war among the great civilized nations of the world. And if we are not to have wars constantly recurring, then it is the duty of every citizen of every civilized country to use the influence he has, be it great or small, in the checking of the wasteful expenditures for war-like purposes. [Applause.]

How much the world might do, what benefits might be brought to the human race, what splendid monuments of peace could be erected, if we expended the money we are now expending for these huge leviathans of the deep for works that would benefit mankind, instead of joining in a mad race to prepare the biggest ships and the most ships with which to blow men off the earth and out of the water. If we could use the same sums of money in the great undertakings of peace, and if we could retain in the paths of useful productiveness the men whose lives are now wasted in warlike pursuits, how much better it would be for all the world.

We can not, of course, disarm. We must maintain a fair Army and a fair Navy. We must maintain a Navy in keeping with our great wealth and power and position in the world. But we should not endeavor to make a display of our power by building battleships as some people make display of wealth by wearing costly jewels. The one is as undesirable as the other. Our place in the world and our influence and strength in war and peace depend infinitely more upon our 90,000,000 of intelligent citizenship than upon all of the bayonets in the country and all the guns we will ever mount on battleships. [Applause.]

If we would turn our attention to and spend the money now wasted in these great armaments, upon works that would be helpful to all mankind, all the world would rise up and call us blessed. Let us not allow our Navy to be reduced to a point where we shall not have a Navy in keeping with our power and wealth and our influence in the world. One ship a year is quite sufficient to maintain an adequate Navy in this country, and if we adopt a one-battleship program we shall have given notice to all the world that we do not propose to join or participate in this unwise, wasteful, and wicked race for enormous armaments, taxing the people for their construction and their upbuilding. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] may be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, that this is not a political question, at least that it is not properly a party question, is strikingly illustrated by the fact that the Republican Member from Wyoming approves and the Democratic Member from Colorado disapproves of the battleship program, or rather the no-battleship program, which has been adopted on this side of the House.

Right at the outset of his remarks the gentleman [Mr. MONDELL] stated a fact which strongly inclines me in favor of continuing, for the present at least, our present battleship program, and that is what he referred to as the mad race of the other powers of the world to build up great navies. I want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if he thinks this great Nation, with its tremendous responsibilities as a world power, can afford to sit idly by and see the peace of the world—yea, even the map of the world—threatened by the building up of these great navies, and yet this Nation not place itself in a position to protect the peace of the world.

Mr. MONDELL. Is that a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is not a question. At least it ought not to be a question. If it is a question, it is one that ought to answer itself. It is a question that ought to point to the undoubted duty of this Nation to place itself in a position where, if necessary, it would be able to assert itself in favor of the peace of the world. One day during this session our Socialist brother, the gentleman from Milwaukee [Mr. BERGER] made what I thought was a very pat and apt suggestion, and that was that neutrality is a good thing if only you are able to enforce it.

Mr. Chairman, I subscribe most heartily to that proposition. I was one of the thirty-odd Members on this side of the House who voted for two battleships in each of the two naval appropriation bills in the Sixty-first Congress, and I regret very much that the pending naval appropriation bill does not make similar provision. [Applause.]

While I represent the State which above all others in the Union is secure from foreign attack or invasion, I take some pride in the fact that I am as much in favor of an adequate Navy as any Member of this body who represents a seacoast district. I take some pride in the fact that I am a big-Navy Democrat; not a big Navy as a threat and menace against the peace of the world, but a big Navy as a guaranty of the peace of the world; and that I understand and believe to be, in this time of striving for naval supremacy, the true need and the highest mission of an adequate American Navy.

As I have listened to the objections of gentlemen to continuing for a time longer, at least, our present naval program, it has seemed to me that they looked at this question, both in its larger and in its smaller aspects, with an entirely too limited vision. It seems to me, as I have listened to some gentlemen, that the chief question at issue is whether the Navy is built up around battleships or coal barges. Which is the unit of a navy? I have never heard that a naval engagement ever turned upon the auxiliaries. I have never heard that a naval engagement hinged upon transports and colliers, or even submarines and destroyers. In the great decisive naval battle between China and Japan, in the decisive battle between Japan and Russia, and in the two great naval battles between the United States and Spain, I did not hear anything about auxiliaries. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. There is no use asking for five minutes more. A man could not undertake to discuss this subject in five minutes. I will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear about auxiliaries in the China Sea, or the Japan Sea, or Manila Bay, or Santiago, or even in the present war between Italy and Turkey. I did not read about any auxiliary fleet convoying and supporting the Oregon in its great historic cruise around the Horn. I do not understand such a fleet could make such a cruise. But I do not say that all these auxiliaries are not necessary to the naval power which would keep abreast of the naval equipment of other countries. I simply say that these factors, in which the American Navy is said to be deficient, are minor. As for transports and colliers, we have 300 vessels in the coastwise trade which could be seized and impressed into the defense of the country should occasion require.

But it is objected that the Navy is badly balanced because of the disparity between fighting ships and auxiliaries. A more practical and analytical way of stating the proposition would be to ask whether we have too many battleships or too few auxiliaries. If we had sufficient auxiliaries for the present number of battleships, would the Navy be too large? If no, then we should continue the present rate of increase in battleships, thus maintaining our front while bringing up our rear. If yes, then we ought to reasonably curtail the battleship program, not stop it altogether. It is all right to balance the Navy, but it is a matter of vital importance whether it is balanced up or down.

But it is further argued that our ships become quickly obsolete. My reply to this is twofold. First, they do not become obsolete any more quickly than the vessels of other nations; and second, the same objection would apply with even more force to such novel factors in naval warfare as submarines and torpedo-boat destroyers. If, as has been argued by gentlemen on this side of the House, we are to await the development of the best type of battleship, then let us await the development of the best type of submarine and destroyer. What is the use of building a lot of submarines and destroyers that may be obsolete to-morrow? And how will we know the best type when it comes? The truth is, to state these objections is to answer them. They are so feeble they fall of their own weight.

The same may be said of the proposition that we want a defensive, not an aggressive, Navy. I confess, perhaps because it is that I am so dense, that I can no more distinguish between a defensive and an aggressive navy than I can between good trusts and bad trusts. According to my way of reasoning, a navy is either adequate or inadequate, measured by the power and the responsibility of the nation.

I can conceive of no other practicable test. This is one case where, in my judgment, a half loaf is not better than no bread. A weak Navy would provoke, not prevent, trouble. Either we should have and maintain a first-class Navy or none. It takes two years to build a modern fighting ship and so long to build a modern Navy that you must keep building. When you want a Navy you want it badly and at once. One naval battle decided the war between China and Japan, one naval battle decided the war between Russia and Japan, two naval battles decided the war between the United States and Spain. In these four engagements, three navies were destroyed and their countries humbled and driven from power for decades; and unless the human race has suddenly lost the instinct of the ages, other powers will meet the same fate. Members of this House participated in the greatest civil war of all history. Since then the world has witnessed the terrible Franco-Prussian War, the war between Turkey and Greece, the war between England and the Transvaal, the war between China and Japan, the war between Japan and Russia, the war between the United States and Spain; so that, within the memories of yet vigorous and active men, every great nation of the world—England, the United States, Germany, France, Spain, Russia, Italy, Turkey, China, Japan, all of them—have been involved in war. Shall we see no more terrible wars? To ask this question in the light of history and of the racial instinct is to answer it.

And it is agreed that these future wars, and particularly so far as this country is concerned, will be determined upon the seas.

This fact ought to determine us, so far as our own welfare is concerned, upon the character of our naval policy. But, above this, standing here as the dominant and responsible power of one-half of the world, our duties and liabilities in the Western Hemisphere are vast and growing, and we must be in a position to meet them.

But, above this, we owe a duty to the whole world. We can not sit idly by and see other nations go on in a mad race to build up great navies with which to threaten the peace without being in a position to assert ourselves in behalf of the peace of the world. Our Navy is to-day steaming toward Cuba, not to intervene, but by the possibility and ability to intervene to restore peace. Does this smaller lesson convey to gentlemen no suggestion of the possibilities of its reproduction upon a far larger scale? This is what I mean, and the latter ideas I have been expressing are what I had in mind when I stated at the outset that I feared gentlemen viewed this question with a too limited vision.

Mr. Chairman, I am for an adequate Navy, as promised by the Democratic national platform, and I want to say in conclusion that no political party can afford to incur the distrust of the country with reference to the national defense. The national sense of honor is a tinder box, needing only the spark of danger to explode it, and the Nation will cry with one voice, "Are we ready?" and if we are not ready, then God help the party or the policy responsible for lack of readiness. The people will not.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, this Nation ought to have a great and high ambition, and to my mind the field of that ambition is to exert its influence toward the establishment of the world's universal peace. [Applause.]

No longer I hope will the leading minds of this great Republic be moved by an ambition, to show to the world a great Navy strutting and posing, with its cruel guns, bellowing a message of brutality and death to mankind in this civilized age.

We are told that we must stand for a Navy if we would be popular. The trouble with our House of Representatives, and the trouble with our politics, and our parties, to-day is the effort to be popular. [Applause.] The lessons of history tell us that no great hero of the past, or great man of the past, was in his day very popular. The advocates of new truth, the pioneers of justice and right, ever since the dawn of history, have not had the crowd with them. The world has waited and built their monuments centuries after they were dust. They were outcasts while they lived. They were unpopular. If our motto is always to be to vote for and support only that which is popular, the days of the Republic are numbered.

I am ready and willing to talk about something else besides popularity in these days. It is not safe for us to enshrine our heroes until they are dead and a long time dead. If there is one lesson the American people ought to learn it is not to worship individuals, but to reverence principles, to enshrine our ideals rather than men, and march forward toward the realization of those ideals of right and justice and peace. [Applause.]

We are always told that the way to have peace is to prepare for war. No long-standing proverb or saying has less sense or less logic. I assert that the way to prepare for peace is to be peaceful. [Applause.] How are we going to have peace? If we have passed the youth day of bombast and swagger as a nation, then let us stand on the rock of faith and trust to that which is best in men and in other nations as well as ourselves, and we shall have no war. The way to have peace, Mr. Chairman, is to have faith in peace [applause] and to quit the popular hurrah for navies that has so long moved men and nations to the sensational and spectacular. Human reason is always swept from its throne by the spectacular, but we face a new day and, I trust, a new era.

I want to say this in passing, that I have not any faith in "peace," if it is not to cost us something.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Minnesota be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, the individual who avoids brutal contest and physical battle, sometimes at the cost of a little suffering, learns that it pays a bigger dividend than anything else. The greatest teacher whoever stepped upon this grain of sand has taught us that it is better to suffer wrong than to do wrong. I am not so afraid of our national pride, and all that sort of thing, that I would not be willing as an American citizen, honoring my flag, I trust, as well as any man in the Nation, that I would not be willing that we pay our share of the cost of an enduring peace among the nations of the world. [Applause.]

That which is worth the most to mankind ought to cost something and as a Nation we should be willing to pay it. I will admit I am tired of the talk of peace that seems to mean nothing. We talk peace and prepare for war. We boast that we are a peace-loving people and proceed to build large navies. This Nation made the greatest mistake in all the centuries when it voted to fortify the Panama Canal. [Applause.] It stood at the pivotal moment when it could have shown that its trust and confidence was in the good will of men and not in the disposition to fight. Yes, we talk peace and then we get ready for war. The time is coming when the manhood and character of this Nation will spurn this spirit of resentment, of war, just as civilized people to-day can only have a good standing in the world by going into court rather than by putting a chip on their shoulders and going out to slug somebody.

On what principle is it that civilized men settle their differences in courts of justice? On that same principle civilized nations may settle their disputes without resort to force. Slowly it may be, but surely we are outgrowing the degrading brutalities of the past and asserting a higher freedom and nobler national dignity. Our true defense is moral. Our armor is the virtue and patriotism of a great people, and our real scepter is our love of peace.

I do not know but that I will vote for one battleship. I have voted for one heretofore. I have done it reluctantly, and I am frank to say that I believe you are nearer right over there than we are. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Navy is not symmetrical. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] said in his address the other day, it is top-heavy. Yes, it is top-heavy and it is show heavy. Has not the time come, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for us to show the world that we mean in good faith to maintain that peace which, though it may cost us, as well as other nations, something, will be a blessing to all men?

What we need in this day and age of ours is faith, faith not only in the possibility of peace, but in the practicability of peace. [Applause.] Right may be radical, but it is always practical. Only small minds shrink from it and say: "At a more convenient season I will call for thee."

I think the position of the present Executive on this subject reflects high honor upon the Nation and makes his administration worthy of a place in the centuries, because it is a step toward the world's final peace. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

[Mr. SAUNDERS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. WILDER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to three men almost in succession talking against the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri. It seems to me, however, there ought to be some golden mean that we might strike on this subject between the somewhat ambitious program suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama and the do-nothing policy of his party caucus. It seems as if in these days the pendulum was inclined to swing extremely to one side or extremely to the other, as if we have arrived at a time when a sane proposition would scarcely receive the attention of anyone. One has said that in order to be peaceful we should act in a peaceful manner. About everything I have heard said on this subject indicates to me that there is a lack of practical relation and application between our naval affairs and our Army affairs. An army can be built up in a very short order, but not so with a navy. Suppose when Japan started in her recent war that ended with the sinking of Rojestvensky's ships in the Japan Sea she had not been able to go in a harbor in Korea and sink a couple of Chinese ships to start with. Suppose Dewey had not been able to take his swing in Manila Bay and sink every one of Montejo's ships without a single loss of life. Suppose Sampson or Schley, whichever one it was who did the fighting at Santiago, had had no ships with which to meet and sink Cervera's ships. I might go on indicating suggestions of this sort to quite some extent. As I have said before, armies may be raised in short order, but not so with ships. We come down to the Spanish-American War, and we put $50,000,000 at the free use of the President of these United States—enough money to build five battleships such as contemplated at the present time. The result of that war went into the hundreds of millions before we were done with it. Of what moment is the cost of few or many ships compared with the need at such times? A warship means about 10 cents apiece of the entire inhabitants of this great Nation. Two mean 20 cents apiece, and it will not be paid by the very poor, but more of it will be paid by the others; but that is the average.

Another has said that we should have a Navy and Army somewhat commensurate with the great importance and wealth and power of this country, and in the same argument he rather reluctantly indicated that he might stand for one more ship and wished there might not be any. I wish there might be two. It is an incidental proposition when the insurance of this country is contemplated, when the well-being of this country with all its immense wealth is contemplated. I will doff my hat to no one in my desire for peace, but what good does it do to propose peace when the navies of some other nations are threatening our peace? That is exactly the condition in which the other nations of the earth want us. Who are we standing for? Are we standing for ourselves or other nations of the earth? It seems to me that the most common kind of prudence requires that we provide our national armament in advance for those things which we can not prepare in a moment, and that fact is essentially true in reference to the Navy; but this is not necessarily so or in such a manner the fact in reference to our Army. It is notorious that our Volunteer Army—that is, the men who come from the State militias, or even the farms or factories and otherwise—do substantially as good service as the service of the Regular Army. But what are we to do for ships? Are they to be brought from the farms? Are they to be grown on the farms? No; they must be prepared beforehand. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much interest to speeches that have been made on each side of the House for peace, the prophecies of the millennium, and all that kind of thing. After all, I do not believe in the millennium. If we want complete rest, I trust we will get it after we cross over, because we are to be changed in the twinkling of an eye. But if there was an absolute millennium on earth, and the human family had complete rest, we would go back to barbarism. So I am not in favor of the millennium as long as we remain as we are. The human animal is a virile one. What is true of individuals is true of nations. Gentlemen, the oldest civilization is in China, with her 400,000,000 of people. The German, the English, and the French zones divide up their influence in China; and it is only because of the leadership of William McKinley and those who succeeded him that we at last have the open door in China, that otherwise would have been closed if it were not for the United States—Japan coming in as a factor with Great Britain. Mr. Chairman, if the nations of the world would let the Chinese alone, they would conquer the world by their patience and industry. We do not do it. We shut them out because we can not compete with them. They have no navy. They are a peaceful people. And yet they come and go and submit to the will of little Japan and all the other nations.

Now, the United States—and I confess it—is the greatest nation on earth—almost the greatest in population and every other respect. What are our burdens? What are our duties? They are to preserve the Government of the people first, to care for the greatest coast line of any nation on earth, to protect production at home and commerce among ourselves and with foreign nations, and to support the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. Chairman, would gentlemen reject the Monroe doctrine? It is a matter of serious consideration and, perhaps, discussion as to whether there ought to have been a Monroe doctrine; but we have it, and if you propose to abandon it the multiplied millions, amounting to the whole population, would rise up and say "no."

I want to be practical. We have these burdens. We are building the Panama Canal. We have, with a very small per cent of our production, the greatest foreign trade of any nation on earth. They do not want our trade? Oh, no. They would not take our trade if they could get it. Mr. Chairman, I met a missionary on my way home a few days ago who is located in far-away Tibet—a very intelligent man, attached to the missionary corps. He told me about the Chinese. He was in that part of Tibet that now belongs to China. I said, "How about the opium trade?" He replied, "China never wanted opium. It was forced on her." I said, "At last we have agreed it shall not be forced on her longer." He said, "The opium-producing colonies of Great Britain were so languishing in their production on account of the loss of the Chinese market that the British merchant was demanding that the exclusion of the opium policy should be abandoned." I said, "Do you think there is any danger of it?" He said, "I do." I replied, "Why, she is a great Christian nation and the mother nation of this country." "Yes," said he, "it is a great nation and it is the mother country, but for all that and with her trade and with her power she wants markets."

Mr. Chairman, suppose we sit down and inaugurate in the United States the millennium, I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE]. It would no sooner be inaugurated than this most promising market in the world would be divided up into zones of influence, as China is now divided by the virile nations of the world. Ah, you say, but they can not conquer us. We are bigger, without arms and without training and without a navy, than all the balance of the world. Great thunders of the Fourth of July, they dare not tread upon us! [Laughter and applause.]

Well, now, I believe in a reasonable Navy, not the equal of Great Britain, but——

Mr. CLINE. Would the gentleman make as the basis of our Navy our coast line?

Mr. CANNON. Coast lines are a valuable adjunct. Why, that coast line has enough tonnage and enough commerce to make it the principal factor in building up and sustaining the great shipyards in this country. Without that patronage they would go into decay.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCKELLAR). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman require 10 minutes?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; only five minutes. I should be modest about asking for time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] be allowed to continue his remarks for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me just a moment, I desire to say that at the conclusion of the gentleman's five minutes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] desires five minutes, and I shall then move to close debate.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that. I should like to have five minutes on this question.

Mr. PADGETT. Then I will include five minutes to the gentleman from California. I now move, Mr. Chairman, that debate close at 2 o'clock. It is now 25 minutes after 1. I have allowed a great deal of leeway already.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope I am conservative. I hope I do not desire to see our country engaged in war. I hope we may have continuing peace. But as to that prophecy about pruning hooks and swords—I believe it originated with Isaiah—bless my soul, I believe it is farther off now than when it was uttered over there in little Palestine.

Do you say, "Are we going to abandon progress?" No; by no manner of means. But I say there is no great nation, in my judgment, save alone the United States, that is not increasing its armament. We have got so much room to expand in, growing from ninety millions to four hundred millions, so much room upon this continent that we are not crowded now, and will not be perhaps for the next hundred years, for a breathing space. But all the other great nations of the earth are increasing their armament. What for? For trade, for commerce. Why? Because without the trade and without the commerce they believe that their people could not be employed. That is the reason why. Ah, England was willing to quit building if Germany would quit building. But Germany would not.

Now, all I want to do, inasmuch as it takes three years plus to build a battleship, is to have at least two battleships all the while in process of construction to take the place of the two or more ships that will be antiquated. [Applause.] That is all I want. Why, the Oregon, whose trip around the Horn caused the construction of the Panama Canal, is now practically old junk, and there are many others like it. Naval architecture progresses.

People prophesy that the aeroplane is to be the great war force or war weapon of the future. Perhaps so. But we can not afford to sit down and see the world develop the aeroplane. We can not afford to see them monopolize the high explosives and the higher explosives. We have got to keep step. It is insurance. It is the best insurance. By keeping step with the weapons with which to preserve peace we insure peace, I trust, without war.

It has been said that we have ever presented a vigorous manhood. But I do not care how vigorous is the manhood of one man or ten thousand, if you will send them up against one man or ten thousand armed with a repeating rifle that loads in the cartridge and will bring down 15 or 20 victims and then load again in less than 30 seconds, the one would almost put the unarmed ten thousand to flight under such conditions. I shall vote for two battleships, and do it heartily. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the ex-Speaker of this House, who has just taken his seat, has voiced the sentiment of a certain school of political economists in this country whose teachings are based upon the doctrine that our future greatness depends upon the size and strength of our standing armies and threatening navies. I am truly glad to know that there is another and better school of political economy abroad in our land, based upon that immortal doctrine enunciated by our Savior more than two thousand years ago: "On earth peace, good will toward men." I stand for this doctrine to-day and invite you to accept it as our national policy instead of that offered by our distinguished ex-Speaker. While his tenure of office in this House has been long and his political sagacity is great, yet his doctrine had its origin in barbarism and blood and found its greatest supporters in paganism and polygamy. It stands to-day for force and murder and is a living menace to our intellectual and moral growth and to the prosperity and happiness of mankind. Its best boast is slavery, torture, and death, and the brightest page of its history is the blood of 15,000,000,000 men, women, and children. What a fitting tribute Gen. Sherman paid to it when he said, "War is hell." [Applause.]

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, the doctrine of peace had its origin in love and liberty. It stands for the rights of men, wherever they be, rich or poor, high or low, and against the shedding of human blood. Its greatest weapon is, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." It is supported by the best religion the world ever knew, with an instinct of a happier life in a better world. The brightest page of its history is the saving of the souls of men from the sins of the world. Then, in the language of our greatest modern soldier, "Let us have peace."

Mr. Chairman, the policy of this Nation has always been for peace. Our forefathers left kindred and homes of plenty across the sea to satisfy their longings for peace of conscience and peace of state and pitched their tents in an unknown land where the flash of sabers had never been seen and the roar of cannons had never been heard. A mere handful of men and women with the Bible in their hands and the love of God and liberty in their hearts, in the midst of wild beast and savage men, established a new civilization and surrounded it by schoolhouses and church houses as its wall of defense. Acting under the inspiration of this national policy, the seed of these God-fearing men and women has developed and multiplied until to-day we stand first in power and influence among the nations of the world, while other countries, with a national policy of force and murder, have dwindled in national importance and lost much of their former prestige. The sturdy manhood of our citizenship has always been equal to the emergency, and whenever our peace has been threatened by insurrection at home or invasion by enemies from abroad it has furnished us with the volunteer soldier—the best soldier the world ever knew—and being armed with right, we have always been thrice armed for victory. On all occasions, whenever forced to fight, America, without a strong navy and a large standing army, has always maintained herself both on land and on sea, and in every contest in which she has been called to measure her metal she has acquitted herself most nobly. [Applause.] What she has done in the past she is able to do in the future.

At the court of The Hague its representatives talk of world-wide peace and spread this news to the four corners of the earth, and yet the great nations of the world are running mad in trying to outstrip each other in the size and strength of their navies. At the same time they are annually appropriating large sums of money to experiment in the construction of successful flying machines, with the hope of arming them with skyrockets to be dropped down like flaming meteors from heaven to destroy these mighty fleets. [Applause.]

And yet, Mr. Chairman, in the face of all this madness, I am sorry to say, we have men here on the floor of this House contending that we should appropriate from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 annually for the purpose of constructing great seagoing hounds, surpassing in viciousness, if possible, Dante's hell hounds, to keep up an eternal yelping the world around. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the time has come when some great power should propose to the nations of the world the dismantling of battleships and their elimination from the high seas as a means of settling international disputes. It is to the great discredit of the world that such disputes have hitherto been settled by the arbitrament of battle. The wonderful progress of mankind demands a more peaceable method of adjustment, and to continue a policy of blood and bluster is to oppose the advancement of the times. The statesmanship of to-day ought to be clothed in the garments of the progress of the times and no fourteenth-century statesmanship policy should be contemplated for America. In the light of our present advancement and our peculiar fitness for leadership among nations I feel that we should be first to propose this great reformation, and to show our good faith in the wisdom of such a national policy let us stop building for terror and trouble and let all of our works be for peace and progress. Let us propose to the representatives at The Hague that they prepare an international arbitration treaty at their next meeting for the adjustment of all international controversies, to be submitted to the civilized powers of the world for their ratification, the same to become effective between the countries so ratifying on and after such ratification. Our Constitution was drafted and adopted on this plan. Such a treaty would be worth more to the peace and advancement of mankind than all the battleships which could be constructed at the present rate of building in the entire world for the next century to come. There is no reason for a strong standing navy unless it be for the purpose of carrying on war. [Applause.]

The preachers in the pulpit plead for universal peace, the newspapers and magazines of the world daily fill their columns with reasons and plans for it, the statesmen in their council chambers throughout the civilized countries talk in favor of it, but annually construct against it.

The rulers of nations exchange diplomatic papers concerning it and lead the people to believe that they are about ready to adopt it, but at the same time they go ahead with the construction of new monsters of the deep, with greater speed and greater destructive powers. It will never be accomplished until some great power formulates a plan for it and has the moral courage to carry it out. A nation is not necessarily prepared for war because she has a large standing army and a big navy. We whipped Great Britain in two wars, one on land and the other on the sea, and yet we had no standing army for the one (Revolutionary War) and but a small navy for the other (War of 1812). The cause of right was with us in both of them and undoubtedly gave us an overshadowing advantage which resulted in our victories.

Mr. Chairman, the world is practically at peace to-day, but there never has been such a scramble among nations for big fleets and improved engines of death as is going on now. I am forcibly reminded of a story I once heard of a camel on coming in the presence of a wild boar that was busily engaged in whetting his tusks on the root of a tree, had his curiosity so aroused that he inquired of him, "What are you doing, sir?" Whereupon the boar replied, "I am preparing for war in time of peace." The wild-boar policy is what our ex-Speaker and his school of statesmen are advocating for America. Philosophers often peer into the misty future and foretell coming events, thereby giving the people an opportunity to escape disaster. Noah built the ark long before the flood, yet it was the means of perpetuating both human and animal life and the species thereof. Joseph was sold into Egyptian bondage by his envious brothers, but his preparation for the seven years of famine was the means of saving the lives of his cruel brothers. It is a most noble mission to prepare in advance for future happiness and prosperity, but no one can justify preparation for human slaughter and human destruction. The wild-boar policy originated in the dens of the devil. The Bible teaches us that on a certain occasion Jesus found a certain man possessed of many devils, and after casting them out they entered a herd of swine, and the entire herd ran into the sea and were drowned. Whether the wild boar escaped and is at large as a missionary of the devil I am not prepared to say, but it is quite evident that his doctrine is not in harmony with doctrine of peace and the golden rule and ought not to be accepted by any civilized power. Our greatest war is our war against war, and we ought to wage this war so unrelentingly in every clime until we prevent wars.

Mr. Chairman, we have not yet taken into consideration the question of our new possessions—Hawaii, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, the Panama Canal, and the Canal Zone. Many of our citizens and some Members of this House believe that a strong navy is necessary in order to properly protect these possessions and discharge our duty to other nations whose citizens are interested therein. Members of Congress plan for the government of the Philippine Islands as though they were permanent property of ours. Capital is flocking there for investment and trying to gobble up the valuable parts of these rich islands in order, as I take it, that our permanent possession may be made possible. I am not in sympathy with this policy. America should retain the permanent possession of territory which may become States of this Union ultimately, and all property within our possession which is not so intended should be handled by us as a protectorate until a republican form of government can be established, with the view of ultimate independence for such territory. This ought to be our policy with the Philippine Islands, for it is evident that they can never become States of our Union. They are too far away and too far south. Their people are not Caucasian, and hence not desirable as part and parcel of this country. While they are intelligent and able in business and government, yet their environments and their social status is so at variance with our customs and institutions that they can never be amalgamated with us. Our other possessions are so close to us that we do not need a big navy for their protection. There can be no excuse, Mr. Chairman, for a strong navy in America unless it is to perpetuate a colonial policy. [Applause.]

It may be that America will embark upon this dangerous program, but if she does she has the history of the world against her. I have no doubt but that we have men in this Chamber who would gladly see her adopt such a policy, but even the thought of its possibility makes me tremble for the safety of my country. It is a trait of human character that we do not like to keep costly things just to look at. We are anxious to put them into use, if for no other reason, just to see how they work.

The same thing is true of nations. Large standing armies and big navies are highly expensive, and if a nation has been at great expense to maintain these luxuries, in the course of time she becomes anxious to try them to see how they work, and might pick quarrels on trivial matters as an excuse to declare war for conquest. It is the history of the world that all republics which have taken on a colonial policy have ruled their colonies ruthlessly and, in many instances, cruelly, thereby engendering hatred among the subjects against the mother country, which has invariably resulted in rebellion and the loss of liberty. Ancient Venice, Genoa, Athens, Pisa, Carthage, Syracuse, Rome, Holland, and republican France all tell the same sad story. They not only lost their colonies, but they lost their own liberties. Mr. Lincoln said that no man is good enough or wise enough to rule another without his consent. The same is true of nations. No country is good enough or wise enough to rule another country without the consent of the people of that country. With the fate of both the ancient and modern republics which have adopted a colonial policy staring us in the face, who will declare for a colonial policy for America? As the lurking magazine lieth in watery ambush to blow unsuspecting fleets into fragments, so lieth the colony of a republic to blow her ship of state into kindling wood. Beware of a colony for our Republic, my countrymen, oh, beware! [Applause.] A few days ago the House adopted an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill for the purpose of stimulating and encouraging the construction of a system of good roads in this country by giving national aid thereto. Were we to expend as much money for this purpose annually as we have been using for the construction of battleships it would not be long until America would have an ideal system of hard roads, and it would add real and substantial happiness and prosperity to our own people. Internal improvements ought to command our best thoughts and our wisest action, for therein lies the greatest hope for the happiness of our people and the perpetuity of this Republic. Let the battleship give place to good roads and internal improvements generally.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, since my refulgent light spread itself upon this House, relieving the former Erebus and atmospheric oppression, I regret that I still find there is a dearth in finding out what is done and said upon this floor in matters of so much importance as this. Why, three years ago I made a speech here—a great speech [laughter]—the greatest speech; in fact, the only speech that was made upon the battleship proposition. [Laughter.] If there had been a censor upon the speeches that went into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and a historian beside, who would keep account of those things, the subject matter of this debate never would have again occurred, because they may have read my speech. [Laughter.] In fact, I believe some Member having the good of the country at heart should introduce a bill making ineligible for reelection anyone who did not read my speech.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I first offered an amendment to strike out the two battleships in my adolescent period of service. I got 17 votes upon that amendment. The next time it came up, having more influence, I got about 18 votes against the two battleships.

And then you all know that I am a caucus man. [Laughter.] I have been extremely fortunate in the Democratic caucuses, because whenever I have bolted a Democratic caucus they no sooner get back into the House after my vote had been recorded and the fact was known in the Senate and its intelligence was communicated back to the House than it immediately comes over to my side. [Laughter.]

Now, in this matter, contrary to the usual method, I stood by the Democratic caucus decree, and again the Democratic caucus is standing by me. Therefore I take pleasure in casting my vote against the two battleships. [Applause.]

I want to say to you, furthermore, gentlemen, that, notwithstanding you did not read by speech of three years ago, if you had read my speech I delivered yesterday, each and all of you would vote against the battleships for the very reason that battleships have gone out of commission. Aeroplanes and waterplanes have taken their place. I asked the chairman of this committee who these experts were that they called before the committee to determine what was the proper appropriation to make for the development of aeroplanes, and it developed that these men came before this committee before the greatest exploit of the greatest development of the age had been made at Weymouth, England, on the 10th of this month, where it was shown that the aeroplane or, rather, the waterplane, can rise from the deck of a ship without running space; that it can rise from the water; that it can descend upon the water; that it can descend upon the land; and that it can go to a distance of 500 miles without making a landing either upon the land or upon the sea. In such a case, with our immense seacoast and borders, what is the necessity of longer fortifying our coast? Why, gentlemen, it is absolutely senseless, and the fortification of the Panama Canal is so much money thrown away. Gentlemen, do not be so self-centered; for the sake of the country and for your self-respect, please read my speech. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] a few moments ago spoke of the "mad rush for war." I want to ask him whether the people of the United States were not just as ready and just as mad to rush to war after the battleship Maine was sunk in Habana Harbor as the most excitable nations on earth? I want to ask him whether it did not require all the skill and ability and energy of the then President of the United States, the lamented McKinley, to hold Congress back from precipitately declaring war against Spain, in order that this country might be at least partially prepared for the then impending conflict?

Mr. Chairman, war comes suddenly. It comes unexpectedly; and it is the experience of the modern world that the more a nation is prepared for war the less the likelihood of that nation becoming involved in war. The highwayman lurking in the shadow of a tree for a likely victim seldom undertakes to attack a strong, powerful individual who might worst him in the fight. He rather looks for a physically weaker brother, one who shows evidence of being more apt to fall at the very beginning of his onslaught. It is even thus with nations. This country stands behind the Monroe doctrine. There is not a man in this House that dare cast his vote against the maintenance of that doctrine. I believe the overwhelming sentiment of this country would be for war if war were necessary to maintain it. If we intend to maintain it, we must have an adequate fleet. Our fleet is the only thing that will stand behind that doctrine. It has nothing behind it in international law. To-day its strength lies largely in the will of the people of the United States.

And what is happening on the American continent to-day? In South America large numbers of settlers from foreign countries are taking up great areas of the rich agricultural and grazing land. I understand that in Brazil alone German colonizing concerns have taken up 8,000 square miles of land. The States of Santa Catharina and Rio Grande do Sul are largely controlled by German companies. The nations are reaching out for the trade of South America. They are sending their immigrants and their settlers there, and these create a market for the products of the mother country. No one can tell what complications may arise as the result of this colonization. We have nothing but the tacit consent of European countries to our maintenance of the Monroe doctrine. I do not believe that a single power in all Europe has ever acknowledged acquiescence in the doctrine in writing. Indeed the soundness of our position has been attacked occasionally in recent years in various European periodicals. A sharp attack on the Monroe doctrine appeared in a recent number of a leading German review—the Grenzhotel—and the National Zeitung, commenting on that attack, urges the Fatherland to examine closely whether things resting on such shallow legal and historical foundations as the Monroe doctrine need be tolerated, or whether, at the bottom, they are not merely American arrogance which requires sharp and decisive opposition.

Admiral Mahan, in an article published in the New York Times on the 24th of this month, says that twice recently, once from Canada and once from an English source in China, has come a suggestion that the present feeling of Germany against Great Britain might be placated by Great Britain repudiating the Monroe doctrine. Personally I have no reason to believe there is anything in the suggestion to cause alarm. But the game of world politics is an absorbing one. Combinations and alliances are ofttimes made between world powers that are startling in their effect upon world policies. We are an isolated nation. Many of our statesmen have strenuously contended that therein lies our strength. But in my opinion that very isolation demands of us the construction and maintenance of a most powerful Navy, especially if we expect to continue our championship of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] well stated the case of the oldest nation in the world, China. The Celestial Empire has been bullied by every little nation that wanted a slice of her territory. She has had to suffer indignities, she has had to concede "spheres of influence" to the land-grabbing countries of the world. Why? Because she has neither an adequate army or navy to defend herself.

Does anyone believe that China, with her teeming millions, would be a prey to the rapacity of European nations for territorial aggrandizement if she were adequately prepared to defend her rights? Why, of course not.

Man is a fighting animal. There is no use trying to deceive ourselves. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the millenium has not yet come. The fighting instinct seems to be inborn. Deprecate the fact as we may, we see that instinct manifested in the fights among schoolboys. As we reach maturer years the instinct is outgrown by most of us. And yet in many cases it is only latent, and it frequently asserts itself upon slight provocation even among adults. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] speaks of settling cases in court. True, the great majority of men take their differences into the courts and cheerfully abide by the judges' decisions. But some men still resort to murder in settling their disputes. Men are still shot down by such of our countrymen who refuse to submit their causes to peaceful arbitration. And while I am as strong an advocate of peace as any Member on this floor, I am nevertheless of the opinion that many questions between nations will continue to be settled by the arbitrament of war. It will be many generations before we can settle everything in the courts.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I have only five minutes. I yield, however, to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I merely wish to say that the Monroe doctrine is recognized by nearly all the nations of the earth, and certainly has not been invented for the purpose of keeping up militarism in the United States.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, there is no question about the fact as to why the Monroe doctrine was enunciated.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And another thing——

Mr. KAHN. I can not yield any further. As a matter of fact, the Monroe doctrine was announced at the time when the Spanish-American colonies were throwing off the yoke of the mother country and were assuming their stations as American Republics. It was enunciated because President Monroe at that time believed that no foreign power ought to be allowed to take land forcibly on the American continent. He undoubtedly voiced the sentiment of his period. We had but a few years before concluded our second war with Great Britain. Our Navy played a glorious part in the settlement of that war. There was no question as to its ability to cope with the navies of the other world powers of that epoch. And in announcing his famous doctrine, President Monroe undoubtedly believed that the prestige won by the American Navy in the War of 1812, and the heroism manifested by our naval commanders and sailors in the war against Algeria, Tunis, and Tripoli in 1815 were but an earnest of a strong and powerful Navy for all time to come.

Mr. Chairman, it has been well said that "battleships are cheaper than battles." I firmly believe in that declaration, and so believing, I heartily advocate the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] for the construction of two battleships at this time. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. McCALL. Will not the gentleman agree to prolong the agony for just two minutes? [Cries of "Vote."]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS]. Without objection the amendment to the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROBERTS) there were—ayes 60, noes 87.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts and Mr. PADGETT were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 125.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FITZGERALD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3367) to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to homesteads.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 23634. An act to authorize the village of Oslo, in the county of Marshall, in the State of Minnesota, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Two fuel ships to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $1,140,000 each.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, it is not worth while to report the amendment until the point of order is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true. The amendment is not in order pending the disposition of the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, last year we made an appropriation for two fleet colliers at this point in the bill. As I understand it, these are unauthorized unless they are colliers.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, these are colliers. We are calling them fuel ships, because the last battleships are being constructed to run with oil instead of coal, and the department desires some of the colliers equipped to carry oil as well as coal, so that to designate them that they may not be confused with the exclusive coal-carrying colliers we designate them as fuel ships.

Mr. GOOD. Then they are to take the place of ones we appropriated for last year, except that they have an equipment for oil?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "each," on page 63, line 13, insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be expended for the construction of any such ships by any person, firm, or corporation which has not, at the time of the commencement and construction of such vessels, established an 8-hour work day for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged on or to be engaged in the construction of the vessels named herein."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, this is the same amendment, in substance, that was offered heretofore that has been passed over. I ask unanimous consent that it remain in abeyance until we reach line 20, on the next page, page 64, when we will take up the matter of general legislation, and if we do not agree on anything we will return and dispose of this.

Mr. CONRY. Well, on the condition that it remains pending.

Mr. PADGETT. That it remains pending, just as the others.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as pending and be passed over for the present. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, line 13, after the word "each" strike out the period and insert a comma and insert the words "which shall be built in a navy yard."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, as the other amendment provides that it should come in after the word "each" it will not come at that place if the other is adopted and the character of the amendment at this time not being either a substitute or an amendment to this amendment it would not come in unless the gentleman from New York consents that this one come in ahead of his.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer that as a substitute for the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the other amendment has been passed over informally.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that by unanimous consent the gentleman from New York be given the privilege of withdrawing his amendment to be offered at the conclusion of the bill if he desires.

Mr. PADGETT. At this point?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. That is all right; I have no objection to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be permitted to withdraw his amendment and have the right to return to this portion of the bill and reoffer it after that section of the bill if he so desires.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his colleague be permitted to withdraw his amendment for the present with the privilege after the consideration of the bill has been concluded of recurring to this paragraph for the purpose of reoffering this amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the amendment I have offered.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, has the amendment been reported?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the experience of the Government in building its own war vessels, auxiliaries, and so forth, has been of great advantage not only to the Government but to the men who are employed in that class of work. It has reduced the contract price paid to the private-contract shipyards. It is admitted by all of those who know about the conditions that the men are securing better conditions, and also that we are getting a better class of work done when these vessels are constructed in the Government shipyards, and therefore I hope that the amendment which I have offered will be agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides that these ships are to be built in a navy yard and not elsewhere. It is a plain and simple question. We have had a number of illustrations with reference to it. The Florida and the Utah were duplicate ships, sister ships. One was built in a navy yard at a cost of $6,200,000, not counting $500,000 of overhead charges, which, if you add the overhead charges, would amount to $6,700,000. The other ship, the Utah, was built by contract at $4,020,000. There was another instance where we built the Prometheus and the Vestal, two colliers, that cost us in a navy yard $1,150,000 in round numbers and in private yards, by contract, we could produce the ships for $890,000.

Mr. CANNON. How much was the first?

Mr. PADGETT. The colliers, a million and a half in round numbers.

Mr. CANNON. And in private yards?

Mr. PADGETT. Eight hundred and ninety thousand dollars in private yards. Now, with this simple statement, I do not care to argue this question. If the House sees fit to place this limitation upon it——

Mr. HENSLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. In a moment. And requires them to be built in a navy yard, you must realize that we must increase the appropriations to pay for them.

Mr. HENSLEY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee give any reason why this great difference? Why should there be such a difference as this?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; there are several reasons. One of the reasons is that the navy yard pays higher wages. Another reason is that the navy yard employees get about 28½ days of holiday with pay during the year; and then, I think, with the lack of business organization and utilizing to the best advantage, the labor employed in the navy yard is not adequate to that in private yards under private management.

All of these things contribute to the cost. Now, it is a plain, simple question, and I am not going to take up the time with it. A few weeks ago I had a conversation with a labor leader that to me was very illustrative. He came into my room and said he wanted to urge that we should build one of the battleships in the navy yard compulsorily. I said to him that I could not take that position, that it was a question of labor and that labor was employed wherever it is built—whether in the private yard or in the navy yard the labor is employed and paid. He said, "Yes, that is so; but in the navy yards we get much better pay and we get holidays with pay and leaves, and so forth." I said to him, "If that is true, why is it that the employees in the navy yards are always complaining of their wages and demanding of us that we shall increase them?" Then it was he made the reply, "If we do not make complaints and keep up a fuss about our wages they may be reduced." I said to him, "Do you think as a patriotic citizen that is the way to deal with your Government?"

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In the incident that the gentleman cited to the committee, where the battleship and collier were made in private yards, were they made under the eight-hour system?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. The outside contracts were made, as I understand it, on a nine-hour basis.

Mr. MAHER. What is the difference in the construction of the Louisiana and the Connecticut?

Mr. PADGETT. There has always been a dispute over that, but not a very great difference, I think.

Mr. MAHER. Do you know what the difference is?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember the exact figures. I have not looked into it of late years.

Mr. MAHER. I think the facts will show that there is no difference whatever.

Mr. PADGETT. There is some difference. The navy yard is greater—about 4 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. PADGETT. The Louisiana cost $7,426,000 and the Connecticut cost $7,911,000; something like $500,000 difference in the cost. Repairs up to an even date on the two ships are—on the Louisiana $547,351 and on the Connecticut $634,234.71.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. As I understand the gentleman, it is proposed to amend this bill so that in cases of contract for the building of ships it shall be done by 8-hour labor.

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. It is provided it shall not be built by contract at all, but shall be built in a Government navy yard.

Mr. CANNON. But I am speaking of the general legislation.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. In the bill which this House passed and the Senate has favorably reported, and which you propose to put upon this bill, that provision is made?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; for the 8-hour law. And we have placed the appropriation on the 8-hour basis for all the work.

Mr. CANNON. And the gentleman states that the wage in the navy yard is much larger than in the private yards?

Mr. PADGETT. I said materially.

Mr. CANNON. Materially larger; with leaves of absence, and so forth?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Those are favored places in comparison with the great bulk of mechanics who are in union labor and who will be under the eight-hour law?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Then, I will ask the gentleman if, in the last analysis, labor does not pay it all?

Mr. PADGETT. This is a discrimination against outside union labor in favor of the labor in the navy yards, to which we are already giving advantages and favors that outside labor does not possess.

Mr. CANNON. And outside union labor increases 10 times in number, in comparison with that in the yards?

Mr. PADGETT. That is true.

Mr. CALDER. There are 10 other ships in this program, are there not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CALDER. They will be built by contract in other yards?

Mr. PADGETT. There are some small ships to be built in other yards. The position I take is this: It is a wrong policy and we are running wild on this question. Let us allow the Government, which is spending the tax money of the people, free to contract this work where the Government will get the worth of its money, and for the benefit of the labor that is outside as well as inside of the navy yards.

Mr. SIMS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to his colleague [Mr. SIMS]?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. SIMS. In making these calculations as to the cost of building a ship by contract and by the Government, does the gentleman allow nothing for interest on capital invested by the private contractor?

Mr. PADGETT. Nothing whatever.

Mr. SIMS. And does the gentleman say that the Government, on account of the increased amount of wages paid, loses all the difference claimed and allows nothing for repairs or insurance or replacement or interest on the capital?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Then you must have a very incompetent set of men in charge of the navy yards if they can not do better than that.

Mr. PADGETT. I am only telling what the cold facts are. I said that a lack of proper organization and ability to utilize the organization is contributing to the excess cost.

Mr. SIMS. If they are not any more competent to do a business transaction that that, that makes a difference as great as you make it and allows nothing absolutely for interest and replacement and maintenance and insurance, they are not competent to be in charge of a hen roost. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I yield to the member of the committee [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it not a fact that those who made the statement before the committee to the effect that they were paying, I believe, 25 per cent more than private shipyards finally stated that they did not know what private shipbuilding companies were paying? Did they not?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I think not. They stated that the expenses are fixed by boards, and that upon the general average they made about 25 per cent more than the outside shipyards.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of continuing the policy of building some of the vessels authorized for the Navy in Government yards. In 1900 I initiated a movement in this House which resulted in the adoption of a policy by which the Government yards, which are maintained at a very great expense, were utilized to a very small degree in the construction of new vessels for the Navy. Ever since that policy was initiated the department has been doing its utmost to discredit the yards and to bring into disrepute the new work done there for the Navy.

We have established powder factories, and in those factories we manufacture powder more cheaply than we can purchase it by contract. We maintain arsenals at Rock Island, Ill., Frankford, Pa., and Springfield and Watertown, Mass., and in those arsenals we manufacture small arms and ammunition more cheaply than it can be manufactured by private contractors. We seem to be able to enter into any line of manufacture of munitions of war and to compete successfully with private manufacturers excepting in the construction of ships. In determining costs in this line, by a skillful jugglery of the figures, it is made to appear that it costs inordinately more to build ships in a navy yard than by contract in private yards.

The Connecticut and the Louisiana were built as the first ships in competition, one in a navy yard and one in a private shipyard. The navy yard was without full equipment, without experience, without practice, and yet, despite the utmost efforts of the Navy Department to show a very great discrepancy, and although they charged against the yard building the ship even the cost of educating at the Naval Academy the officers employed in the yard, the best that could be done was to make a difference of about 5 per cent in the cost.

The navy yard worked 8 hours as against 10 hours in the Newport News Shipbuilding Co.'s yard. I have been reliably informed that the private yard was compelled to work overtime in order to keep pace with the progress made on the Connecticut. For the first time in the history of the Government, as a result of that competition, a ship authorized by the Government was turned out within the time fixed by the contract—three years—instead of running from 36 to 42 months over the time.

Since then we have been getting our ships in less than three years' time instead of in seven years' time. The ships now authorized to be built by contract are no longer utilized by the private contractors as a means of keeping their plants going while the interests of the Government are sacrificed, but the interest of the Government is now compelled to be put first.

When this movement to utilize the navy yards started a differential of 4 per cent was given to shipbuilding plants on the Pacific coast, and, taking the bids submitted year after year, the low bid on the Pacific coast was to a penny exactly 4 per cent in excess of the low bids on the Atlantic coast.

They talk about the difference in the cost of building these ships. I demonstrated to this House last year by a carefully drawn diagram prepared by an expert in the Navy Department, who resented the practices indulged in there of misleading the country and the House, that they had shifted from the ordinary yard-maintenance charges over $600,000, if I recall correctly, to the cost of the ship there under construction, and to refute the conclusions of the department I demonstrated that at a period when there was no ship under construction the overhead charges had increased at the same ratio as when a ship was under construction and the maximum force employed thereon.

What has resulted from this practice? The gentleman speaks of the cost of the Utah, $4,200,000, and yet the testimony before his committee is to the effect that the contractor who built that ship built it at a loss of in the neighborhood of $500,000. Is it a wise policy to have our ships built by contractors at a loss of half a million dollars? Does that explain many of the mysterious accidents that are happening upon our contract-built ships in this country? The battleship Florida, just completed at a navy yard, is heralded as the fastest battleship afloat, exceeding the speed requirements of the specifications and making almost a knot better than her sister ship built in a private yard, and for the first time in many years since the paying of a bonus for excess speed has any ship built for the Navy exceeded in so marked a degree the speed requirements set forth in the specifications.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOPP. Is it the gentleman's position that this increased cost in the navy-yard-built ship is due to the indirect charges solely?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My position is, in the first place, that the difference in cost which is pretended by the department does not exist. In the second place, whatever difference does exist is due in some part at least to the inefficient manner in which the department is at present conducted, and I am not certain but that it is done deliberately for the purpose of stopping yard construction, although I should be reluctant to believe such to be deliberately done.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield for another question? I call his attention to the fact that according to the testimony before the Naval Committee the difference between the two ships—the Florida and the Utah, one built by private contract and the other in the navy yard—was $2,182,000, while the total indirect charges were only $954,000, leaving over $1,000,000 after you have taken out all indirect charges. How can the gentleman explain that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Add $500,000 dead loss to the contractor and it comes down to half a million dollars, and still the contractor apparently is engaged in the eleemosynary work of building ships for the Government for nothing.

Mr. KOPP. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. And if there be no other objection, I would object to permitting any contractor to work for the Government for nothing, particularly in the vital matter of building battleships or other ships essential to the defense of the country.

Mr. KOPP. Granting that what the gentleman says is true and that the contractor lost $500,000 on that ship, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is still a difference of $700,000 after taking out that loss, if there be a loss, and after deducting all the indirect charges.

Mr. PADGETT. I call attention to the fact that the two million one hundred thousand and some odd dollars does not include the $500,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not agree with those figures.

Mr. KOPP. That is the testimony.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman asked me a question. I do not agree to those figures.

Mr. KOPP. So far as that loss was concerned, it was merely an estimate on the part of Admiral Watts, that he believed the contractor must have lost $500,000. Personally I do not believe they are doing business for nothing or at a loss.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is talk here about the cost of building ships at the yards, and last year or the year before much ado was made over the fact that it was necessary to increase the limit of cost of a yard-built ship, because it could not be completed within the limit of cost. Is there complaint when they can not build ships authorized by contract within the limit of cost? Not at all. The latest vessels authorized to be built by contract, I am informed, were treated in an interesting manner. When the bids were received, the bids were all in excess of the limit of cost. Did the department come to Congress and complain that it was impossible to build those ships, as they did with the ones placed in the navy yards?

Mr. PADGETT. They were less than the limit by about $100,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They could not be built within the limit of cost.

Mr. PADGETT. They were built within the contract. The contract limit of cost was $6,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will pardon me while I make my statement. I think I am correct. When it was ascertained that it would not be possible to get the ship that had been laid down as planned they substituted inferior material in many respects. They substituted nickel steel for special hardened steel that was intended to be placed in the ship. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if that is not true?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not heard that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have, and it is a matter of some notoriety, but it has not been done so far as I have been able to learn as to any ship that was set to be built in a Government yard.

Mr. Chairman, there was without question some years ago an understanding among the shipbuilding plants of the country to divide the business of the Government among them, and never until we initiated the policy, not of building all the ships—we have built, I think, ships costing some $25,000,000, out of a total of $396,000,000, in Government yards—never, until this policy was established, was the hold of the Shipbuilding Trust on the Government broken. A new standard of efficiency and speed in construction was also established, which elicited the admiration even of the great British naval constructor who visited this country about two years ago and expressed surprise that it was possible to put a ship off the ways as speedily as we did the Florida.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have his time extended two minutes. I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if he can reconcile this: Here is a statement in the hearings by Rear Admiral Watts, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, who says that the labor cost on the Florida was $2,815,388.15—that that was the whole labor cost according to the statement of the constructor. Now they tell us that, due to the increased cost of labor in Government yards, one vessel costs more than two millions more, due to labor cost, than in a private shipyard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not reconcile the figures nor can anyone else. They do not fit. The labor cost is not very much different from the cost of material. Double the labor cost, make liberal allowances for all other items, and there still remains almost a million dollars of the stated cost to be allotted. In that connection let me call attention to the fact that under the direction of Congress the Department of Commerce and Labor made an investigation to determine how it was that working 10 hours a day the Newport News Ship Yard had hardly been able to keep up with the Government yard with an 8-hour day. The report of that department made to the House shows that twenty-four and a fraction more per cent of work was turned out in the Government yard in an 8-hour day than in the private yards with a 10-hour day. So remarkable and astounding was the record that the naval attaché of the German embassy asked me to furnish a copy of that report for transmission to Germany, in order to show the capacity and efficiency of the Government yards in this country.

To illustrate the difficulty of obtaining accurate information about costs from the Navy Department let me remind the House that when it was proposed to compel contract ships to be built in yards having an eight-hour day it was asserted that the cost would be increased 20 to 25 per cent. The following statement shows bids for colliers to be constructed under the eight-hour provision and without it.

Proposals received for the construction of fleet colliers Nos. 9, 10, 11, and 12.
[Proposals opened June 20, 1911.]

Name.	Time, months.	Number of vessels.	Class 2, bidders' price—plans.	Remarks.[1]
Newport News Steamship & Dry Dock Co., Newport News, Va.	Both in 22	Nos. 9 and 10	[2] $995,000	Proposal accompanied by certified check for $60,000.
	Both in 22	Nos. 11 and 12	[2] 975,000
	4 in 24	Nos. 9 and 10	[2] 980,000	Vessels to be constructed at Newport News.
		Nos. 11 and 12	[2] 980,000
Maryland Steel Co., Baltimore	Both in 22	Nos. 11 and 12	[2] 997,000	Babcock & Wilcox boilers.
	1 in 18	1 of 11 and 12	984,000	Bond for $35,000.
	Both in 24	Both 11 and 12	[2] 973,000	Transverse system.
	1 in 18	1 of 11 and 12	962,000	Isherwood system.
	Both in 24	Both 11 and 12	[2] 951,000

[1] All proposals based on second form of payment in Construction and Repair letter June 10, 1911. [2] Each.

No proposals received under Class 1, department's plans.
Publicly opened at the Navy Department by direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

——— ———, Solicitor.

Mr. Chairman, Nos. 9 and 10 are to be built under the 8-hour law; Nos. 10 and 11 are not so restricted. The Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Co.'s bids show a difference of $20,000, or 2.05 per cent, only. If they get four they would build each of them for $980,000; that is, there is apparently no difference in price between those under the 8-hour law and those not under it, or if there is any difference, as may be noted, it is $5,000, or only one-half per cent.

Comparing Maryland Steel Co.'s bids, the lowest, $951,000, as against Newport News Co.'s high bid, $995,000, there is only a difference of 4.6 per cent. It is to be noted that the Maryland Steel Co.'s bid is for the Isher-Wood system of construction, which is undoubtedly somewhat cheaper construction than that for which the Newport News Co. bid.

As far as the general provisions are concerned with regard to these bids, they speak for themselves.

They demonstrate the futility of accepting the figures of the department upon the question of cost. I favor the pending amendment; I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments close in 10 minutes.

Mr. REDFIELD. I will say to the gentleman that I would like five minutes.

Mr. CALDER. I want a few minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. All you gentlemen are on one side, and you ought to be content with four speeches against one.

Mr. JONES. I would like five minutes on the gentleman's side.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I will modify that and move that all debate close in 15 minutes, 5 minutes to be given to the gentleman from California, Mr. KNOWLAND, 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York, Mr. REDFIELD, both on one side, and 5 minutes to Mr. JONES, on the other side.

Mr. CALDER. I hope the gentleman will extend it three minutes more.

Mr. PADGETT. I will make it 18 minutes, to give 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York, Mr. CALDER.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 18 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, the statements of the chairman of the committee would, I am free to admit, present a very strong case against the construction of ships in navy yards were they to go unchallenged. But I want to present to the House some facts that I believe will convince this body that instead of resulting in a loss to the Government that the construction of these colliers in navy yards has resulted in a direct saving to the United States.

Let me call your attention to the fact that in 1908 the naval appropriation bill provided for the building of two colliers. It was understood that these two colliers were to be constructed in private shipyards, and the limit of cost placed upon them was $1,800,000 each. No protest was made in the committee as to the cost, and no one voiced a protest on the floor of this House. An amendment was inserted on the floor providing that one of the colliers should be built in a navy yard of the United States. That amendment remained in the bill.

Immediately private shipbuilding firms reduced their prices. Bear in mind that $1,800,000 each was to be the cost of these colliers, but as soon as we provided that one should be built in a navy yard of the United States the various private firms submitted exceptionally low bids ranging from $822,500 to $900,000. There were three or four separate bids, and these bids were all so much alike that it at least gave suspicion of collusion. The result was that the Secretary of the Navy refused to build the collier in a navy yard notwithstanding the mandate of Congress, because of these bids—no doubt at below cost. The next year the bids were raised to $900,000, then to $1,000,000, and again to $1,100,000.

This year the limit of cost is placed at $1,140,000. After the eight-hour law was placed upon construction of the colliers there was only one of these private concerns that submitted a bid, and that bid was for $1,500,000, a larger amount than it cost to build the collier in a navy yard of the United States. A contract has since been let to a private firm at a lower figure, made possible because this firm was given a contract for two colliers. A navy yard could build two much cheaper than one no doubt. I believe it is sound business policy for this great Government, in order to maintain the navy yards at a high standard of efficiency and to retain an efficient, skilled, and permanent force of mechanics, to occasionally build a ship in these yards, and I also contend that it has a tendency to keep the private shipbuilding firms from combining and submitting excessive bids. We know in one instance that it has resulted in lowering the cost of colliers from $1,800,000 to less than $1,000,000. I would not advocate the building of all ships in navy yards, but we find that nearly every foreign country—France, Germany, England, and Japan—are building some of their ships in the navy yards, because they appreciate that to keep these yards up to a high standard of efficiency, and to retain skilled mechanics, has an excellent effect upon the private shipbuilding concerns. While it may cost a few dollars more, in the long run we are saving money to the Government by providing that occasionally small ships at least be constructed in the navy yards of the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, had he gone a little more in detail into the cost of the Florida, would have discovered a state of facts which I am inclined to think would have surprised him, for it is a fact that the engines of the Florida, which were built at the Brooklyn Navy Yard, actually cost less—some tens of thousands of dollars less—than the engines of the Utah, which were built at a private yard in Camden, N. J. The fact was stated to me by one of the engineer officers of the Navy. I went to the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering and asked him if it was true that the engines of the Florida actually cost less than the engines of the Utah. He said it was true. I asked him if he would put it in writing, and he did. He gave me the figures, and I have them. I have them not here with me, but I showed them at the time to my colleague, Mr. FITZGERALD, and so far as the construction of that portion of the ship is concerned—and it is a very large portion, nearly or quite one-third of it—it actually costs less to-day to build the great engines of battleships in the Brooklyn Navy Yard than it does at private plants; and the detail facts I shall be very glad to state as soon as I can look again at the letter. The difference is some tens of thousands of dollars in that one ship.

Secondly, no one has ever ventured to question that the Government gets a better ship when it builds its own vessels; and it gets a better ship for two very excellent reasons. In the first place, the element of profit is entirely left out. The private contractor, if he will survive, must make, if he can make, a profit out of his vessels. In an effort to meet the competition of the navy yards they have sometimes failed to make a profit; but the effort for profit is always there in the private ship and can never be eliminated in any calm judgment of the wisdom of building a ship in a private or a public yard. Apart from the element of profit, which is in every one of the ships built in the private yards, there is the high professional pride of the naval constructors in building a better ship with their own hands for their fellows to use; and in a thousand little details that make up the life of a battleship and count for its security, and especially bear upon its cost of maintenance and repair, the public-built ship is a better-built ship and a cheaper ship to maintain, a better vessel in very many ways than you get out of a private yard for the same or a less price.

I am not myself wholly unfamiliar with the facts from personal knowledge. Before I ever expected to enter these halls I was in a way connected directly with the building and equipment of four of our great vessels, one of them built in a public yard and three in private yards; and it is true that you get a better ship all through if she is built in the navy yard than you get if she is built with the necessary element of profit which is necessarily present in a private yard. And for the evidence of it you have only to look at two vessels recently constructed under the same specifications, with each of which I had myself a little something to do—the Florida and the Utah. The Utah far outdid any other previous ship. I said to the admiral commanding the Bureau of Steam Engineering, "Wait until the Florida comes." He said, "She will hardly do better." And I said, "She will." And she did better. So that the fastest ship and the strongest ship we have got, beating not only all other ships, but beating a fine ship built in a private yard, under the same specifications and at the same time, is the Florida, built in the Brooklyn Navy Yard. You have got to explain these hard, solid facts away before you can say it is always cheaper to build in a private yard, for in what does cheapness consist—first cost or ultimate cost? Never in first cost, unless the ultimate cost can be considered, and not alone in ultimate cash cost, but in usefulness, endurance, stability, and power, and in this respect unquestioned and so far unchallenged by anybody, the ships built in the public yards have been supreme. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES. I did not expect, Mr. Chairman, to take part in this debate, but I have been so much astonished at the statements that have been made by gentlemen favoring this amendment as to the comparative cost of building ships in Government yards and building them in private yards, and as to the comparative strength and speed of ships built in Government yards and those built in private yards, that I can not permit these misleading and absolutely unfounded statements to go unchallenged. The facts show just the reverse of what is claimed by these gentlemen. I wish first to notice the statements made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. The gentleman has stated that the Florida, which was built at a Government yard, was one of the few of our battleships whose speed has exceeded that required in the specifications. He would create the impression that the battleships built in private yards had fallen short of the speed requirements. Let me tell the House, Mr. Chairman, that the great battleship Delaware, which was built at Newport News, Va., by the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., one of the world's most powerful Dreadnoughts, exceeded its contract speed by 1 knot. Many of the greatest battleships of our Navy were built by this great private shipbuilding concern, and there has never been one of them whose speed did not exceed that required under the specifications. The Texas, which is designed to be the most powerful battleship afloat, and which was successfully launched only a few days ago at Newport News, is to cost the Government less than $6,000,000. It was estimated by the Brooklyn Navy Yard authorities that it would cost $7,500,000 to build this ship at that yard. The Government has thus saved more than $1,500,000 by building this ship at this great private yard. Something has been said in regard to the Louisiana and the Connecticut, built some years ago. The Louisiana was built at Newport News, a private yard, and was completed five months ahead of the Connecticut, built at a Government yard. It is true that the Louisiana was built under the 10-hour system, but it is not true, as has been stated, that any nightwork was done upon that ship. These facts show what little reliance can be placed upon the alleged facts of the advocates of this amendment.

I wish to say further, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentlemen who represent Government navy yards that it is known to everybody who possesses any knowledge upon the subject that ships can be and are built cheaper in private than in Government yards. I had not supposed until I listened to these gentlemen that this was a question about which there was any room for argument or dispute. I deny, too, most emphatically that the ships which are built in private yards are in any respect inferior to those built in the navy yards. The facts absolutely disprove such absurd charges as these.

The Government has its representatives and expert supervisors and inspectors stationed at every private yard where a Government ship is being built, and there is not a bolt that goes into the construction of that ship that is not carefully inspected. These inspectors are thoroughly trained men, whose competency is beyond question, and they reject every piece of wood or steel which does not come up to the most rigid requirements of the specifications. The naval constructors, under whose supervision the ships are built in private yards, are experts in shipbuilding and it is not possible for any private shipbuilding concern to slight Government work. Those who are competent to speak upon this subject know that this is true. It is a serious reflection upon the Navy Department to intimate that private yards turn out inferior work and for that reason are enabled to build Government vessels at a less price than they can be built in Government yards. It is easy enough for gentlemen to make these charges, but I challenge any man upon this floor to name a single ship ever built for the Government by the Newport News Shipbuilding Co. that was not built strictly according to specifications or into which inferior material or bad workmanship entered. It is easy to make unsupported and reckless charges such as these, but it will be quite another thing to prove them, and I demand the proof. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, in the naval bill of two years ago one battleship was authorized to be built in a Government yard and 1 battleship and 15 auxiliary vessels were authorized to be built by contract. In the naval bill of last year 2 battleships and 13 auxiliary craft were authorized, all to be built by private contract. So that in the two years past out of 29 vessels provided for only 1 has been authorized to be built in a navy yard of the country. In the program of this year there are 13 vessels authorized. We come here to-day and ask that 2 of those 13 be built in Government yards. We do not ask that all of these vessels be built at navy yards, but simply a small proportion of them. It has been our argument, Mr. Chairman, for years that it ought to be the policy of this Government to continue in the highest state of efficiency some of its navy yards, so that at a moment's notice they will be able to handle any naval proposition that may be put upon them. Now, to those of you who are not familiar with navy-yard matters, let me suggest the fact that three or four times each year the fleets come in for repair, and between the time the fleets are in and away at sea many men are discharged from the navy yard and the efficiency of the force is broken up, and I am advised by no less authority than the Secretary of the Navy himself that while a ship is under construction at the yard, when the fleet comes in for repair or alteration, it is the custom to take the men from the new vessel and put them on the repair work. This is done without the slightest inconvenience, and enables the Government to fit the fleet for sea without delay at much less cost than if it were compelled to call in several thousand men, many unfamiliar with naval work, employ them for several weeks, and then lay them off again.

Much has been said of the difference in the cost of construction of vessels built in the yards and those built by contract. We are informed that before the session ends to-day an amendment is to be put into this bill providing for the construction of all these vessels by 8-hour labor. When that is done it will materially increase the cost of the contract-built ships, with the effect that unquestionably we will be able to compete with the private yards of the country almost on equal terms. And taking into consideration the necessity of having at least two or three of our great yards constantly in shape to handle this work at a moment's notice, it seems to me the argument falls to the ground.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will prevail; it will mean that the navy yard at New York will keep its very efficient force together for another year, at least, in the construction of one of these colliers. During the debate this afternoon the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] made the statement that the attitude of the Democratic Party in caucus in opposing the construction of any battleships this year had met with almost universal favor throughout the country, and he particularly cited the attitude of the newspapers of the country. Such has not been my experience, as an evidence of the public sentiment of the great State of New York on this important subject, and, as I understand it, the feeling throughout the entire country can be no better emphasized than in the editorials of some of the great New York dailies, which I propose to print as a part of my remarks. The Brooklyn Eagle, New York Times, New York Sun, New York Herald, all four the most independent politically of any newspapers in the country:

[From the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, Mar. 27, 1912.]

A DEMOCRATIC CRISIS SELF-PRECIPITATED.

The Democratic House caucus has resolved that there shall be no increase of the strength of the Navy this year and no measure to authorize any new Federal buildings. The national need had to be sacrificed to beat back the local greed. The Navy is a national need. The demand for Federal buildings on a numerous scale is a local greed. The local greed has fought the national need to a standstill, and the national need has been sacrificed to beat back the local greed.

This makes the House a slaughterhouse instead of a House of Representatives. It makes the caucus a trading body instead of a body of legislators for the public good. It is a disgraceful spectacle, but not an unintelligible or a surprising one. No political party has ever successfully been an enemy of the National Navy. The Whigs tried that before the Civil War. The Federals tried that before the Whigs. The Democrats tried it at times after the Civil War, and are now trying it again. They have made a mistake which ought to be fatal or which certainly ought to be at once retraced.

As usual, there are explanations. They are, however, explanations that will not explain. The people of the United States will not excuse Representatives who say: "We had to scant the Navy in order to beat the excessive demands for large Federal buildings in small towns." The subordination of a national need in order to curb a local greed will not be justifiable to the American electorate. The preservation of Democratic supremacy in the next House can not be made to depend on the beating of petty local sentiment for Federal buildings at national expense in hole-and-corner districts. There is a better alternative. It is to change the control of the next House of Representatives from Democracy to Republicanism. That has been done before because of the hostility of the Democracy to the Navy and of the surrender of the Democracy to banded rapacity for local buildings at national expense.

The action of the Democratic House caucus has done not a little to restore the Republican Party to House control. It can not be too soon and too absolutely renounced by the Democracy of this House, if that party would carry the next. The Navy can not be stricken down by the Federal-buildings ring of Representatives of both parties without the Democracy, which controls and is responsible for this House, losing the next. The loss of the next House should carry with it the loss of the next Presidency; and this in spite of Republican divisions or dissentions.

The Republican Party would welcome the opportunity to sink its divisions in order to rally the people for the preservation of the Navy against a party that would immediately cripple the Navy by a policy which would progressively destroy the Navy. "The Navy," triumphantly exclaimed Commodore and United States Senator Richard Field Stockton, "is the darling of the Nation." His words have not lost force or meaning or national hold on national sentiment. The House yesterday greatly weakened its hold on American sentiment, and the weakening of the hold is deserved.

We care not to deal seriously with the excuses. There was reason for patriotic Democrats to bolt the caucus. There was no reason for them to strangle the Navy in order to strangle the Federal-buildings ring. They could have left the fate of that ring to a not wholly demoralized Senate and to the action of a patriotic President and to the action of a patriotic people.

And the banded river and harbor cabal of rapacious Congressmen must yet be confronted, and it may drive the Democratic House to as pusillanimous a course as the Federal-buildings ring has done. There is no statesmanship in cowardice. There is no politics which commands respect in surrendering what should be preserved in order to flank what should not be tolerated. A party that truckled to free silver should have learned enough from surrendering its convictions not to offend the sentiment for the Navy by such a course as was taken in the caucus on Wednesday. The buildings ring could have been left to the Senate and the veto power. The Navy should not have been abandoned in order to head off a motley combination of jobbers and cranks.

BUILD THE TWO DREADNOUGHTS.

The interruption of the building up of our Navy for economical reasons would be bad policy, and we do not believe that the policy will prevail, in spite of the recent action of a Democratic caucus in Congress. Secretary Meyer's protest, printed Wednesday, states the case clearly. His arguments seem unanswerable, unless we are willing to have our Navy deteriorate. England is building five new Dreadnoughts, and Germany three, while Japan has ordered five. The Secretary of the Navy points out that one Dreadnought is the equal of five battleships of the older type.

The boast that the United States now occupies second place among the naval powers of the world is ill founded, according to the Naval League. We have not been keeping pace with the other powers in the building of warships of the latest type, and it would be blind folly now to lose the advantage of such progress as we have made. Provision should be made to meet the President's request for the addition of two Dreadnoughts to our fleet this year. The Democrats should take pride in the fact that much of the credit for the modernization of our Navy belongs to them. It began in the first Cleveland administration. The plan of building two new battleships yearly was the result of a compromise originally, as four were asked for in 1900, and the understanding reached then was that two should be authorized each year thereafter. No party question is involved in this matter. The caucus was controlled by a false idea of economy.

THE NEED OF INCREASING OUR NAVY.

Admiral Mahan presents in The Times this morning a clear and logical argument against the plan of the Democratic majority of the House of Representatives so to cripple the United States Navy as to affect our standing in the community of nations. Only by keeping our naval establishment on a footing with the great navies of the world can we secure peace to the whole American Continent and hold securely our foreign possessions. The policy of increasing the Navy by at least two ships of the first class every year should not be abandoned. Admiral Mahan points out that Mr. Stead, the peace advocate, favored as a peace measure the building of two British warships for every one built by Germany.

We talk a great deal of the Monroe doctrine. As Admiral Mahan says, the only leg it has to stand upon is a strong Navy. He finds a curious inconsistency in the fact that in the very session in which the House Democratic caucus voted against an appropriation for two battleships a Democratic Senator saw fit to introduce a resolution reaffirming the Monroe doctrine. The action of the House of Representatives in the matter of warships is purely political. It puts the majority in the light of rebuking Republican expenditures. The United States Navy, however, is neither Republican nor Democratic. The Senate should not hesitate to restore the appropriation for the new warships.

[From the New York Sun, Mar. 20, 1912.]

CRIPPLING THE NAVY.

The Democrats at Washington, by an almost unanimous vote in caucus, have decided not to vote any money for the construction of new battleships at a time when England has 18 Dreadnoughts completed and 14 building, when Germany has 9 completed and 15 building, and when Japan is preparing to add 8 Dreadnoughts and 8 powerful battle cruisers to her fleet.

Regarding the Michigan and South Carolina as Dreadnoughts, only because they have a main battery of eight 12-inch guns (they would be no match for the swifter and more heavily armed Florida or Utah), the United States Navy has 6 Dreadnoughts in her fleet, 4 more building, and 2 authorized. That is the end of the chapter so far as the Democratic Party is concerned.

The action of the Democratic majority is notice to the world that when the Panama Canal opens the United States will have only 10 Dreadnoughts in commission (the 2 ships authorized by the Sixty-first Congress will not have been completed), with no more than 12 ships of the first battle line in sight. If the canal should be finished in the summer of 1914, England will have 32 Dreadnoughts flying the flag and Germany 21. The Dreadnought strength of Japan at that time can not be surely determined, but her first battle line will be almost as strong as that of the United States, and Japan will be steadily pursuing a policy of naval expansion, such as the United States has abandoned.

A more alarming aspect of the case is that Germany, which may some day challenge the Monroe doctrine, not satisfied with 24 Dreadnoughts completed and building, is planning a battle fleet of 1 flagship and 5 squadrons of 8 battleships each, with 10 large cruisers and 30 small cruisers as reconnaissance ships.

In the general expansion of armaments among the great naval powers, the United States is compelled to relinquish the minimum of safety in new construction and go to the rear, because the Democrats in the House are bent on posing as the party of frugal economy on the eve of a presidential election. The American people have never been treated to such an exhibition of vicious humbug. No retrenchment could be more uncalled for, unpatriotic, and perilous, and it is flagrantly indefensible, because the Democrats in the Sixty-first Congress voted for at least one new Dreadnought.

BATTLESHIPS AS A MATTER OF BUSINESS.

Representative CLAUDE KITCHIN, of North Carolina, has favored the country with his reasons for opposing any authorization of battleships this session. In an explanation that must make the judicious grieve he delivers himself of the great truth that small ships can be built more cheaply than large ones. Quite so. Therefore, he concludes we must, for the present, delay providing battleships and authorize auxiliaries alone.

Has Mr. KITCHIN even given serious thought to what such delays in the past have meant to us? Between 1883 and 1900, for example, one hundred and ten millions were spent on warship construction and repairs. In seven months of 1898 the Spanish War cost us something more than five hundred millions. Had one-fifth of this last expenditure—let us say one hundred millions—been devoted to fleet construction, our sea force would have been doubled and four hundred millions of dollars would have been saved, for no Spanish War would have been fought.

With such odds in sea power against her Spain could, with honor, have declined hostilities, Cuba would have been freed, and reparation have been made for the Maine. And, happiest of all, the suffering and pathetic waste of life would have been spared. But no. The same delay Mr. KITCHIN is preaching now was preached then, and for the same reasons, and here, offered as a cold fact of business management, was the pitiable outcome of this policy of delay.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out the letter "a" before the word "navy," and inserting the letter "s" after the word "yard."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment by striking out the letter "a" in front of the word "navy," and adding the letter "s" to the word "yard," so that it will read, "which shall be built at navy yards."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PADGETT. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Six torpedo-boat destroyers, to have the highest practicable speed, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $940,000 each.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment and ask that it be considered as pending until after the amendment of the chairman of the committee is acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire the amendment to be reported?

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Yes, sir; and then be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "each," in line 16, page 63, insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the construction of any of said torpedo-boat destroyers by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of the commencement and construction of said vessels established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged or to be engaged in the construction of the vessels named herein.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be considered as pending and passed for the present. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not object, but I ask unanimous consent that every Member may offer an amendment at every paragraph in this bill that appropriates money to the same effect, and let them be pending.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, that was said facetiously.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One tender to destroyers to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $1,315,000.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that after it is reported it be considered as pending and take the same course as the other one which I have just offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 19, page 63, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the construction of said tender to destroyers by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the commencement and construction of said vessels established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged or to be engaged in the construction of the vessels named herein."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Four submarine torpedo boats in an amount not exceeding in the aggregate $2,240,000; and the sum of $800,000 is hereby appropriated for said purpose.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. First, let me ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] if he proposes to offer that same amendment?

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. I wanted to offer a new paragraph at that point. Let the gentleman proceed with his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. CANNON. Unanimous consent is given to every Member to offer an amendment to every paragraph that appropriates any money. Two positives make a negative, and two negatives make a positive; and if it comes to two consents that comes to no consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "purpose," line 23, page 63, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the construction of any submarine torpedo boats by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of commencement and construction of said vessels established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged or to be engaged in the construction of the vessels herein named."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 63, after line 23, as a separate paragraph, insert the following: "The appropriation made by the act of May 4, 1898, for one gunboat to be built on the Great Lakes, to take the place of the U. S. S. Michigan (now Wolverine), is hereby made available for the construction of a river gunboat, which may, as advantage may offer, be built elsewhere than on the Great Lakes or their connecting waters."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, this is not an additional appropriation, but heretofore an appropriation was made to construct a gunboat for use on the Great Lakes; but on account of our treaty relations with Great Britain it can not be carried out. They need a gunboat of that description in Chinese waters, and this is simply to authorize the appropriation heretofore made for a gunboat on the Lakes to be for a gunboat to be used in Chinese waters.

Mr. PAYNE. To convert this appropriation in this way means, I suppose, an economy in the appropriations of this Congress.

Mr. PADGETT. This was an appropriation of a previous Congress, and it is proposed to use it for something that is now needed instead of for something that can not be used.

Mr. PAYNE. But doing it in this way will enable the gentleman to show a smaller appropriation for naval construction in this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. This Congress is not responsible for it, because this appropriation was made heretofore, and the Secretary says he can not use it.

Mr. PAYNE. On account of our relations with Great Britain?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. And so we propose to sneak that appropriation into this bill for something that we do need, that should be charged to this bill but will not be.

Mr. PADGETT. I am perfectly willing to charge it here if you want to. We are going to use that appropriation to build a gunboat to be used in Chinese waters.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the square way would be to appropriate just this amount of money and have it counted in this bill as an appropriation.

Mr. PADGETT. I am putting it exactly in the language in which the Secretary of the Navy asked for it. I do not suppose the gentleman desires to discredit his own Secretary.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman does me too much honor when he credits me with the possession of so important a Secretary.

Mr. GOOD. What was the amount of the former appropriation?

Mr. PADGETT. It reads—

To cost, exclusive of armament, not more than $260,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph the following:

"One submarine tender, to cost not to exceed $1,000,000; and the sum of $400,000 is hereby appropriated toward said purpose."

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to provide a tender for the submarines that have been appropriated for in this bill. We have now a number of submarines in commission, but there is not in the Navy a proper tender for those submarines. What tenders we have are makeshifts.

There are at present 16 submarines in active service provided with tenders which, although sufficient in number, are in all cases improvised for the purpose and are by no means efficient or satisfactory. The Severn, for example, has no motive power, and must be towed by another vessel, while the Fortune, on the Pacific coast, is but a tug, and the Mohican, of the Asiatic station, besides having no motive power, is very old and can be used practically only as a stationary barrack ship.

There are 4 submarines in reserve at Charleston with no tender whatever assigned, and these vessels can not operate at any distance from that place for this reason. The 4 submarines on the west coast which will soon be commissioned will have the services of the Alert as tender, but that vessel is nearly 30 years old and is not suited for such duty, although being the best available.

There are, in addition, 15 submarines under construction which will be assigned to the active flotillas in the next year or two, which, with the 4 boats in reserve at Charleston without a tender, make a total of 19 for which tenders will have to be assigned and for which but one such vessel, authorized last year, is the only provision thus far made. It should be noted that I make no reference to any submarines that may be authorized in the naval appropriation bill now under discussion.

As 1 tender can care for 5 submarines, it is apparent that 3 additional tenders should be ready for service in the comparatively near future. I am informed that there are no vessels of the Navy suitable for conversion to submarine tenders that can be spared from their present assignments, and that, furthermore, a thoroughly satisfactory tender can not be developed from a ship designed for other purposes without extensive expenditures.

The existing type of submarines and those now under construction are very dependent upon their tenders, which act as mobile bases, furnish quarters for the personnel, carry stores and supplies of all kinds necessary for the operation and maintenance of the submarines, and are equipped with suitable dynamos for charging their batteries, and with machine shops capable of making all ordinary repairs. Without a tender these submarines are very much restricted in their sphere of activities and can not venture far from a fixed locality.

With the long coast line of the United States and the present number of submarines in the Navy it is apparent that circumstances might arise rendering necessary a change of base of any of the submarine groups, involving possibly long distances to be traversed. Without sufficient tenders this would not be possible and the consideration of both offensive and defensive strategy would be accordingly handicapped.

It, therefore, seems most important that this type of vessel be authorized at the present time, and accordingly I move that there be inserted in the bill under discussion the necessary authorization for the construction of 1 submarine tender not to exceed $1,000,000 in cost.

As we are providing for submarines, we ought to provide for the necessary adjuncts to the submarines. I hope that this amendment will be adopted; it is almost useless to have submarines unless they have tenders.

I can assure the Representatives from the great interior ports of the country which are dependent, many for safety and all for their prosperity, in a large measure, on the stability of the improvement at the mouth of the Mississippi River, that the adoption of this amendment will have direct and important bearing on that protection, for it will enable the Department of the Navy to effectively patrol the waters of the Gulf of Mexico at its mouth with submarines fully equipped for such defense.

Mr. Chairman, I append a description of the modern submarine which has been furnished me, and which shows how much confidence we may place in them as instruments of defense, and the people of the Mississippi Valley may place great faith in them if a sufficiently large number, fully equipped for service, with the necessary tenders, be stationed at the mouth of the river:

The modern submarine is a vessel ranging in length from 150 to 230 feet, having a speed of from 14 to 17 knots on the surface and 10 to 12 knots submerged. Propulsion on the surface is by means of internal-combustion oil engines, usually of about 1,000 horsepower per boat, although one boat is being built with engines of 5,000 horsepower. These vessels are very seaworthy—can remain at sea without injury in the severest storms—and in this respect are superior to destroyers. They can cruise on the surface at a distance of 5,000 miles without replenishing their fuel supply. They can pass from the surface to the submerged condition in a time of only three minutes and can run completely submerged at any depth down to 200 feet, and can also, by means of their periscopes, obtain a view of the surface without danger of being themselves discovered, except when only a few hundred yards distant from the enemy. Even if discovered at this close range they are immune from attack for the reason that they can almost instantly dive to any depth desired.

Their armament consists of modern torpedoes, which, due to the fact that the submarine can approach with impunity to very close quarters, may be considered very accurate and exact. The chances of misses when fired from a submarine are very small as compared to the chances when fired from a long range from surface vessels. The uses of submarines in time of war would be both defensive and offensive. Primarily they would be used to protect seaports, landing places, and other strategic points. When provided in a sufficient number an attack from sea or the landing of an enemy's force is rendered practically impossible. For certain purposes of defense, such as the Panama Canal, the submarine would be as effective as a large fleet of battleships stationed on either side of the canal. Guns on shore alone could never fully protect this most important strategic point. A ship could lie off at such great distance as to be practically safe from the attacks of the fort and at the same time land shells into the canal, doing immense damage. As a weapon of defense the modern submarine as at present developed could be used in connection with the battleship fleet.

Its surface speed is now such that it could cruise with the fleet and would be left behind only in extreme cases—where the maximum speed of the fleet would be called for. Instead of accompanying the fleet modern submarines could be used to cruise in flotillas alone, searching out and destroying the enemy wherever he might be found.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted. It is contemplated that some of the submarines authorized in the bill will be sent to New Orleans for the protection of the mouth of the Mississippi. They will be built in the East; they can not be sent to New Orleans nor used after they get there without a tender, and I trust that the committee will agree to this amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the gentleman from Louisiana, Gen. ESTOPINAL, has presented these matters and urged them before the committee, and it is true that a submarine tender is needed. The committee did not include it in the appropriation bill, because, considering all matters and the amount of the bill, we felt that it was as much as the bill should carry in the report to the House. But this tender is needed, and if the committee sees fit to include it I shall not enter any protest against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to follow right after the one just adopted, and I ask that it take the same course as the other amendments that have been passed in the same line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by adding after the last word, as follows:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the construction of said submarine tender by any person, firm, or corporation which has not at the time of the commencement and the continuation of said vessel established an 8-hour workday for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged or to be engaged in the construction of said submarine tender."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that the amendment should be passed?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 63, after line 23, by adding the following paragraph:
"The Secretary of the Navy may build any or all of the vessels authorized in this act in such navy yards as he may designate, and shall build any of the vessels herein authorized in such navy yards as he may designate, should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, corporations, or agents thereof bidding for the construction of any of said vessels have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding, the effect or the purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels."

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order to that provision.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is the same provision that has been in the naval bill heretofore.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. It has appeared in the bill ahead of the provision for submarines. Submarines are of such a character and so controlled by patents that it is not possible for the Government to build them in the navy yards. If the gentleman will modify his amendment I will withdraw the point of order. I am in sympathy with it, but do not want to tie up the construction of submarines.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Then I have no objection to excepting the submarines, and I will modify my amendment in that particular.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment as modified read by the Clerk?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy may build any or all of the vessels in this act in such navy yards as he may designate, and shall build any of the vessels herein authorized, except submarines, in such navy yards as he may designate should it reasonably appear that persons, firms, corporations, or agents thereof bidding for the construction of any of said vessels have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding, the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, or unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the word "submarines" ought to be inserted in the first part of the amendment. It only appears once in the amendment, and it should appear twice. Let the Clerk report the amendment as it now stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy may build any or all of the vessels authorized in this act, except submarines, in such navy yards——

Mr. PADGETT. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California as modified.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore and herein authorized, $8,946,205.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 2, page 64, insert the following:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation for the construction and machinery of vessels shall be expended for construction of any vessels by any person, firm, or corporation which have not at the time of commencement and during the construction of said vessels established an eight-hour working day for all employees, laborers, and mechanics engaged or to be engaged in the construction of vessels named herein."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that be considered as pending.

Mr. PADGETT. Consent has already been given for that.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will yield, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, in connection with this amendment and others, if this appropriation does not apply to the completion and construction of vessels where contracts have already been made?

Mr. PADGETT. The amendment has been offered, but it is simply passed for the present, and it should not apply to those heretofore contracted for.

Mr. PAYNE. I wanted to call attention to that.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. When we take them up for consideration we will also take up that question.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course you can not go into a wholesale violation of contracts by enacting legislation of this kind without its being subject to a point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. They are just offered now and are passed subject to points of order and for consideration.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Increase of the Navy; colliers: On account of two fleet colliers heretofore authorized, $581,321.48.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk. It is an amendment of the same character as that which I just offered, and I ask unanimous consent that this be considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the same disposition will be made of the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois has just submitted.

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire now to ask unanimous consent to offer at this place the bill H. R. 9061, the 8-hour law, as passed by this House at the present session of Congress on the 14th day of December, 1911, which is the one that I have heretofore mentioned several times. This act was passed by an overwhelming vote, a large majority on both sides of the aisle. It has been reported faborably, without amendment, by the Senate committee. Instead of having all of these various matters interjected through the bill here and there and elsewhere, so that we will have to deal with all of those separately, and which, perhaps, may be in conflict with the general law that may be passed, I am asking unanimous consent that this amendment may be incorporated. When the bill goes to conference, should the Congress change it in any way and the law become different, in the conference we would have this changed, made to conform to the law as it shall pass. If there is no change made in the bill, it would remain as it is; and should the Senate not take action before receding from the action of the House I should submit the matter to the House for its future instruction.

I desire to make that statement that it may be clearly understood what my purpose is. I ask that this may be incorporated as an amendment at this time, to come after line 20, page 64.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. What has become of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] to follow the word "cents," in line 9, page 64?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to inquire whether the gentleman from Tennessee offered his amendment as a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PADGETT. I offer my amendment to come after line 20, page 64. I thought that had been reached.

The CHAIRMAN. That has not been reached.

Mr. PADGETT. Then I withdraw it until that time.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN.] I want to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, if he will give me his attention, that, as I understand the wording of his amendment, it would apply to all vessels that were authorized in the last Congress and which, as I understand it, are now under construction. Contracts have been let for the construction of those vessels, and to attach such an amendment as this to them would be a violation of the contracts which the Government has already entered into, and I do not think the gentleman desires to place the Government in any such position as that of impairing the obligation of its contracts.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Would anything that we now adopt be retroactive?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. It would make it so here.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose it does; could we not pay the damage on suits brought in the Court of Claims?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Oh, yes; we could pay the damages, but we do not want to subject people who have entered in good faith into contracts with this Government to a suit at law.

I am in favor of these eight-hour provisions going on to all new authorizations in the bill, but I am not in favor of an eight-hour provision going on this bill which is going to impair a contract already entered into by this Government, and I do not think the gentleman from Illinois is.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I understand that those amendments are pending and are subject to points of order.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. This is one that has just been offered.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes; but the gentleman from Illinois has asked that it be considered as pending. It is in the same position as the others.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. That is what I have been endeavoring to find out.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Until the amendment which is proposed to be offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, to follow after line 20, page 64, has been disposed of.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will pardon me, I do not think he understood the parliamentary situation. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] offers this amendment to which I have reserved the point of order, but before any action could be taken upon it, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], rose to his feet and asked unanimous consent to offer as an amendment at this time the general eight-hour law. That left the motion of the gentleman from Illinois wholly undetermined. I thereupon reserved a point of order, and pointed out to the gentleman wherein I think his amendment is out of order and not a fair motion to make on this provision of the bill.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I simply wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has in it a provision that exempts its application from contracts already made.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I am not finding any fault with the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. It is the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, that preceded it, that I am questioning.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total increase of the Navy heretofore and herein authorized, $16,830,373.48.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to present as an amendment the bill which I have just explained, which is the eight-hour law as it passed the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 20, page 64, insert the following:

"That every contract hereafter made to which the United States, any Territory, or the District of Columbia is a party, and every such contract made for on on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or said District, which may require or involve the employment of laborers or mechanics shall contain a provision that no laborer or mechanic doing any part of the work contemplated by the contract, in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor contracting for any part of said work contemplated, shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day upon such work; and every such contract shall stipulate a penalty for each violation of such provision in such contract of $5 for each laborer or mechanic for every calendar day in which he shall be required or permitted to labor more than eight hours upon said work; and any officer or person designated as inspector of the work to be performed under any such contract, or to aid in enforcing the fulfillment thereof, shall, upon observation or investigation, forthwith report to the proper officer of the United States, or of any Territory, or of the District of Columbia, all violations of the provisions of this act directed to be made in every such contract, together with the name of each laborer or mechanic who has been required or permitted to labor in violation of such stipulation, and the day of such violation, and the amount of the penalties imposed according to the stipulation in any such contract shall be directed to be withheld for the use and benefit of the United States, the District of Columbia, or the Territory contracting, by the officer or person whose duty it shall be to approve the payment of the moneys due under such contract, whether the violation of the provisions of such contract is by the contractor or any subcontractor. Any contractor of subcontractor aggrieved by the withholding of any penalty as hereinbefore provided shall have the right within six months thereafter to appeal to the head of the department making the contract on behalf of the United States or the Territory, and in the case of a contract made by the District of Columbia to the commissioners thereof, who shall have power to review the action imposing the penalty, and in all such appeals from such final order whereby a contractor or subcontractor may be aggrieved by the imposition of the penalty hereinbefore provided such contractor or subcontractor may within six months after decision by such head of a department, or the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, file a claim in the Court of Claims, which shall have jurisdiction to hear and decide the matter in like manner as in other cases before said court.

"That nothing in this section shall apply to contracts for transportation by land or water, or for the transmission of intelligence, or for such materials or articles as may usually be bought in open market, except armor and armor plate, whether made to conform to particular specifications or not, or for the purchase of supplies by the Government, whether manufactured to conform to particular specifications or not: Provided, That all classes of work which have been, are now, or may hereafter be performed by the Government shall, when done by contract by individuals, firms, or corporations for or on behalf of the United States or any of the Territories or the District of Columbia, be performed in accordance with the terms and provisions of this act. The President, by Executive order, may waive the provisions and stipulations in this act as to any specific contract or contracts during time of war or a time when war is imminent. No penalties shall be imposed for any violation of such provision in such contract due to any emergency caused by fire, famine, or flood, by danger to life or to property, or by other extraordinary event or condition on account of which the President shall subsequently declare the violation to have been justifiable. Nothing in this section shall be construed to repeal or modify the act entitled "An act relating to the limitation of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon the public works of the United States and of the District of Columbia," being chapter 352 of the laws of the Fifty-second Congress, approved August 1, 1892, or to apply to work done under contracts made prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, just a pro forma amendment. As this was an act and we are incorporating it as one section in the bill here, in line 12, page 3, the word "act" should read "section," and, on page 4, line 8, the word "act" should read "section," as it is incorporated in this general act.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be modified as indicated by the gentleman.

There was no objection.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Now I ask——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Let me dispose of this. I ask unanimous consent, to expedite matters, that all of the amendments heretofore offered and reserved which have relation to the eight-hour law be now disagreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. Do I understand the gentleman that that will include my amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly not; that is not embraced in the eight-hour law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all the amendments indicated that were offered as pending and passed by informally be considered as withdrawn. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment to be added as a paragraph at the end of the amendment just adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the amendment just adopted the following as a new paragraph:

"That no part of the appropriation authorized by this act shall be expended for the pay of enlisted men or seamen, not including commission and warrant officers, while doing repair work belonging to any recognized trade on battleships of the Navy when such battleships are docked or laid up at any navy yard for repairs: Provided further, That this provision shall not apply to such ordinary duties as are engaged in by the crew while at sea excepting dismantling and assembling armament for the purpose of repairs."

[Mr. MURRAY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I quite understand the amendment. It is to prohibit repairs of any kind by enlisted men?

Mr. PADGETT. In the ships at navy yards aside from battleships. It takes the greater ships, but excludes the other vessels.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. The amendment goes a little bit further than that. It prevents the enlisted personnel of the Navy who are on battleships that are in navy yards from doing any work on that ship that is ordinarily done by the recognized crafts or trades in the navy yard while the battleship is in the yard except such ordinary duties as the sailors do at sea.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask, and I ask in good faith for information, is it important when a battleship goes to sea that there should be some enlisted men aboard the ship who will be competent to make repairs necessary in distress——

Mr. PADGETT. Very important.

Mr. CANNON. Either from battle or storm?

Mr. PADGETT. Under any circumstances I think it is very important, and it does not occur to me that as amended this will prevent that, and therefore I did not object.

Mr. CANNON. But the men must know how.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now then, if when they are in the navy-yard docks and being repaired, not being skilled, they are shut out from being skilled, it seems to me if this amendment is adopted the gentleman ought to increase the membership of the crew of the battleship by a sufficient number of trained mechanics to meet emergencies that might arise from war or from storm.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer the gentleman from Illinois by saying that these ships have in their service machinists, boiler makers, and all those trades who may be needed to repair vessels at sea. For the last 20 years we have had enlisted men as boiler makers and such mechanics competent to keep things in repair.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the reason for this amendment is because some of the battleships during the present fiscal year have been put into a navy yard for repairs and because of a lack of funds in the Navy Department the crews, while the ships were in dock there or at the wharf in the navy yard, have been put to work doing things that are ordinarily done by the yard mechanics, and to make the situation more aggravated the yard mechanics that would ordinarily do that work were being discharged right and left because there was not money enough to keep them at work. Now, that is the situation, and this amendment seeks to prevent that recurring in the future.

Mr. CANNON. Now, let me understand. For the want of an appropriation, if the battleships were repaired at all, there was no money to pay the ordinary mechanic, who was discharged, and a seaman who was a mechanic, if he was fitted to repair it, was put at work on it.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Now, the claim is made that these seamen are not skilled mechanics and are not doing good work in addition to taking work away from the men employed heretofore.

Mr. CANNON. I take it they must be skilled mechanics, because the other sailor and navigator, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER], says that they have theses mechanics, boiler makers, etc., in the regular crews, so that the gentleman must be mistaken.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I am telling the gentleman what the men in the navy yard say.

Mr. CANNON. What is the fact?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I am not competent to judge.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill and the gentleman from Massachusetts, who offered the amendment, if the gentlemen have taken in consideration the absolute necessity of much larger appropriations, so that these battleships when they come into dock could be repaired by the ordinary employee or mechanic in the navy yard, and therefore be something to pay? Otherwise we, by law, would shut out the mechanic, who I am sure is of equal skill and belongs to the regular crew which is enlisted, and prevent him, by this provision, from making in whole or in part——

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I want to say to the gentleman further——

Mr. CANNON. You know I am a landlubber. I want to know.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I want to say to the gentleman that I have heard of complaints coming from the enlisted men that they have been compelled to do work while the ships were in the navy yard that formerly had not been done by enlisted men when the ship was in the navy yard. There is a double complaint over this practice that has come to me.

Mr. CANNON. Was the seaman, who was competent to repair the ship, under pay?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. He was under pay, certainly; but the practice heretofore has been for the seaman not to be put to this kind of work when the ship was in the navy yard.

Mr. CANNON. What was he doing in the meantime?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I could not tell you. He did not want to do the work that shore mechanics should be doing.

Mr. PADGETT. I will be frank with the gentleman that I think the effect of this will be to increase the expense; but this House has manifested such a marked disposition to recognize the demand with reference to labor, that when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] modified it and placed it in the present form I said to him I would withdraw my opposition to it.

Mr. CANNON. How much does my friend think it would increase the expense?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not prepared to say.

Mr. CANNON. I want to make this remark in justice to all parties. I know the gentlemen on both sides of the House who represent the navy-yard districts. They are most splendid Representatives, and, if it costs two or three millions more, they are worth it.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I heartily urge the adoption of the amendment which my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] has just offered. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is not conversant with the conditions in our navy yards, or he would not voice the objections which he has just made.

The purpose of this amendment is to prevent the employment in navy yards of sailors in work which is being done at those yards by regular mechanics of recognized trades. It is obviously unfair to these mechanics to have their work taken from them and given to enlisted sailors from the vessels. Whenever this takes place it causes friction on both sides. The enlisted men from the vessels resent their employment in other work not connected with their work as seamen, and the men in the yards, who have families to support and belong to recognized trades, naturally resent the competition of enlisted men in their work.

It is urged that this seldom takes place. Then, Mr. Chairman, there can be little interference occasioned by the provisions of this amendment. This amendment is not intended to interfere with good discipline or with efficiency; it is intended to assist in the conduct of the yards and to prevent occasions arising which might cause feeling between the mechanics in the yards and the enlisted men on the vessels. Many of the employees in the Charlestown Navy Yard live in my district, and I have received letters of complaint from them on this subject. I am glad to see the chairman of the committee accept this, and trust that his decision will be followed finally by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer the following amendment, to follow the last two amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a separate paragraph following the amendment:

"Provided, That no part of any sum herein appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of structural steel, ship plates, armor, armament, or machinery from any persons, firms, or corporations who have combined or conspired to monopolize the interstate or foreign commerce or trade of the United States, or the commerce or trade between the States and any Territory or the District of Columbia, in any of the articles aforesaid, and no purchase of structural steel, ship plates, or machinery shall be made at a price in excess of a reasonable profit above the actual cost of manufacture. But this limitation shall in no case apply to any existing contract."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, that is the same provision that was agreed to last year.

Mr. CANNON. Have there been any contracts let since that was adopted?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. How was it ascertained as a fact that a maker of structural steel was or was not in the trust?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not been charged with the duty of finding out or ascertaining.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand the Secretary of the Navy made one of the officers make an affidavit.

Mr. CANNON. Now, an affidavit would be a lie without a penalty for perjury. There is a penalty for forming a trust. I am just anxious to know whether this be merely high-sounding "leather and prunella" to show to the galleries and on the stump what we have been doing to break up the trusts, or whether it really be a matter of force.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I recollect that a few years ago an amendment was placed on the bill prohibiting the purchase of any powder from a trust. It was ascertained that the only place the powder could be purchased was from a trust, and the powder was purchased.

Mr. CANNON. In spite of the law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In spite of the law.

Mr. CANNON. Has not the Judiciary Committee been called upon to impeach the official who purchased it for violating the law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. It was expected that a Republican official would violate it. Nobody paid any attention to it.

Mr. CANNON. Then it ought to be expected that a Democratic House would impeach.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It happened when the House was Republican, and nobody expected it.

Mr. CANNON. It is not barred by the statute of limitation now. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a separate paragraph the following:

"After January 1, 1914, no captain or commander of the line of the Navy, who is not restricted by law to shore duty only, shall be promoted to the next higher grade who has not performed at least two full years of sea service in cruising ships of the Navy in his grade: Provided, That hereafter, except in time of war, no officer shall be appointed a chief of bureau, or to any other position in which his temporary rank shall be more than one grade higher than his rank in the regular service, and in no case shall an officer be appointed a chief of bureau who has not performed two years' sea service in command in the grade of commander and two years' sea service in the grade of captain."

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order and permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I will reserve the point of order, although I assure the gentleman that it is a waste of time, because I shall insist upon it.

Mr. BURLESON. I should like to ask the gentleman if he thinks a commander of the Navy ought to be promoted to be a captain of a ship when he has never served a day at sea as a commander?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. As a general proposition, no; but there are exceptional cases, where it would be an injustice not to promote him.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman state one of those exceptional cases?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Yes; I can state half a dozen.

Mr. BURLESON. State just one, and I will be content.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Here is a commander who is an expert in ordnance, and his services are so valuable to the Government that he is kept on ordnance work, and when his time for promotion comes he has not been able to go to sea as a commander. Ought that man to be retired and his services lost to the Government, when he has been doing the Government most valuable service in designing our guns and perfecting our means of offensive warfare?

Mr. BURLESON. This amendment does not contemplate that such an officer shall be put on the retired list.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Why should the man be kept out of his deserved promotion because he has not seen two years' sea service as commander through no fault of his own? I can cite half a dozen other instances where it would be a hardship not to allow a man to go from one grade to another.

Mr. BURLESON. One further question: Is the gentleman in favor of the petty favoritism that has some time been practiced in the Navy Department by denying some officers shore duty in order that others may be saved from sea service?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. If the gentleman gets his provision into the law there will be a one-man plucking board, because one man, by refusing to detail an officer to sea duty, can force him on to the retired list.

Mr. BURLESON. Have you not under existing law got it in the power of one man now?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. No; because the sea-service requirement is not now a prerequisite to promotion.

Mr. BURLESON. Under the law as it is, is it not within the power of one man now to take an officer of the Navy and make him chief of a bureau, and by keeping him there a few months enable him to retire as an admiral when he has completed 30 years' service?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. No man's promotion to-day depends on his sea service, and it is not in the power of any one man to prevent an officer being promoted. I make the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. I confidently expected the gentleman from Massachusetts would make the point of order.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Then the gentleman is not disappointed.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the amendment just adopted add the following as a separate paragraph:

"That hereafter the per diem clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger force at navy yards and naval stations under the Navy Department shall be granted leave of absence with pay not to exceed 15 days in any one year, which leave may in exceptional and meritorious cases where an employee is ill be extended, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, not to exceed 15 days additional in any one year."

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that. It is legislation.

Mr. CALDER. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I can not. It is too late in the day.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is requested to consider the advisability of a permanent policy of stationing torpedo boats and submarines at or near the mouth of the Mississippi River and the United States seaports of the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific coast as the proper naval defense thereof.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. PADGETT. It is subject to a point of order if the gentleman desires to make it. It is only expressing to the Secretary of the Navy the suggestion of the committee that he shall consider these matters.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will notice, this provision simply authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to investigate this matter in one particular locality.

Mr. PADGETT. No; it says on the Gulf coast and the Pacific coast.

Mr. GOOD. It seems to me if a provision of this kind is proper it ought to give the Secretary of the Navy broader power, so that he can investigate the subject with regard to the advisability of establishing the permanent policy of stationing torpedo boats in the Atlantic and Pacific and at other places.

Mr. PADGETT. He already has some on the Pacific, but not enough, if you will allow me to express my own judgment; but there are on the Atlantic a great many in proportion to what we have. This is simply asking him to consider whether or not it is advisable to have them on the Gulf coast and additional ones on the Pacific coast.

Mr. CANNON. Has he the power to inquire touching that matter now?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, if I may, what is the use of this amendment? I always bow to the will of the majority, because I must; and we have voted by a great majority to-day that there is no danger of war. Why go to this useless expense? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to introduce one amendment, with one word, and have one minute to explain it. I move at the end of the last line of the bill to insert the word "notwithstanding."

In the minute, if I may be recognized, I desire to say that when I was a small boy there was a queer old creature by the name of Campbell, who could not read or write, and still he was a great correspondent. We used in that time foolscap paper, and he dictated to me until every side of that foolscap of four pages was filled, and then he would dictate until I wrote across, and then finally when I would read the letter to him that contained almost everything known and unknown, seen and unseen, from the birth of Christ to the death of the devil, he said, "Sonny, 'notwithstanding' is a mighty good word to conclude a letter with." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment by the gentleman from Illinois is withdrawn.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with the various amendments, to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HULL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 24565) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back, with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, to report the same back forthwith, containing the paragraph in the hands of the Clerk, and on that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts opposed to the bill?

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following paragraph:

"That for the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed one first-class battleship, carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and the greatest practicable radius of action, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $6,000,000."

The SPEAKER. On that the gentleman moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this vote be taken by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 106, nays 140, answered "present" 14, not voting 132, as follows:
